The experience of the years confirms the wisdom of that important action, whether from a business or a spiritual point of view, and there has never been a return, or an expressed desire to return, to any less exalted ideal; although of late years the passing of the older generation and the lack of constant enforcement of the precepts of earlier acceptance, have made the practice of less general observance than heretofore.

Throughout all this period a high standard of response to missionary obligation has obtained—never higher than under the apportionment of current application—and this in spite of changing community conditions which have emphasized the problems of a downtown church and the development of a missionary center.

Answering the objection here, that the standard of giving involved in the practice of the tithe is in the nature of a restraint on free giving, and that many who do do not commit themselves give far more than such proportion—an error in perspective, the untithed dime looking as large as the tithed dollar—it can safely be said on intimate acquaintance of more than thirty years with its financial operation, current expense, special appeals, or missionary endeavor, that the larger proportion of its giving came from a minority of the membership, that minority pledged to the gift of one-tenth of its income to the Lord's work, and, further, that such were more accessible to the numerous appeals for special needs, and usually responded more generously, cheerfully and graciously, which, to the poor treasurer, meant much.

Opportunities for free-will offering occasionally furnished a plea for larger recognition, and these have demonstrated in their response, a sense of privilege and sympathy beyond a mere percentage basis.

Passing from official relationships (now sundered, which made the foregoing testimony of easy presentation) to one's personal experience, regarding which there is realized a sense of restraint, it is faithfully recorded that the giving of the original dollar out of the weekly income of ten dollars, required more determination and real sacrifice, than is now involved in tithing one's present modest salary, but this may be due in part to the formation of a habit which unquestionably recognizes the tithing obligation, and simply keeps faith.

In so ordering one's finances, the problem of the measure of my responsibility—"How much ought I to give," is comparatively easy of solution. It is simply a question of how much I have available of God's definite proportion for such a demand—but, there again, few tithers of any lengthy experience deny themselves the occasional luxury of an "over-and-above" gift to a worthy cause.

The facts are, that ready giving so multiplies appeal (How they do get to know!) that in the case of the man of moderate income, he soon finds that it won't go round, and he is frequently compelled to deny himself the enjoyment of what otherwise might be esteemed a privilege.

The adoption of the tithe (it ought not to stop there with growing ability) really makes giving a pleasant and "hilarious" phase of Christian experience, tending to a larger sympathy with the plans and purposes of Jesus Christ, a breadth of vision as wide as the whole world, and in turn brings into enlarging service for their advancement a devotion of one's time and energy—a sort of putting one's self back of the investment.

It fortifies the soul against the inherent tendency of contraction and self-centering which contact with the world and business generally so frequently induces, and, by providing ahead for specific responsibility, saves much conflict of conscience and mental perturbation.

It is not contended that it is the high road to wealth and the enjoyment of riches; that it is a guarantee, even, of unbroken prosperity. At least it has not been in the experience of the writer, and yet the testimony is unhesitatingly given that the giving of the tithe, maintained for thirty-six years, has more than justified the confidence then placed in what was accepted as God's appointed way.

The fluctuations to which the industries of the country are liable usually affects salaries promptly and react slowly; even a tithe giver can scarcely hope to escape the common lot.

My Testimony

By Emory W. Hunt

MY thought about stewardship seems to be fixed as a part of my Christian experience. I am neither my own Master nor owner.

And, for a Christian with my income, a tithe appears as a useful index of what I should devote to the Lord's enterprises.

In these days, however, I have felt it my privilege often to go beyond the tenth for some of his alluring opportunities.

To me, some of the richest privileges of the Christian life are bound up with this. Without this partnership I would not feel freedom in prayer. The angel said to Cornelius, "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God." They go together. They constitute one testimony. If we have both, it is better not to send either one alone.

Lewisburg, Pa.

In this connection, a word may be said in all fairness, that pledges made when receipts were at the peak, covering a period of years, are legitimately open to revision with a reduction of income. This situation is probably shared with a number of conscientious pledgees and has necessitated, with other unavoidable calls, the meeting of an obligation demanding, in at least one experience, more than the tithe will suffice for, although in this particular instance it is the intention to redeem the pledge in full.

It is undeniably true, however, that looking over the broad space of the years, prosperity and blessing have attended from the time when, a stranger in a strange land, in a strange church, a pledge that has never been violated was made with God.

As one holds true to such a purpose, it becomes not so much a contract with God in a legalistic way, as some who oppose its adoption seem to fear, but a detail of life in service as the observance of the Lord's Day becomes a detail of life in worship.

It is not practiced with a view to reward, temporally at least, although it has its rewards as indicated. The old direct relations between God and man, when through nature's gifts, the good hand of Jehovah blessed basket and store, are no longer directly traceable for most of us; life is much more complicated, agencies much more multiplied and these not always beneficent. It is enough to recognize God faithfully and gratefully with a just proportion of what we have; perhaps by not exacting the terms of the covenant we can still lay claim to the "grace" that is in Christ Jesus.

The principle and practice of the tithe are thus unhesitatingly endorsed after these many years of experience as the best possible basis of financial relation with the work of the kingdom on earth, and it is subscribed with equal emphasis that when contracted early in life, that is, Christian life, "of such is the support and hope of the local church and the denomination."

I suppose I but share the common experience in declaring the impossibility of any return to the old method of giving—emotion, not merit; convenience, not responsibility; current ability, not obligation; but rather subscribe myself an enthusiast for "the tithe for the needs of the kingdom."

Stewardship Month

MANY local churches have formed the practice of concentrating the attention of their whole life for one month upon the subject of Christian stewardship. Therefore the stewardship committee has prepared a program to cover the needs of such an observance during four weeks in October, or any other similar period of time.

The suggested program is as follows:

First Sunday: Stewardship and the Lordship of Jesus.

Second Sunday: Stewardship and the use of energy, time and personality.

Third Sunday: Stewardship and money.

Fourth Sunday: Stewardship and the enlistment of the entire church in its task.

The following new literature has been prepared and can be obtained from the office of the state convention:

1. "A Stewardship Assistant for the Pastor."
2. "Lordship and Stewardship," F. A. Agar, to distribute the first Sunday.
3. "Figuring the Tithe," No. 1, Benjamin Starr, to distribute the third Sunday.
4. "Figuring the Tithe," No. 2, Benjamin Starr, to distribute the fourth Sunday.
5. "The Coinage of Life," Richard M. Vaughan, to distribute the second Sunday.
6. "The Stewardship of Life," Charles A. Cook, to distribute the second Sunday.
7. "Stewardship Programs for the Young People's Society," J. Sherman Wallace.
8. "Stewardship Programs for the Women's Missionary Circle," Mrs. James M. Pratt.
9. "Application for Membership in the Baptist League of Christian Stewards."
10. Certificate of Membership in the Baptist League of Christian Stewards."

All of these pieces of literature are for free distribution.

11. "The Ring of Rama Krishnia" by Anita B. Ferris, a play, will be furnished at 25 cents a copy.

There is still a steady demand for some of the pieces of literature used last year and a supply is available for those who desire to use any of them

The Stewardship of Life

By John A. Earl

Text: Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap: For he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap destruction; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. References:—Gal. 5:19-24; Matt. 7:16; Rom. 8:5-6.

WHAT is life?—If we are to be good stewards of life, we must understand something of what life is. What does life mean to you and me? Let us break it up into its component parts:

First, personality—that distinguishes you from every other living thing; your thought life, impulses, affections, ideals, desires, innate tendencies and characteristics—everything that is originally yours.

Second, acquisitions—all those things you have gained through the use of what was originally yours—physical and material, or mental, or spiritual.

Third, energy—power applied—the force through which your personality acts.

Fourth, time—the span of your existence, the yardstick of relative growth and gain—the medium through which you project your personality—the vehicle that carries you over the course of life.

Fifth, invisible influences—God, and his providences.

Without a clear recognition of God, the fifth element (really the first and fundamental element) in life, it is impossible to build a well-rounded, enduring structure. The other four elements are filled with meaning and carried to their highest peak of efficiency and productive power only as they are directly related to and dominated by God, the Power-house of life.

Jesus set one supreme law before our eyes—love—an obligation, privilege, key to understanding, the most powerful instrument God has given to man. To be a good steward, one must love. The successful man in business succeeds because of this one factor. He may not love his employer, but if not, he must love his work if he is to be successful. Perhaps most of all he loves himself. He takes an intensely personal pride in doing his work well, for the credit it will reflect on himself. While this principle holds for business as it is now organized, it cannot be applied to Christian service. No man can fulfill the obligations of true Christian stewardship if he undertakes them in this spirit; nor in the long run will his achievements justify his motives. He must set God before self. He must study to learn God's will for him; he will seek to spread the gospel, that the body of the church of Christ may be completed; he will deny himself (that is, he will die of self) that the Spirit of God may have free course in his life. Objective, not subjective love, will be the motive force—love for Jesus Christ, and an increasing forgetfulness of self.

Couple this law of love with the thought brought out in our study of the biblical basis of stewardship—that all we are, and have, and hope to be, is of God, and through God—that we are not our own, and that God has first claim, not only on us, but on all he has given into our possession—couple these two thoughts, and you begin to enter into the true meaning of stewardship—the stewardship of life. And having established the relationship of God to our lives, we can play the light of this relationship about the other factors—personality, acquisitions, energy and time.

Personality—all that is originally yours—personality is active, constantly choosing, investing—man who is said to have "no personality" has a stagnant personality, his talents hid in a napkin, instead of being actively working—every one of us possesses personality, original gifts from God to be invested—may gamble them away or invest them in something that looks good but has no permanence; or we may invest them wisely and add to our life. What is personality? (1) Emotions (fundamental); love, joy, courage, humility, loyalty, generosity, enthusiasm, ambition, and their derivatives and opposites—cultivation of positive qualities adds to personality; cultivation or tolerance of negative qualities detracts and destroys. (2) Thoughts: mentality, the virgin soil, with all that is planted in it—power of discernment and discrimination—the storehouse of personality, recording and digesting, retaining and rejecting, suggesting, comparing, initiating—thoughts actively controlled by emotions, and father to acts. (3) Will: the power of decision—will waits on and acts on conviction—a man may act against one conviction, in obedience to a more compelling (but not necessarily a higher) conviction, whether false or true. Will is judicial, it weighs and decides. We are stewards of our emotions, thoughts, will: they are to be used for and controlled by God. In his hands they become powerful instruments for good and blessing; in ours, they run amuck.

Acquisitions—all that we gain through the use of what is originally ours. Two classes of acquisitions—(1) temporal, the things we must leave behind, and (2) eternal, or permanent—those things that have been added to our personality by wise investment and have become a part of character—the "treasures in heaven"—or (contrast) the things that have been added through bad investment, which will rise to condemn us. We are stewards of acquisitions, whether temporal or permanent—they are added responsibilities—of him to whom much is given, much will be required—you may be content with little, and enjoy little responsibility, or you may press on, increasing your responsibility at every step, and increasing with it that hope of reward which is the legitimate, though it should not be the dominating hope of every good steward. Responsibility the price of growth and development, and acquirement—the millionaire has far greater responsibilities than the day laborer; the mental giant than the man of little education; the employer or leader than the employe or follower, because all of these have greater power, for good or for evil. They have greater influence; their methods are accepted and imitated, because they have been crowned with visible success. We are increasingly responsible, in the measure in which we have added to our original capital—law of growth.

Energy—applied power—the dynamic force that gives expression to personality—personality develops along the channels in which energy is applied—change the direction and force of the energy, and you change the personality—illustrate by examples of energy applied to positive (vs. negative) emotions, thoughts, decisions of the will—energy the "spending money" of personality; how are we spending it? We get what we spend it for.

Time—the medium of activity, the yardstick of relative growth and gain. If we recognize our stewardship of personality, acquisitions, and energy, we cannot fail to recognize our stewardship of time—its importance and value. Investment of time should be in direct proportion to the value of the activity. Too often we deliberately fritter away time on trifles, while the big task goes half done in consequence.

Our Stewardship Program

By F. A. Agar

AT the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Atlantic City last May, the General Board of Promotion presented a stewardship program which was adopted by the convention. This stewardship program had been carefully worked out by the stewardship committee under the leadership of Dr. F. L. Anderson. While the program has some things in it that are of immediate concern and execution, it also undertakes to lay down some principles and practices that will take years to produce the desired results from all the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention.

It is proposed here and now to briefly study the main features of our stewardship program.

First, it is proposed to the local churches that they realize their group stewardship and make a study of the following things:

1. Receiving and dismissing members
2. Non-resident membership
3. Church discipline
4. Enlistment of membership for worship, service, witnessing, giving
4. Untrained lay officers
6. Deaconesses in local church

A wide clinical experience in hundreds of local churches has shown the value of such a study. The local church is a steward of all its members.

The following methods have been found helpful to meet the conditions revealed by the study just referred to:

1. An enlistment plan
   Every one coming into the church to be confronted with an enlistment for definite attendance, serving life and giving
2. The unit plan
   Grouping the membership in units of thirty-three under the leadership of a deacon and deaconess
3. Lay officers' councils
   Councils and clinics for all church officers so that they may know their duties and how to fulfill them
4. Honest church letters
   A church letter should state such facts as will enable the church receiving the member to help the individual to a good start in the new relationship
5. Non-resident member follow-up
6. An annual every-member plan for fellowship and money-giving

Such a program cannot be worked out in a moment in any local church. But a patient continuance in a vital group stewardship will sooner or later bring the desired results.

If the local church is to realize its stewardship, it will be because the individuals who comprise it will have a real sense of their own stewardship under the lordship of Jesus Christ and the ownership of God the Father. Another part of the program as adopted, refers therefore, to stewardship education. This is designed to create the right atmosphere in each spirit and life by various educational processes. The educational process is a long, steady scientific spiritual task, designed to follow the acceptance of Christ as Lord. It cannot be done effectively in any local church without the aid of the pastor. This fall, therefore, it is planned to conduct a pastors' essay contest with Christian stewardship as the topic. Each state convention will conduct an essay contest and suitable awards will be made to the three best essay writers. Each state will then enter its three best essays in a national contest and the writers of the three best essays will receive suitable awards. Other educational features in the stewardship program are reading contests, essay contests in other groups such as the young people's societies and the organization of study classes in connection with the work outlined by various other denominational agencies such as the department of missionary education.

It is planned to hold clinics and conferences for training in various centers. The mass of people is not to be sought after here, but the hand-picked leaders in their respective fields. Lectures upon stewardship will be given by some of the great speakers and leaders of our denomination, the attendance being carefully worked up by competent set-up workers.

Finally, by means of stewardship month and many other direct approaches, Christian Stewardship will be presented to the rank and file of our church members whenever and wherever possible. The aim will be to provide an ample supply of good literature for use in every local church. Particular attention will be paid to the teaching of tithe giving and the enlistment of individuals who will agree to give for gospel purposes at least a tenth of all their income. Tithing as a loving recognition and acknowledgment of the Lordship of Christ is a growing practice among our people. The practice by every church member would put the Lord's work upon a victorious basis both in the local church and in world areas. It pays spiritual dividends.

Our task is not an easy one, nor is it a short one. But the way is open to proceed, the minds of our leaders are turned towards the path of stewardship and the will of God is plainly in evidence as we start afresh to realize both our individual and group responsibility as stewards of the manifold mercies of God in Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour.

Financial Responsibilities Then and Now

By H. E. Fosdick

IN one special realm the perils of a belated mind can be clearly illustrated. Consider the financial responsibilities which in an early American settlement a Christian might be expected to assume! To support his family, to pay taxes, to contribute to the local church, to help his neighbors in their need—whoever did these well was a good Christian and a generous man. If famine raged in India, he did not hear of it. If Turks massacred Armenians, no rumor of it reached his ears. Or if at last the news did come, of what benefit was that? No railroads, no steamship lines, no cables, no world-wide credit system that makes money fly faster than the wind, were at his service. No possibility of world-wide helpfulness was open to him; no responsibility for extensive generosity rested on him.

How many, who call themselves Christians, live in this new day as though the old days were still here! These Christians, too, support their families, pay taxes, contribute to the local church, and on occasion give to the neediest cases in their town. That is the limit of their financial output. In this modern world, they are anachronisms. They are as out-of-date as horse-cars on New York City's streets. At least a century has passed over their heads without their knowing it. For one of the miracles of our age is the power it puts into the hands of a man with a few dollars to join himself with other men who have a few dollars, and within a few hours to put the pooled resources of all at work anywhere on earth from the center of China to the heart of the Congo. One marvel of this new era is the romance of stewardship.

When an appeal for money is made in church or town or nation, it is commonly regarded as a necessity to be endured or a nuisance to be avoided. Nor is it any wonder that such distaste is associated with financial campaigns, when one considers the frequent tone of their appeal. You ought to give; you ought to be generous; it is your duty—how commonly are we assailed by such injunctions! Yet modern opportunities for money's use are more marvelous and enticing than "Arabian Nights" and more romantic than the folklore of any people. A Christian missionary, Armenian by birth, American by education, was slain by the Kurds on his sickbed in the presence of his wife. His family escaped. Once, no matter how dearly his American friends had loved him, no matter how ardently they had wished for his sake to help his children, they could have done nothing. But in this marvelous era, they at once reduce a little of themselves to monetary form, the most portable shape into which human personality can precipitate itself, and in that form they go straightway overseas to Persia and bring back their friend's wife and children to a safe home and a liberal education. One who can see in such an opportunity nothing but duty, is blind. Who would not love to play with this new white magic by which a man can put himself at work around the world?

Once in an isolated settlement of the old world of slow comunications, a man could hear of cruel need in the antipodes and could go home with nothing but sympathy to offer. Let no man in this modern world express sympathy with any need anywhere on earth unless he means it! The acid test can straightway be applied. For we can do something, no matter where the need may be. The agencies of human helpfulness now reach in an encompassing network over all the earth. The avenues are open down which our pennies, our dollars, or our millions can walk together in an accumulating multitude to the succor of all mankind. Each of us can take some of his own nerve and sinew reduced in wages to the form of money, and through money, which is a naturalized citizen of all lands and which speaks all languages, can be at work wherever the sun shines. It is a privilege which no one knew before our modern age. It is one of the miracles of science, mastered by the spirit of service, that a man busy at his daily tasks at home can yet be preaching the gospel in Alaska, healing the sick in Korea, teaching in the schools of Persia, feeding the hungry in India, and building a new civilization at the headwaters of the Nile. Consider, then, the shame of one who in such an era is still a spiritual inhabitant of an age gone by! Only a man who with generous, systematic stewardship is taking advantage of the new opportunities is fully abreast of his times.

What is true of opportunity for financial service is true of many new agencies for usefulness which the modern world has given us. Once our fathers living under absolutism could not control at all the processes of government; now a democratic state offers new chances of usefulness through citizenship and new obligations to employ them well. Once our fathers, never having dreamed of such an invention as movable type, had neither chance nor responsibility to use the printed page; now the printing press offers a supremely powerful agency of education and evangelization. Once nations, lacking all vital contacts with one another, could become international neither in their spirit nor in their political arrangements; now nations are woven by countless vital relationships into each other's lives and these accumulating contacts offer the supreme opportunity of all history to bring in the day of international cooperation. On every side new powers and new possibilities are put into our hands. The best hopes of mankind cannot be realized save as these new powers are converted, baptized, Christianized, and harnessed for ministry to human weal. A belated mind, therefore, is fatal to large usefulness:

"New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward,
who would keep abreast of Truth;
Lo, before us gleam her camp-fires! we ourselves must Pilgrims be,
Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea,
Nor attempt the Future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key."

A Novel Example of Stewardship

By Alice J. Bostick

"WHY, Mrs. Jones," said I, "I have seen Mrs. Smith sitting beside you in church the last few Sundays. She hasn't been to church—well, in the memory of many of the living. How does that happen?"

Then I learned how it came about.

Mrs. Jones was a person of means and of social prominence, but one who put "first things first." She had decided she must be released from some of her social duties that were growing increasingly burdensome. One step in this direction was to resign from a "supper club," to which a congenial group of husbands and wives belonged and which met every two weeks for an elaborate supper at one of the homes. Mrs. Smith was president of this club. She was a person of means and social position, a Baptist, but one who had allowed her social duties to eclipse entirely her habit of church attendance. Upon learning of Mrs. Jones' resignation, Mrs. Smith called her by 'phone.

"O, my dear, what can you be thinking of in resigning from our club? Why you and your husband have been members since it was organized years ago. We couldn't think of getting along without you. It would be like a funeral without you!"

After lengthy repetitions on both sides, Mrs. Jones finally said, "Well, now, if I am as important to that club as you are trying to tell me I want to remind you that you are a member of the church and that you are indispensable to it, and besides it is indispensable to you. I'll make a bargain with you: I'll stay in the club if you'll renew your attendance obligations to the church and I'll stay in the club as long as you are faithful to the church."

So a happy bargain was struck. The gift in this case was one of social popularity, cashed in at the right time and with courage, for the good of the kingdom.

Christian Stewardship

By Jay A. Lapham

I HAVE always liked to see business principles in the life of the church. We turn away from the theory and from the practice of the church as an organic part of the state. We do this because Jesus said: "My kingdom is not of this world." Naturally we turn to him for the principles and the plans which he wants to have rule in his kingdom.

At once we are confronted with the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you." But Jesus Christ goes much further than that in laying down the principles of conduct in his kingdom. We are called upon to do much better for our fellowman, when necessary, than to sound the ordinary depths of the Golden Rule; we must do good to them that hate us.

Another fundamental principle stressed by our Lord is: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and its righteousness." In your business affairs see to it that the business of things that pertain to God—that is, to your church and various lines of benevolence at home and abroad—have the first place. Do this because your Father careth for you; he knows that ye must have food and clothing. Dare to trust your Father in heaven, for he wants your utmost confidence far more than he wants your money; but he knows that if you faithfully and intelligently handle the money that he allows you as his steward, such action will draw you close to him in confidence and in fellowship.

Now if we accept the heart of the Golden Rule in conduct toward others, and the practice of remembering God first (through church and denominational life and other calls that we find legitimately appeal to us), we have a good foundation for active life in the new kingdom. As sons and daughters of God, not the state, but the Book, the Bible, guides us in this realm of activity.

In building on this foundation we must not forget that our Lord continued to teach through the Holy Spirit after his ascension; therefore much concrete direction and instruction is found in the Acts of the Apostles and in the letters that were written to the churches. In the exuberance of their first joy, the early Christians had all things in common. Those who had much, shared with those who had little; neither did any man call aught his own. Those were blessed days of fellowship, and if it had not been for the fact that wolves in overwhelming numbers were all around the little flock, such glad days might have continued, provided that the business principles given by our Lord and his disciples had been accepted and obeyed by all the professed Christians. The church of Jesus Christ has no need to be a beggar in this old world, if it will accept and obey the plans and methods given by its Lord.

Any ten homes, limited in income though they may be, can care for another home with an average support such as they enjoy, for if each home pays a tenth for the support of the church and beneficences generally, the added home will live as well as they live. In turn, the tenth will come into the Lord's treasury from this added home to help in the current expenses of the church. None of our Lord's plans and teachings lead to sloth or indigence; nor can it truthfully be said that his business plans are impracticable. Too many tests have been made for too long a period to warrant such a statement. "Those that honor me I will honor" has been verified times without number, and God makes the statement good in money matters as well as in other promises.

Good stewardship does not permit us to consider money alone. Our time is God's gift to each of us and every hour comes from him. A niggardly meting out of minutes for the house of worship on the Lord's day and for its mid-week appointments, ill becomes a Christian man. When we consider his wonderful gifts in time, to us, ought we not to render back to him glad hours for praise and prayer? It is no little matter to use rightly all of the hours of a golden day.

Nor can we say less of our talents, in business, in tact, in organizing ability, in song, in fellowship among the poor, in visiting the sick, and much more. Browning said: "It is hard to be a Christian," and to be a genuine follower of Jesus Christ, it certainly does call for the best there is in one. But to all such there is a great reward, now in the midst of the game, and in the life unending with the great Captain of our salvation.

In my own experience, I have found much satisfaction in tithing my income. In a general way, the plan settles the foundation of wholesome business giving or paying for the great work of the kingdom of God. In the urgent days of the New World Movement it has been a privilege to pay more than the tenth. I may add that in life's pathway, in the turns of the road, I have always had openings for service to meet all my needs and more.

In presenting the subject of tithing, I have nearly always found some ready to respond, and the blessing that has come from their response, to the church and to the denomination, has been outstanding. Poor people and those of moderate income usually respond more readily than do those who have large salaries or wealth.

The International Society for Crippled Children held its semi-annual meeting at Elyria, Ohio, Sept. 25-26. Its program carried the following statement: "The International Society for Crippled Children aspires to assume a responsibility. It wishes to be instrumental in effecting good. Intelligent in the application of help to those who are themselves helpless. It wishes to see repaired the tragedies of nature and accidents which are registered in the bodies of little children. It wishes to see that the bent are straightened. The broken repaired, the weak strengthened and all educated. It wishes to see measures taken through science and education looking to the prevention of the causes which have to do with the making of this condition in children."

A questionnaire was sent out to Japanese college girls recently to which 218 made full response. Among the questions asked was, "Do you believe in God?" Twenty-five and six-tenths per cent left a blank; 39.5 per cent said they believed; 7 per cent said they half believed; 15 per cent doubted; 8.6 per cent believed in a great power but without personality; and 4.3 per cent believed that God exists in man himself.

Our Shattered Work in Japan

A Statement by Foreign Secretary James H. Franklin

IN the spring of 1922, one of our most active and highly trusted missionaries remarked that during the preceding five years Baptist work in Japan had made greater progress in certain respects than in the other seventeen years of his service in that country. This opinion was supported by many others. In the meetings of the Japanese Baptist leaders, as well as in the minds of the missionaries, a greater confidence and a new esprit de corps seemed to be discernable. The recent progress and confidence in our work in Japan are attributable largely to two developments: first, the notable increase in able Japanese Baptist leadership; second, the provision of better equipment, especially in the form of school buildings and churches, principally in Tokyo and Yokohama.

Now come cablegrams indicating that possibly three-quarters of all the property investments made in Japan by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in the last ten years have been lost. The reports regarding the loss of life among the Japanese Christian leaders are as yet too meager to be reliable. We interpret one of the cablegrams as meaning that three Japanese members of the faculty of the Mabie Memorial School were killed in the earthquake. Thus, for the present, the greater part of the organized work in Tokyo and Yokohama is shattered. Since these two great cities in several respects were nerve centers for all Japan, the disaster is a staggering blow to the work in the country as a whole.

In April, 1913, I heard, in China, of the loss by fire of the old Baptist Tabernacle in Tokyo. Dr. William Axling, grief-stricken, met me at Shanghai. The building which had been burned had been erected after long, patient struggle. When he had told a small group of the toil of the years, his feelings overcame him and sadly he declared that nothing was left but ashes. But not everything had been lost. The real values could not be destroyed by fire. Where the old tabernacle had stood, a far better structure was erected in which one the most aggressive Baptist churches in the far East found its home. Perhaps there was no stronger institutional or evangelistic work conducted in any building in any church in Japan. Now this splendid new building erected only ten years ago has also been completely destroyed.

The Mabie Memorial School at Yokohama, which had been developed so successfully, is likewise in ruins. It was our most notable achievement in Japan in recent years. Not only were the stately concrete buildings a matter of pride to us, but the strong Japanese and American faculty, headed by Principal Sakata, had so impressed the educational circles that government recognition was voluntarily accorded the school two years earlier than is customary. In a letter from Missionary R. H. Fisher, written on July 6, are these words: "Now at Mabie Memorial we have those very men right in the making, and some of them are mighty fine stuff. Our coming leaders are just about to begin to be graduated from Mabie Memorial (next April)."

The church building in Yokohama, which was being erected as a memorial to several well-known Baptist missionaries who had labored in that city, and was probably nearing completion, has been destroyed. Other church edifices in Tokyo are in ruins. Recently Missionary William Wynd, on whose field were several of these church buildings, wrote to the Foreign Mission Society, reporting enthusiastically the progress made in 1922 by the churches whose houses of worship have been burned. One sentence from Mr. Wynd expresses his feeling: "In Tokyo this has been a banner year for churches. All along the line there has been an advance. Never before has it seemed so easy to reach the people, never before have we seen such crowds in the churches, and never in one single year has there been such an ingathering in the kingdom."

The building in connection with the work in Waseda University, known as Scott Hall, is reported as damaged—how seriously we do not know. The cablegrams do not mention the Hovey Memorial Dormitory, which gives us reason to believe that it was not seriously damaged. The same is probably true of the buildings of the Baptist Theological Seminary.

The two residences at 75 Bluff, Yokohama, the first property purchased in Japan by the society, where many of our best-known missionaries resided from time to time, are destroyed. These residences were occupied by Mr. R. H. Fisher, Mr. J. F. Gressitt and Mr. Henry Topping and their families. The same seems to be true of the two residences at Tsukiji, Tokyo, occupied by Rev. William Wynd and Dr. D. C. Holtom and their families. We are not sure as to the fifth residence which was destroyed. The missionaries whose homes were destroyed have lost all of their personal possessions, including furniture and libraries; indeed, everything except what they happened to have with them on their vacations. While their property losses are severe, much has been destroyed which can never be replaced. Of course the boards and the friends will do their utmost to enable them to replace what has been lost. Nor must we overlook the needs of the Japanese Christian workers, who in many instances have suffered as severely as the missionaries. While our churches have cooperated heartily with the American Red Cross in its ministry of mercy for the Japanese people as a whole, we shall nevertheless need to supplement our contributions to the American Red Cross with special offerings for the relief of numerous Japanese Christian workers as well as missionaries.

Seldom, if ever, has America seen such a demonstration of sympathy as that which has been manifested by our people for stricken Japan. Representatives of mission boards have been glad to urge the churches to participate heartily in this practical expression of sympathy. The moment has now come when we must think of the organized Christian work in Japan and the need for its rehabilitation. Northern Baptists may well rejoice in the superb quality of their missionaries in Japan who, under divine guidance, will plan wisely for the future. May the response of our churches in America be so generous at this hour, and may our prayerful support be so strong that a great victory shall be won for the kingdom in spite of the suffering through which Japan has been called to pass. Perhaps in the providence of God and with the special support of the home constituency the Japanese Christians and the mission boards will rebuild their work in Japan in ways which will greatly increase their usefulness and advance the cause of Christ throughout the Orient.

A representative of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society will write specifically regarding the losses of that organization. As nearly as the two boards can determine from information now available, not less than $500,000 will be required for the proper replacement and reconstruction of property destroyed or damaged by the earthquake.

> "I AM almost in despair of any great conquering revival of religion until the church shall give up its sinful covetousness"—Bishop Berry has abundant cause for these words of discouragement. Nearly two thousand years have passed since men began to try to follow the Christ. It is a checkered story of high levels reached and of slipping back again; of splendid challenges to great endeavor overwhelmed at last by the apathy of the crowd; of forward movements of whole peoples only to be retarded more and more and finally all but stopped by the slowly passing years that lug along their heavy burden of the past.
> We still make our chief strivings and strugglings for the treasure that perishes. Covetousness is rooted deeply in our hearts. This was the sin of Laban the deceiver; of Balaam the time server; of Achan the thief; of Saul the backslider; of Ahab the idolator; of Gehazi the grafter; of Judas the betrayer; of Ananias and Sapphira the liars; of Felix the prostituter of justice; and of Simon the sorcerer.
> The church, through the devoted lives of her sons and daughters, has an opportunity now to render a commanding service to the world. If it fails it will lose its power. "Unused opportunities always mark the line of defeat."
> Until the church shall give up its sinful covetousness it cannot render a comanding service to the world. Only when its sons and daughters have become faithful stewards of God's goodness can the blessings which Christ came to give the world be passed on to men. The Lord's work waits for a new consecration of God's people.

Young People's Work

What My Denomination Is Planning for the Future

By H. R. Bowler

Luke 4:16-21; Jer. 23:29

It is important that Baptist young people should be familiar with the work of their denomination and with the plans for its future. "The child is father of the man," and the Baptist young people of today will be the denomination of tomorrow. Upon them the denomination is calling at this moment for qualified volunteers to become the Baptist preachers, teachers and missionaries of the future. Those who cannot respond to this call must furnish the spiritual and financial support for those who do, if the denomination is to continue to be a vital factor in the religious life of the next generation.

The Northern Baptist Convention has recently been giving serious attention to plans for the immediate future. The latest convention, at Atlantic City, considered in detail the report of a committee which had given a year's careful study to the problem. Some important decisions were reached. Among the significant features of the plans adopted are the following:

1. A Year for Completion of the Present Task

The present year is the fifth year of the New World Movement period, during which the denomination has established for itself unprecedented standards of giving and has made remarkable achievements in the extension of its missionary work. The objective for this year is to pay all current operating expenses, so as to continue our work on the same basis as last year, and at the same time to wipe out all existing denominational obligations, so that we may start the new period with a clean slate. This involves not only payment of the debts of the missionary societies and other organizations, but also the repayment to some of them of the so-called "underdrawings." The attainment of this objective will require the contribution by Northern Baptists before April 30, 1924, of approximately $12,000,000. In this task each church and each member is asked to have a share.

2. A Future Program of Continued Co-operation

While Baptists take justifiable pride in their honorable traditions of local independence, personal liberty, and freedom from ecclesiastical overlordship, they are learning also, in these days of a complex and highly organized society, the meaning of interdependence and co-operation. The policy of co-operation among our national, state and city missionary organizations and educational institutions, as practiced during the last four years, and to a less degree theretofore, has so commended itself to the denomination that the convention was unanimous in approving its continuance. There are to be some changes in organization, a Board of Missionary Cooperation instead of a General Board of Promotion, and a larger measure of freedom for the participating organizations in the securing of funds for their own work. While programs and undertakings covering a period of years may be projected, budgets will be approved and pledges taken for one year at a time. Educational institutions may be included in the unified budget if approved by the state conventions in whose territory they are located. In all these things the principle of cooperation has been safeguarded and confirmed.

3. A New Emphasis upon the Local Church

In view of its basic position in the denominational life, larger attention is to be given to the place and function of the local church. The first undertaking of the new program is to be a concerted and sustained effort to promote the prosperity and raise the efficiency of the local church. In connection with this effort, each church is asked to survey its own needs, plan wisely for the development of its work during the present and coming years, and study its relation to the activities of the denomination as a whole. By relating themselves intelligently to this work, young people may find opportunity to exercise tremendous influence for good both in their own communities and to the ends of the earth.

Materials for Study

"Report of Committee on Future Denominational Program." This has been published by the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention and distributed to pastors. If your pastor hasn't a copy, write to the office of your state convention. Concerning the program for the present year, see "Financial Needs 1923-24," "In the Spirit of Co-operation," and "Suggested Program of Activities for 1923-24," all obtainable from your state convention or from any literature bureau of the General Board of Promotion.

Convention Impressions

The magnetic power of "the attractive Christ" has drawn us into Christian service.—Doris Hanson.

A panacea for pessimism, and illustration of the power of "the attractive Christ."—W. Grimes.

This convention has meant a fuller understanding of "the attractive Christ."

The convention means so much to me. It was a pleasing surprise to see so many of the young people so interested in "the attractive Christ." I have learned so many things that are inspiring to my soul. I shall try and carry some impression back to my church and B. Y. P. U. that I hope will help to bring more of the young people to Christ.—Helena Hopes.

I surely have appreciated and enjoyed it all the way through.—Beatrice Mason.

It has meant much to me to attend this great convention. This has been the first great convention I have attended but I'm sure that, God willing, it won't be the last.—Hugh I. Blair.

This great and inspirational convention has made me more determined to bring souls to Christ.—Lucy C. Thorpe.

I have never attended a convention like this before, but it has inspired me to boost the B. Y. P. U. in the little town of West Medford, Mass.—Helen L. Greene.

The convention has given me a new vision of "the attractive Christ."—Athol H. Spronle.

This convention has taught me the great work there is for me among young people that I come in contact with.—Mrs. Agnes C. Byrd.

Just this big convention shows the world surely must grow better with such a powerful factor for spiritual life, as represented by the delegates from all over the country. The Christian church is surely alive. Bald heads and gray hairs need not rob us of the youthful spirit in Christian service.—Bernice E. Comey.

To me it has meant greater fellowship with God's people, also a greater desire to serve him.—A B. Y. P. U.'er.

To know that whatever one's occupation one can give one's self to Christ, to see and hear young people from all over the United States and Canada change from yells to reverent song and worship as well as mingling in Christian fellowship, inspired me more than I can describe.—Florence Wixson.

This convention has been my first but not my last.—Ralph Snall.

It has been a pleasure to me to find "the attractive Christ" at this convention and hope to take my inspiration back to those in my home town who were unable to come.—Mariette Ennenga.

The Home of the Brave

Chapter IV. The Madonna of the Kitten

IT was while mailing a letter to Rupert Antisdale that Richard Brave began the making of another precarious new friendship. For the post-box stood at the corner of an alley, a depressingly narrow forlorn place of smells and débris and ashcans. A stone's throw from the corner stood a small atom of humanity holding something in her arms to which she was crooning in a perfect ecstasy of delight. He sauntered toward the child curiously, and was amazed and disgusted to see her fondling the most mangy of kittens, kissing it in a veritable passion of love.

"See here!" he said, touching her on the shoulder, "you don't want to hug and kiss that mass of fleas and dirt and disease! You'll get sick!"

She looked up at him dazed: "At last I'm the parents of a living thing!" she said, carried away by the glory of her possession; then, like a flash, his likely authority dawned on her: "I ain't done nothing wrong. This here cat is mine! See. I found her. You just leave me be. I found her on the ash-wagon. She's most dead anyhow, but I ain't going to leave her die on me. This here cat wants love." Fiercely, ardently, passionately. The child was a flame of protective love. She buried her face in the little bundle of limp fur.

Richard Brave felt a wave of nausea. "See here, my dear," he said gently, "you mustn't do that! You really mustn't. For one thing, the poor cat needs air if she's to live, and you—you really mustn't, you know! Get your doll or something."

She looked up with a withering sweeping glance, and shook back her tangled hair as she sneered: "Sure, my doll! Youse gone nutty, mister. I ain't got nothing to make kissings over but this here cat and you just leave me be. See?" She poked out her tongue at him and wrinkled up her small nose in a perfect fury. And then, looking down, she cried brokenly: "Aw say, cat, you ain't crushed for keeps. Come on up!"

But the cat could not. Richard Brave laid a reluctant hand on it and discovered the truth: "I am so sorry," he said sympathetically, "but, you see, the poor little thing is dead already."

She clasped it closer: "Cat! Cat! Come on up!" and new kisses fell softly on it. Then she realized the truth and snuffled, whimpering: "It don't seem fair. I could have loved her well."

Brave patted her shoulder: "I know you could have, if you'd been earlier, but it's too late now, so put her down, won't you, please? And I'll make a bargain with you—I'll get you a doll if you put it down at once; a doll with clothes that button and unbutton."

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

The child squinted up at him through her tangled hair: "You old guy!" she sneered.

Brave held out his hand: "Shake on it," he said, "the word of a gentleman, I assure you. Within an hour I'll meet you here with a doll."

She looked at his hand with doubtful scorn. "You just quit kidding me," she mumbled, "I'm sick over this old cat. She could be such a nice little cat. I could have loved you well, cat!"

"I'll be back in an hour!" Richard Brave said to her apparently deaf ears, and hurried toward the car-line.

"I suppose you don't happen to know of any store where I can buy a doll, do you?" he said to the conductor.

This gentleman fixed his eyes on the ceiling and, from the reminiscences of his daily route, eventually produced a vision of a store with dolls. "Yep!" he nodded, "I know the very place."

But it was not the very place, after all. A listless clerk handed over the counter a big monstrosity in a sailor suit, saying, between orgies of gum-chewing: "Coney Island doll, special at $1.98."

Richard Brave regarded it with horror. "This won't do at all," he said, "haven't you a baby doll, something that a little girl can hold in her arms and feel that she's its mother? Something she can dress and undress, and talk to, and all that?"

The girl stopped her gum-chewing long enough to fling him a pitying glance: "Good-night! You'd better hike to the orphan asylum for one of them. Unless this here teddy bear will do. Kids is crazy over them. Only thirty-nine cents, too."

He looked at the brown dusty fuzziness with a sinking heart. It reminded him somehow of the kitten. "Thank you," he said courteously, "I shall have to try somewhere else."

As he walked down to the better shopping district he moralized on the problems of dolls. How could a little girl with a Coney Island doll feel affectionate outbursts of protection for it? Was there any relation between a nation brought up on teddy bears and—race suicide?

It was on the fifth floor of Hobson & Jenkins Brothers' Department Store that he found dolls enough to satisfy any purse. He confided in the clerk, who was instantly sympathetic, but thwarted the sale he was about to consumate by purchasing a truly beautiful large doll.

"I wouldn't lay myself out so much if I was you, mister," she rebuked him gently, removing the ten-dollar baby from his hands. "Now, of course, it ain't any of my business, so to speak, to advise a customer against his better judgment, and it't all to my good to sell you the most expensive thing I got; but if that kid never had no doll, why, take it from me, there ain't no call to give her one fit for a little millionaire. Money don't grow on bushes!" She gave him a knowing nod. "But here's a dandy little doll with real hair and a nice body, she opens and shuts her eyes, and when you lay her down she cries. Listen to her! Real, ain't it? And her clothes come on and off. All for $3.49. I tell you how it is; a kid that has a hungry heart wants something she needen't be scairt of; now this here ten-dollar doll is too grand for everyday hugs. She wouldn't feel like a honest-to-goodness mother to it. Just like you and me wouldn't feel to home with a butler! See?"

"I see!" said Richard Brave, gravely. "And I certainly thank you for telling me. You're quite right, too, the $3.49 doll will do splendidly, but shouldn't it be in a doll carriage?"

Another Tither's Testimony

A LAYMAN

WHEN Mrs. Jones was past fifty and had lost her husband and was feeling lonesome one Sunday evening, she heard the young people singing in their meeting and concluded that she would drop quietly into the rear of the room as a listener.

The subject of the meeting was tithing. After listening to the scripture and discussion and testimonies for some time she felt impelled to announce to the young people that she never had been a tither, but from this time on she would become one.

Some years have passed since then, and Mrs. Jones has received so much joy from her tithing that the tithe has grown to half of her income, and although she has comparatively little property and her income has been quite limited during the years since she became a tither she has had the joy of giving enough out of that limited income to found a hospital on the foreign mission field, and her experience shows how it transforms the life and Christian experience and usefulness to become a tither, even in middle age.

The woman looked over her shoulder to see where the floorwalker might be: "Can you beat it?" she laughed. "I ought to sell you one, of course, but if you ask me, I'd wait a spell. Spring the carriage on her a little later, see? For if she ain't got a doll, one surprise is enough for today, see? Of course if you're flush and have it to shell out now, that's different. But a little goes a lot further if you spin it along, see?"

"I see!" her customer agreed, and with his usual thoughfulness refrained from charging his purchase lest the mere mention of his name might convey an inkling of his bank account! "I'll phone you some day about sending out a doll carriage, how would that be? You've been very considerate, and your philosophy interests me greatly. 'Spin it along' is a fine motto, you know. Here's the exact change. Thank you. Good afternoon."

As he walked away another clerk sauntered nearer: "Who's your gentleman friend, Nell? Some class to that signet ring, believe me! It went from knuckle to knuckle."

"I don't know his name," said the clerk, "but I bet you he's a book agent, one of those nice no-account fellows that never really get along at all on account of being too soft. Here if he ain't buying a doll for a kid in the slums he never seen before. Would have paid ten dollars for it, too. Pity! But he's a real gentleman in spite of it."

Meanwhile "the real gentleman" had taken a taxicab home, anxiously consulting his watch, for he was overdue. His hour was up! Would the little Kitten-Girl be waiting? She was! With a forlorn hope, however. She sat on an old box beside the dead kitten, her arms propped on her knees, her head propped on her fists, as she watched the limp form on which she had squandered so much devotion.

He felt a great and sudden pity for her. There was a depth of anguish in her look as she pondered over her trouble that brought a real beauty into her poor little face.

"She's lovely!" Brave said to himself. "Down underneath, she's lovely." Aloud, he called: "I've got it!"

She looked up, her eyes heavy with unbelief. But as he unwrapped the parcel her expression changed.

"Oh!" she breathed, "O-o-oh!"

He laid the doll in her arms. She smoothed the little dress gently. Then she clutched it in her arms and, turning, ran—ran like the wind. At the corner she yelled at him: "You can keep the kitten, mister." She disappeared.

His first shock was about her ingratitude; his second that she was "on" with the new love so instantaneously, and "off" with the old. The poor kitten—forgotten. But his third thought was truest: "She was embarrassed by the delicious surprise of it! She was afraid I might snatch it away! Nothing shows her approval so markedly as that hasty retreat to gloat in solitude."

He walked slowly home. "She could have come to play in our back yard. It's the only yard in the neighborhood. I wonder what Pat would do if I put a sign on the alley gate: 'This is a place where little girls can come to play with their dolls. There's an apple tree inside. It has green apples. You mustn't eat them. But come on in!' "

He smiled whimsically. Every little daughter of Eve would have come—once, anyhow. "It's a crime to waste this yard, and—my bathtub!" he smiled. "I think I must seriously speak to Patricia about it. We don't use the place ourselves. . . "

But indoors he forgot the resolve for a bewildering young lady plunged through the doorway and kissed him. "I'm Very!" she announced.

"Very—what?" he gasped, holding her off at arms' length. She was a picture.

"Very nice!" she blushed. "Come on in and talk to me. I've been waiting hours. Pat doesn't seem to be home. Are you sleep-walking, or what, Ricky, you seem so dazed?"

"I am, my dear Veronica," he answered. "Come on in and I'll tell you why. You've grown, unbelievably. You're the most beautiful young lady I ever saw."

"How true!" the vision said, and sat down. He sat down opposite.

Mrs. Ingall's Watch-Dog

CATS and dogs are so often mentioned in the same breath that it seems quite natural to have stories about each of them in this week's Chimney Corner, for the girls will like the cat tale and the boys will like the dog tale; for all boys like dogs—at least, the Boy Who Lives on My Street does. You see, he has one. He calls it "Dusty." But although Dusty lives in a Baptist minister's family I can't help but wonder if he will ever be quite as clever a Baptist preacher as Mrs. Ingalls' watch dog, for her dog really did preach a sermon every day. Dusty, can you?

Mrs. Ingalls lived in Burma, but one day when she was visiting in America she saw a dog in a store window. He was a fine fellow to look at and she wanted him, so she said to the man who was with her: "I wish I could take that dog back to Burma with me."

"But why?" asked the man, and when Mrs. Ingalls told him he nodded, and would you believe it? he could not get the dog out of his mind; so several months later you are to picture this same gentleman walking down the same street to buy this same dog to be sent to this same Mrs. Ingalls. No doubt she was tremendously surprised and delighted when she unpacked him, for I quite neglected to say that he was not a lively dog like Dusty—he hadn't a bone or a hair in or on his entire body! For he was made of bronze. The most sensible kind of a dog to have, some people think. Certainly Mrs. Ingalls felt that way about it as she set her new dog out on her lawn. His bronze tail was up in the air exactly as if he had been stopped in the middle of wagging it, his head was realistically cocked, his feet looked exactly as if they could run and leap and paw and scratch. But he did none of these things on that Baptist lawn, he simply stood there. Quite motionless. Quite barkless. And yet the commotion he caused!

Swarms of brown people from the village thronged on that Baptist lawn.

"Why has the white mamma put this dog on her lawn?" was everybody's question, exactly as Mrs. Ingalls had hoped. So she came outdoors to explain:

"You see, I am alone a great deal, and I need a watch-dog to safeguard me, and take care of me in the night."

"Watch-dog?" the people exclaimed, pityingly. "But this dog can't bark!" "This dog can't see!" "This dog can't bite!" "He can't warn you of burglars!" "He's simply no good at all; don't put your trust in him, teacher, or something will surely, surely harm you. He can't drive anything away. He's only bronze."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Ingalls, surprised, "I can't understand your saying this about my dog. I really can't. For how about your idols? They are only bronze and wood and stone, yet you trust them to take care of you. They can't see any better than my watch-dog. They can't hear. They can't move. And yet you think they watch over you. O my dear friends and neighbors, how many, many times I have told you that the Lord God is the one true God who made heaven and earth and each of us. How often I have begged you to put away your useless, helpless idols and turn to him.

The people went home. They thought it all over. They had to pass Mrs. Ingalls' watch-dog a dozen times a week, and although he was so silent he preached at them. "As a watch-dog I'm as useless as your foolish gods!" the dog seemed to say. And it made a tremendous impression on them. They couldn't forget it. For they knew perfectly well that if Mrs. Ingalls was not safe with her dog then they were not safe with their idols. Oh, that dog certainly did his duty! There are names on the roll of the Baptist church in Burma put there because of the watch-dog's silent sermon. In fact, there's not a Baptist dog so famous the world around. If there is, please write and tell us about him, Young Reserves!

Religious Education

The Parent Problem

On the good ship "Sunday School" there is a bridge. From that bridge the superintendent, as captain, gives his orders. There are various decks and saloons and galleys, wherein labor the teachers, each in his department, grade and class. The pupils, as passengers, enjoy the voyage, take interest in the new sights and sounds, lend a hand at times to help the crew and anticipate the harbor where their course will finish for the year.

If the sunshine, the breezes and the jolly company were all, our parable might stop here. Who need care if the vessel never left port? But our steamer is built for the voyage of religious education; and so it must have an engine-room. Below the decks this will be; a fearsome place to visit, maybe. Yet without the generation of power the ship will never reach a destination.

The engine-room of the Sunday school is the home. The engineer and his force are represented by the parents. Progress on the voyage depends somewhat on good guidance from the bridge, more on the strong team-work of the teacher-crew, most of all on the steady work below decks of the fathers and mothers. When all work together intelligently, sympathetically, and with mutual trust and esteem, the ship moves steadily on, facing storms and other hazards, and some day will bring its company safely to port.

If this view is fair, the long voyages and slow arrivals of some of our Sunday school vessels are not surprising. We have developed all parts of our character-building and Bible-teaching mechanism, except the part that furnishes the push wherewith to keep the process advancing in the pupil's life and heart. On the work that we control, lasting one hour a week, we have engineered, insisted, standardized. On the equally significant work of many hours a week, controlled by the parents but reachable by us, we have moralized, criticized, despaired, and washed our hands of responsibility. We Sunday-school workers need to take a new attitude toward our parent-problem.

To begin with, we must realize that for every pupil visible we have in ordinary cases two pupils invisible—the parents at home; that these, being adults, are harder to teach and influence than their more plastic children; that to move them at all we must win their confidence and favor; and that whatever we may think of them and their ways, we must back their leadership and withhold all advice and assistance for which they do not themselves ask. Direct teaching of parents by the teachers of their children is therefore impossible.

But every good teacher works by indirection. He educates by illusion. The children are always finding out the deeper meanings of his assignments and proposals. He takes them on a walk, just for fun; and lo, they find and bring home some specimens that are exactly what they need for tomorrow's lesson. Let the teacher plan some bit of cooperation to be rendered by the home, hearing a story retold or a verse recited, furnishing material or equipment for handwork, making a costume, providing for a class gathering, signing or keeping a record of the pupil's attendance and work. To get any of these services from every home will mean labor and patience out of all proportion to the direct gain. But back of this direct gain that we avow is the indirect gain that will come when through the doing of this simple service for the child's religious need the parent awakens to a sense of responsibility for having an educational program of his own. The first step is to train him to help us. The second will come when he of his own accord asks us to help him.

Like the ship's company, the church and community ought to be organized for cooperation. A teacher, working thus to get parents alive to need and duty, should have help. Some of these parents attend the preaching service. Others are members of the adult class or the home department. Through these agencies or in some outside gathering it may be possible to secure a lecture and discussion on home education in religion. Working still by indirection, the teacher whose eye is on results will aim to convey to every parent the conviction that the home should have for each child its own program of religious education. Where the good work now being done in some homes can be set before others, and a discussion had, the awakening will be hastened.

In personal calls on the parents, conversation may be profitably guided into four fields. The teacher's interest in the child's moral and religious welfare may always safely be expressed. Requests for specific cooperation, with explanations in detail, may follow. Discussion of the child's characteristic faults and encouraging capacities, if tactfully pursued, will lead out the parent and enlighten the teacher. And from this it is easy to proceed to the great question, "What is this child going to be?" The chosen vocation is in itself of vast significance; but back of that is the life itself and what it shall stand for. On this the teacher has no need to speak for himself. Christ claims this child for his own. The Christian teacher is the Master's spokesman. When teacher and parent agree that the child's life must be made fully Christian, even a careless parent will gladly claim any help that can contribute to the planning of the home training which this will involve.

Our steamer has been aimlessly cruising long enough. Let us refit our engine-rooms, include them in our plans of efficiency, and for every act of heroism and faithfulness there performed render honor due. So shall we reach the haven of our desire.—E. Morris Fergusson in Sunday School Worker.

International Sunday School Lesson for October 14

ISRAEL, A MISSIONARY NATION

Lesson: Exodus 19:1-6; Isaiah 43:9-11; 45:20-22

Golden Text: Exodus 19:6

Introductory

The story of how the children of Israel came to be in Egypt must be reviewed; also of their leading forth out of Egypt. There was a two months' journey through a country which required slow marches and many halts before the wilderness of Sinai, probably the plain of Er-Rahah was reached. This was a tract of a couple of hundred rods in width and two miles long.

The Lesson

After three months of tedious journeying the Israelites came to the Rephidim, 2,500 feet above the level of the Dead Sea, and so dry that there was bitter murmuring among the people. A battle with the Amalekites cleared the way, however, so that the Israelites gained access to the most fertile section in that region. In this delightful spot they remained for eleven months. Moses went up into the mount and communed with God. He returned with a message for the children of Israel: "If ye will obey my voice and keep my covenant, then shall ye be my own possession from among all peoples....and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation."

Israel's methods of performing its mediatorial duties is dealt with in the second section of the lesson.

The message to be delivered is next considered. "Assemble yourselves and come....who hath declared it of old? Have not I, Jehovah? And there is no God else besides me, a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me. Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God and there is none else."

Leading Thoughts

1. As men see God in their fellows so will their eyes be turned to him. 2. It is the Christ spirit and the Christ spirit alone that can replace international hatred with the peace of love. 3. "If ye will obey my voice....ye shall be... a holy nation."

PHILADELPHIA LETTER

By Arthur C. Baldwin

The Ministers' Conference began its fall term on Monday, Sept. 10. The new president, Rev. Howard K. Evans of the Alpha Church, was in the chair. The program on that and the succeeding Monday dealt with the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm. Some ten or a dozen of the brethren who were there gave brief resumes of their experiences. It was noticeable how little they had to say on the meetings at Stockholm and how much as to how the journey had impressed them and the general European situation. It is true one brother made an exception and confined his remarks to the meetings themselves. He apologized for this idiosyncrasy. The effect upon the listeners was probably the true one. At their best these great world-wide conferences, whatever they may do for the churches of the countries where they are held, have very little vital import for us here. Perhaps we have learned to be more cosmopolitan, but lessons for the mass are only slowly learned. The brethren had a good trip, however, and enjoyed themselves.

Pastoral Changes

Among the ministerial changes that I note after a three months' absence, are the following: Rev. J. Foster Wilcox has come to the Roxborough Church; Rev. J. H. Shephard of Connecticut has begun his pastorate at the Manchua Church; the Hebron Church has welcomed Rev. John Howard Blair; Rev. Robert T. Tumbleston has moved from Chelton Avenue to the Lower Dublin Church at Busselton.

Northeast Social Union

The Northeast Social Union held its quarterly meeting on Sept. 11 in the old Pennypack Church building, an edifice that was erected in 1707 and rebuilt in 1770. The program included an address on "Our Baptist Heritage" by Rev. Bowman L. Newkirk, and on "The Baptist Future" by the writer of this letter. This Pennypack Church ought to be a place of more interest to Baptists than it seems to be. While it is open now but once or twice a year, it has a history of activity and usefulness closely related to Baptist progress in colonial days. The little cemetery about it, now neglected, is worthy of a visit for itself alone. We Baptists are not much on the shrine business, but history is not mere bunk and there are interests and loyalties that can be developed if a proper attention is paid to what the fathers have done.

Interesting Religious Articles

Some interesting articles on the general subject of religion are now appearing in the Public Ledger. This paper, which is the Philadelphia equivalent to the Boston Transcript and the New York Times (I know no Chicago equivalent, unhappily), has been calling attention editorially and otherwise to the place the churches must have in the spiritual awakening which the world is waiting for. Preachers who want something suggestive and full of pep would do well to get hold of these articles. Some of the subjects have been: "Religion, the Inspirer of our Charters of Freedom," "Religion has Demonstrated its Power as a Social Force," "Great Leadership Slogans are Born out of Religion," "Religion has been Creator of World Famous Names."

Listen to these sentences: "It is rarely ever brought out in our public histories and biographies that to a large extent the famous deeds and exploits that made heroes in all these fields of adventure had their originating impulse and stimulation in religion; in other words, that it is the peculiar office and glory of religion, that it is creative, inspirational, that it starts a shoemaker from his bench to lead a world missionary movement and begins a crusade to liberate a race and write a new code of laws for mankind out of a bush burning in the desert."

"The biography of ideas has never been written. The old Bible writers owe their eminence as historians and biographers to the lofty way in which they describe the entrance of a new idea upon the scene as a thrilling drama of divine authorship. 'There is a spirit in man,' said one of them, 'and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding.'"

"The gospel of Jesus, what is it but good news which they who have heard it are to run and tell to others who have heard it not? To make religion purely personal, individual, a matter of private belief, is to destroy it altogether. Religion has been the great organizer, the great mobilizer and socializer of mankind. It is religion that has taken the word love out of its cage of physical passion and sent it flying through the world on the wings of a more deathless ardor."

I should have said that the writer of these articles is a newspaper reporter who professes to have nothing but a newspaper man's nose for news. He is speaking of the churches and of religion objectively, as the men on the street ought to see them. He challenges the doleful habit of self-pity and criticism into which some Christian bodies have fallen. "We hear of the falling off in the church attendance, of withered treasuries, of small salaries paid the clergy and of the general loss of influence and prestige of religious faith. Speaking as a reporter and from a superficial look at the situation, I would be apt to describe the situation in quite other terms. I wonder how often it comes thrillingly home to the ordinary hum-drum believer that by his religion he has achieved membership in the most extensive, elaborate, far-flung, influential and splendid organization of men and women and children the world has ever known." Pretty good for a reporter.

New Home for University Pastor

As the time for the opening of the university draws near, it is good to be able to report that a number of Baptist laymen of the city have contributed about $25,000, sufficient to buy and equip a home for our Baptist student pastor, Rev. Fred B. Igler. This house, at 4007 Baltimore Avenue, will be his home and increasingly a pleasant social center for all the Baptist young people who come to our schools. This is not to be confused with a guild house, for it is not that; it is to be the equivalent of a church parsonage. The social side of a student pastor's work is very important and this will give him the opportunity for the hospitable open house that has been much needed.

The Summer Assembly

The summer assembly of Eastern Pennsylvania was held at Collegeville, Aug. 27—Sept. 3. The registration was 191 full-time and between forty and fifty part-time, which was about 100 larger than the registration last year. The courses offered were well planned and the faithfulness of attendance showed that they were meeting a real need in the lives of the young people. The careful preparations made by Dean Neisser were largely responsible for the success and spirit of the meetings. This gathering of young people speaks well for the solidity and the usefulness of Baptist hosts for the years to come.

The New General Secretary

Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, who served as general secretary of the Education Board of the Pennsylvania General Convention, has resigned and becomes a member of the Crozer Seminary faculty, Oct. 1. His successor is Rev. John Wesley Elliott, who has been pastor of the Central Church of Wayne, Pa., for the last four years. The new secretary will act as the director of religious education for the state in co-operation with the Publication Society. Mr. Elliott brings to this work a thorough preparation, having received his B. A. degree from the University of Richmond, his B. D. from Colgate University, and his M. A. from the University of Chicago. He has had six years' practical experience in the pastorate.

The Evangelistic Conference

The New England Conference on Evangelism opened strongly on the first day, and grew in strength and interest to the end. The pre-announced program was carried through with but few exceptions, inevitable when the list of speakers is so full and the large territory drawn upon is so extensive.

It was plain that the subject of evangelism is one of lively interest, though there is more question than formerly as to the way of conceiving it, or the methods of pursuing it. There is something essentially warming about the topic, and its elucidation provokes all manner of spiritual incitement and passion. Three solid days and nights of earnest speechifying—most of it decidedly worth while—and gripping attention! Some thought two days with less spellbinding, and more free discussion and quiz, would have been better. But there will be other conferences following this one, and there may be a shift to what we call "forum" methods. They are very effective in finding the point and sharpening it.

The High Lights

A program so lengthy can hardly be covered in a letter. Only the high spots flash into a brief report. The attendance was gratifying, and widely representative. It was good to see so much of our Baptist New England leadership gathered in Boston by an earnest subject, and a thorough-going program for inciting spiritual activity. No element that helps in fostering the evangelistic passion and guiding it, was left out.

Doctor Massee's address was a ringing key-note at the start. It was virtually the vote of personal evangelism, showing the ways it instinctively takes when in action, as well as insisting that it ought always to be in action. Doctor McDowell of Melrose on "Evangelism in the Sunday School" was a charming expression of what in his own ministry is uppermost in thought, and continuous in action. Hon. Henry Bond, the only layman on the program, both by his platform presence, and his utterance there, raised the question "Why should it be thought an incredible thing for a layman to get into this matter of evangelism?" And he answered that question in a way that dispelled any incredibility. Dr. C. L. White, our Home Mission secretary, has to be a promoter, and loves to be one in a widely evangelistic field. Who then could better speak on "Promoting the Evangelistic Spirit," than he?

Doctor English

It was the common verdict that Prof. John M. English in his remarkable address on the "Pastor and Evangelism" struck the supreme note. Doctor English has two essentials for such an achievement: fifty years of study, cogitation, and teaching of the subject, and a warm passion of his own for building up churches and developing efficiency in ministers. The reservoir was full and we were catching the overflow. It came to us in the well-known English method which, by the way is a model in the orderly presentation of the material of an address, and equally so in the use of voice and action in the delivery of it. But the supreme element in the English method is the unmistakable heart power. To that everybody responded. Think of a man seventy-eight years old showing all the youngsters on the program just how to do it!

The conference had unmistakable value, and a throng of ministers carried its high passion and inspiration back to their churches. Dr. H. F. Stilwell, and York A. King were the leading spirits. Both in their addresses, and their developing and guiding of the purpose of the conference, gave us invaluable service.

A Great Address

The Ministers' Conference has the habit now of beginning the year's work with an opening address by Pres. Geo. E. Horr of Newton. They find that it insures them a strong opening. Having tasted of Doctor Horr's quality, so confident are the ministers of the delights of a deeper draught, that they come in from far and near. The address on the seventeenth was exceptional. Emphatically was the speaker in his own realm. He is a deep and penetrating student of modern history, and of the close relation of the current world to the world that has preceded it. It was called a "Talk on Current Questions," but it was far more than that. We were told exactly what the great war had brought us and made inevitable. In spite of small politics, and small politicians, the world is headed to closer international relations. The resultant effect of this upon the religious life of the cooperating countries was forecasted in realistic fashion. Then the inevitable conflict of religions would come, intimations of which we have already. The Christian attitude to that conflict was not left uncertain.

As Doctor Horr moved among these great current matters, it brought back to some of us the high days of the old "Watchman," when the illuminating editorial paragraphs on world politics and diplomacy, compelled attention and admiration.

Stoneham

Stoneham is one of the attractive nearer suburbs. It grouped with Reading, Wakefield, Melrose, and Winchester, but is a democratic and neighborly town. Baptists have a good church there, with a modern meeting house, and an up-to-date minister. Doctor Mitchell Bronk is just entering upon his fifth year. It has been a fruitful pastorate, especially among the young people. Sunday school and young people are thoroughly organized for growth and service. Doctor Bronk brings into his ministry the fine fruits of training, and the literary acquisitions of the years. Such an equipment, going always with the practical purpose to bless the young religiously, makes a strong combination.

Swampscott

We have a church in Swampscott that strongly lives even in a popular summer resort. It is a union of two bodies, the former regular Baptist church, and the former Christian church. It is called the United Baptist Church and is really united. In the Disciples' fashion they have the Lord's Supper every first day of the week," but in no other custom do they vary from a regular Baptist church. The pastor, Rev. L. G. Van Leeuwen, is a man of unusual equipment for a preaching and teaching ministry, and is leading strongly in a work that wins confidence and response. The expressed appreciation of his ministry is good to hear.

The Workers' Union

Already has the Workers' Union had its opening meeting. It met in the renovated Kingsley Hall, Ford Building. With the participation of sixty churches, the union starts in on a comprehensive plan of teaching and study that will last through the year. It had stars at first meeting—Mrs. Annie G. Freeman of Reading, one of our specialists in primary work; Prof. J. P. Berkeley of Newton, and acknowledged leader in religious education; and Dr. C. N. Arbuckle of Newton, emphatically a teaching pastor among us. Dr. F. F. Peterson is the leader, and always heads the procession towards something worth while.

The Great Associations

They come right along now, and promise unusual features, some of them. Here about Boston, they have an eye on each other and are alert for "features," not sensations in any way, but strikingly practical and helpful. For instance, at the Boston East that meets at First Church, Melrose, Oct. 10, there are six ministers chosen who have "done it," and each one tells "How He Did It." All of the six are modestly successful in their specialty, and had to be drafted and urged to the service of trying to share the secret. So all the ministers will be told how the devotional element was developed; how the prayer meeting became a power; how giving became a passion; how the young people were enlisted and developed, etc. That one bristlingly practical symposium will stand out this year, and be enough to put an association at the head of the procession.

Dr. Edwin W. Lounsbury

Dr. Edwin W. Lounsbury, pastor of the Park Place Church, Aurora, Ill., died at his home in that city Sept. 15, at the age of eighty-two.

He was born in Rensselaerville, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1841. Reared in a Christian home, at an early age he joined the South Durham Church. When only nineteen years of age, this church voted him a license to preach and at once he began preparation for his life's work. For six years he studied under the special tutelage of Doctors Robinson, Hotchkiss, and Northrup at Rochester Theological Seminary.

The church of Churchville, N. Y., called him in 1862 as student pastor. In July, 1863, he was ordained to the Christian ministry. During the same year he was married to Miss Alice Cornelia Carson of Jordan, N. Y. For the next few years he served as pastor of the church in Elba and later in Medina, N. Y. Following this he went to Battle Creek, Mich., where he was pastor and built the edifice still in use. He accepted the call of the First Church of Aurora in 1872, where he remained as pastor four years. Next he accepted a call to Canton, Ohio, where he had another successful pastorate of six years. It was here that he suffered the loss of his wife. Later he was married to Miss Emma A. Seiss of Canton, who survives him.

In 1883 he went to the Linden Avenue Church of Dayton, Ohio, where he remained twelve years. During the years of his residence in Dayton he served on the board of trustees of Denison University, Granville, and it was this university which conferred upon him the degree of doctor of divinity. Just one year ago he was the guest of honor at the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Dayton Church.

In 1895 Doctor Lounsbury returned as pastor for the second time to the First Church of Aurora. Three years later another honor was bestowed upon him when he was elected district secretary for foreign missions of the lake district which comprised the states of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. In this position he had under his supervision between 2,000 and 3,000 churches. This necessitated constant travel in order to be in personal contact with all of these churches. For thirteen and a half years he continued in this strenuous service, holding the office three years beyond the age limit for retirement.

After giving up his work as secretary, he retired from active service, but at the request of the Park Place Church of Aurora, he consented to supply the pulpit for six months. At the end of that time he became the regular pastor and continued until a few weeks ago, when he finished his twelfth year. His failing health obliged him to tender his resignation. The church, unwilling to accept it, elected him pastor emeritus, thus releasing him from active service after sixty-two years of faithful work in the Christian ministry.

MAINE

Rev. Ernest M. Holman, pastor of the First Church, Bath, has resigned to take effect Oct. 14, at which time he will begin his work as pastor of the church at Camden. Mr. Holman is a graduate of Bates College. The church at Camden is well established, having celebrated its centennial in 1908. It has a reputation of taking good care of its pastors and keeping them until they hear a louder call.

MASSACHUSETTS

The Barnstable Association

The ninety-second anniversary was held with the church at Mashpee, Sept. 12—13. The opening session, led by I. W. Coombs of Edgartown, was spent wholly in praise, prayer and testimony. The annual sermon was given by A. T. Ringold of Hyannis on, "The Mind of Christ in Us." The church, recently organized at Forestdale with Elizabeth B. LaFlash as pastor, made application for membership and was cordially received. An unusual feature of the afternoon was a service held in the old Indian Chuch two miles away in the woods. The service in the old church consisted of singing, prayer, and a sermon by Mr. Henry L. Bell, recently called to be assistant pastor at Brookline.

In the evening N. B. Rogers of Nantucket gave an address on, "The Young People as an Asset." Then followed the address on Sunday-school work from the point of view of the smaller schools, which was one of the outstanding features of the two days. It was delivered by Frederick T. Bailey of North Scituate.

The letters from the churches were read and breathed a cheerful and courageous spirit, though the statistics were hardly encouraging. E. B. Dolan represented the work of the state convention. In the afternoon W. Bushell of the Karen Mission, Burma, gave an account of the religious enterprises of the people among whom he had labored so many years. One of the interesting talks was that of Miss Alice S. Craig of the Italian Mission in Lynn.

Tender references were made to Willard E. Waterbury of the state convention, recalling the service he had rendered on the Cape in former years. The clerk was instructed to write him a letter of sympathy and appreciation.

Evangelism received earnest and eloquent consideration in an address by B. T. Livingston, general secretary of the evangelistic association of New England. According to the program this was the closing address, but by a hearty vote it was decided to hold an evening session at which Chester Wright, the moderator, presided. He and four other deacons occupied the platform and conducted such an inspiring and effective evangelistic service that several young people rose and acknowledged Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

The officers elected for the coming year are: Moderator, Chester S. Wright of Pocasset; clerk, A. T. Ringold of Hyannis; treas., Lawrence D. Hinckley of Osterville; auditor, Miss Bessie A. Morse of Hyannis.

An unusually interesting ordination service was held at Pocasset on Sept. 11 when Mrs. Eva M. Tedford, who had been serving as pastor there for two years, was pronounced by the permanent council of the Barnstable Association an acceptable candidate for ordination. Rev. Hugh A. Heath, general secretary of the state convention, preached the sermon.

RHODE ISLAND

The Providence ministers' meeting was devoted for the most part to vacation experiences. The president of the conference, J. Di Tiberio, remained in the city during the summer. J. C. Hyde spent a part of his vacation at Northfield. A. C. Henderson took part in summer assemblies and fished off Cape Sable Island, Nova Scotia. Secretary Reid spent some time in New Hampshire. George Kinney preached at Greenville during Pastor Henderson's vacation. J. Stewart supplied churches and made a garden. H. J. White preached for the Presbyterians. Frank Rector preached nearly every Sunday. Hs is now in his twenty-fourth year as pastor at Pawtucket. J. H. Trenberth visited Atlantic City, Ocean Grove and other points. He attended a Harding memorial service at which 10,000 persons were present. C. P. Christopher preached at his former church in Middleboro. W. W. Barker and C. B. Osborn conducted a boys' camp. Pastor Collins was in Maine and New Hampshire and with West and Shaw climbed Mt. Washington in two and a quarter hours.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

State Convention

The state convention will be held in the Immanuel Church, Scranton, of which Rev. C. H. Rust is pastor, Oct. 15-18. Mr. E. S. Williams, 302 Coal Exchange Bldg., Scranton, a member of the Immanuel Church, is chairman of the general entertainment committee which includes representatives of all Baptist churches in Scranton and immediate vicinity. Rev. G. M. Reid, pastor of the First Church, is chairman of the publicity committe. It is the desire of Doctor Rust and the members of the Immanuel Church, as well as of all Baptist leaders of the city, to do everything possible to make the convention a success.

One important factor will be the matter of entertainment. Because of housing conditions it is becoming more difficult every year to find accommodations for delegates to the state convention. In view of this fact it would be well for pastors to announce from their pulpits that any delegates who do not notify Mr. Williams of their desire for entertainment at least one week prior to the convention, will run at the risk of having to find entertainment for themselves.

Among the outside speakers will be Dean J. F. Vichert; Dr. D. B. Weeks, president of Bacone College for Indians, Oklahoma; Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, secretary of the Foreign Mission Society; Dr. William A. Hill, who will speak on up-to-date plans for missionary education; William Travers Jerome, Jr., chairman of the Laymen's Council; Mrs. Montgomery is also expected to be present.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The North Ten Mile Church celebrated its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary on Aug. 26. It was a great day for that old church which was organized in 1773 before the Declaration of Independence was signed, and before our nation was born. The Indians were then roaming over the hills and the valleys of western Pennsylvania. The virgin forests were untouched by the woodman's ax. Here and there were cleared spots where the Indians planted their corn, tobacco and vegetables. The anniversary day was ideal and more than 1,000 people came together for the services, which continued through the day. The anniversary sermon was preached by Rev. A. J. Meek, pastor of First Church of New Kensington. Doctor Meek was brought up in that community and had attended the Sunday school. When a lad he united with the church and later was licensed to preach the gospel. He is the only living man sent into the ministry from this old, historic church, of which his grandfather was a member more than seventy-five years ago. Rev. W. G. Carl of Wilkinsburg preached a sermon in the afternoon and in the evening Rev. W. S. Dunlop of Harrisburg preached. These ministers were former pastors of the church. Rev. S. L. Parcell, pastor of Broad Street Church, Washington, also made an address. Rev. I. Lee Basford, the pastor, presided. The church is a modern brick building with a seating capacity of about 400 and a membership of 250. This is one of the oldest churches west of the Allegheny mountains. In 1770 there were but seven Baptist churches in Pennsylvania and but ninety-seven churches in the territory of the United States. The church is located in a farming community. As far as is known, the church has given two men to the ministry. Rev. William Wood was licensed to preach in 1775, and 102 years later the church licensed Rev. A. J. Meek.

The First Church, Meadville, has made extensive repairs on its building amounting to $5,000. The entire sum has been paid or pledged. On the reopening Sunday, Sept. 9, $2,000 was given in the offering. Rev. G. Morton Walker is pastor.

Rev. E. L. Krumreig, who recently resigned as pastor of the Bethel Memorial Church, Denver, began his new work as pastor of the Bethel Church, Pittsburgh, Sept. 1. Doctor Krumreig spent the summer in Washington, D. C., acting as executive secretary of the National Literary Society. On Sept. 13 the Bethel Church tendered Mr. and Mrs. Krumreig a reception.

NEW YORK

The eighty-ninth session of the Essex Champlain Association will be held with the Jay Church, Oct. 2-4. On the evening of the second day of the meeting, the Jay Church will celebrate the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of its organization. The church was originally composed of members of the church at Peru, who became residents of Jay in 1798. In May, 1807, the church became an independent organization and the first meetings were held in a barn on the old Finch homestead, now known as the Page farm. In 1830 the present building was erected. The granite which forms its walls was quarried about a mile from the site of the building. It was during that year that the Sunday school was organized. The church has furnished five ministers and missionaries who have helped spread the gospel. It has had twenty-three pastors, the first being Rev. Solomon Brown, and the present pastor, Rev. E. S. Greenleaf. The membership reached its highest point, 225, in 1850.

Rev. Clinton Wunder, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Rochester, returned to his pulpit Sept. 9. This marks the beginning of Mr. Wunder's third year of service. David G. Harvard, secretary of boys' work of the Y. M. C. A. of Ithaca, who has had four years of experience in the "Y," has resigned that office to become assistant to Mr. Wunder. Mr. Harvard comes to promote the religious work among the young people of the Temple and will be responsible for the management of the church school and work among men and boys. The building committee is going forward with plans under the leadership of Mr. Arthur Castle, acting chairman, and it is hoped that the present building may be vacated in February or March to make room for the construction of the new Temple to be erected at North and Franklin streets. The Sunday morning service of Sept. 16 consisted of a memorial service in memory of Mr. William Hartman, the recently deceased chairman of the building committee.

NEW JERSEY

Rev. A. E. Rapp, the new pastor of the Summit Avenue Church of Jersey City, had an unusual experience during August and part of September. He spoke on the five steamers of the Hudson River Day Line plying between New York and Albany. Each of the boats carried from 4,000 to 6,000 passengers. The expense of these services amounted to $300 a Sunday and was carried solely by the company. Mr. E. E. Olcott, president of the line, is intensely interested in Christian work of all kinds and spares neither time nor expense to bring the gospel to the masses. He consented to run his boats on Sunday only on condition that religious services be held.

Dayton Association

The seventy-second anniversary of the Dayton Association was held Sept. 12 at the St. Paris Church. O. E. Miller, the new pastor, had things well planned. George W. Johnson, moderator, presided. The assembly was well directed. The annual sermon was preached by M. F. Scruby of the Haynes Street Church, Dayton. The reading of the church letters showed good progress. O. E. Miller gave a comprehensive report of the denominational program of the Northern Baptist Convention. A. W. West of Troy, spoke helpfully on the stewardship of self. B. F. Farris of Union, set forth obligations, as stewards of the gospel. W. D. Chamberlin of Dayton, gave instructions on how to be the stewards of substance.

The women had an inspiring hour in the afternoon. The introduction of Miss Maddox, new worker at the Christian Service House, Dayton, and address by Mrs. H. Chamberlin, were two interesting events. W. H. Geistweit, First Church, Dayton, gave an address on the fellowship of evangelism. W. R. Sloman, Third Street, Dayton, gave a vivid account of the Baptist World Alliance.

On the second day J. M. Cosby of Tippencanoe, introduced the three new pastors of the association, namely, J. E. Fosnight, Dayton; A. W. West, Troy; and Ralph Carson, of Urbana. B. G. Bowman, of Bellefontaine, preached the missionary sermon.

The afternoon of the second day was devoted to Sunday-school problems. Mrs. Ira Crawford, who is a member of the school board in Dayton, prepared a comprehensive paper on religious education in week day schools. Miss Helen Currier of Dayton gave a demonstration of how to use missionary stories. W. E. Bridge of Canton gave two addresses. His theme to the young people in the evening was "A Christian Contest."

The next meeting will be held with the North Dayton Church. W. R. Sloman is moderator, and Rollin Beck, of Piqua, who has been clerk for several years, was reelected.

On Sept. 12, Rev. H. E. Ketcham, pastor of the Wheelersburg and Waits churches, was ordained by the Wheelersburg Church. The council was composed of representatives of the various churches the Portsmouth Association. Rev. R. E. Ketcham, brother of the candidate, preached the sermon. H. S. Tillis was moderator, and S. P. Stapp, clerk.

The Lakewood Church of the Cleveland district dedicated its new building on Sept. 23. An eight-day program of exercises was held. Not only was the building dedicated, but the church dedicated itself to six phases of Christian activity: To evangelism, with an address by Dr. H. F. Stilwell; to the Bible as the only authority, with an address by Dr. George W. Taft; to intercession, with an address by Dr. C. H. Stull; to social service, with an address by Dr. A. M. McDonald; to world-wide mission effort, with an address by Rev. C. A. Brooks; to Christian education, with an address by Dean George Platt. The building cost $110,000. Plans are being made for the erection of an educational plant in the rear of the edifice. The pastor, Rev. I. N. DePuy, is entering his tenth year of service with the church.

Kalamazoo College

Kalamazoo College began its ninety-first year of activity Sept. 19. The freshman enrolment was 135. Seven new members have been added to the teaching staff. J. Maynard Street is director of athletics and assistant professor in physical education; E. B. Harper is assistant professor in sociology and education; Agnes Grenell Goss, of the class of 1912, is instructor of German; Charity C. Conant is instructor of physical education for women; Frances Diebold is instructor in biology; Ernest Wilder Spaulding, instructor in history, graduated from Dartmouth College a year ago; Thomas A. Vroegindewiej is assistant director of athletics and instructor in physical education.

A great deal was done during the summer to improve the college facilities. The dormitory for men was completely renovated. In addition to the regular dormitories for women, the college has found it necessary to rent two other houses in order to house the young women. About $77,000 has been pledged toward the new dormitory for women. The women of the state convention expect to secure $40,000 more during the coming winter. Pledges to the endowment fund equal $220,000. It will be necessary to secure $180,000 more by next June in order to meet the requirements of the General Education Board. The college authorities are hopeful of the successful outcome of the campaign.

WISCONSIN

Milton B. Lindberg, a teacher in the Northern Theological Seminary, Chicago, was recently ordained at the First Church, Eau Claire. Dr. George W. Taft preached the sermon. Mr. Lindberg is a son-in-law of Rev. Everson R. MacKinney, pastor of the First Church.

ILLINOIS

Rev. J. L. Watson, of Sullivan, has accepted the call of the Grand Avenue Church, St. Louis, Mo., and will begin his work at once.

The Bloomington Association recently closed an interesting and profitable annual meeting at Clinton. The program included laymen, women and pastors. Dr. John Y. Aitchison gave an address. More churches have pastors now than a year ago. Aggressive action was taken and an organization effected relative to the closing year of the New World Movement. Louis Jensen of Delavan was elected moderator and H. C. Weddington of Atlanta was elected clerk. The women of the association arranged four study periods on the new missionary book of the year, "Creative Forces in Japan."

Bloomfield is the most largely attended association in the central part of the state. The attendance was not as large this year as last, due perhaps to the feeling that the Indianola Church, being so much smaller than most churches that entertain the association, could not care for a record-breaking attendance. The way Indianola played the part of hostess, however, indicated that such fears were groundless. Among the general workers present were Mr. Koehler, Mr. Hafer and Mr. Merrill. Miss Louise Carter from Central America was a visitor with a stirring message of missionary work in that land. Dr. T. H. Marsh of Decatur told of his trip to Europe and the Baptist World Alliance. There were a large number of baptisms in this association and plans were laid to continue more aggressively the evangelistic program of the past year. This association raised as much for the New World Movement the past year as the one preceding and took action looking toward speeding up methods so that the last year of the New World Movement will be the best. The women had three study periods conducted by Mrs. J. W. Merrill of Champaign. Mr. Marion Watson was reelected moderator of the association, and Mrs. Warren, clerk.

THE QUINCY ASSOCIATION met with the First Church of Mt. Sterling on Sept. 11, 12. The meeting was well attended. Sermons were preached by J. B. Brown of Barry and by R. V. Meigs of Quincy, by request. Addresses were delivered by E. P. Brand, D. O. Hopkins and L. H. Koehler. The annual sermon was delivered by T. Elmer Jones of Quincy. The churches reported good work. The following officers were elected: Moderator, R. T. Piper, Kinderhook; clerk, T. Elmer Jones, 2022 Chestnut street, Quincy; rec. clerk, Herbert Hendricks, Quincy.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF BELLEVILLE has been thoroughly renovated and in part rebuilt. There is widespread praise of the beautiful walls, the new balcony and the rearrangement of the auditorium. The reopening services were held on Sept. 9. The Alton Association met with the church Sept. 26-27. Rev. J. H. Martin is pastor.

REV. ROBERT V. MEIGS, of the Central Church, Quincy, is beginning his sixth year as pastor with a series of sermons on "The Real Christian and God."

MINNESOTA

REV. HOWARD H. VERNON has arrived ready for a strenuous campaign in the Judson Memorial Church, Minneapols. He begins his work under favorable conditions.

THE LAKE HARRIET CHURCH has accepted the architect's plans for its new building and part of the money has been subscribed. Operations will begin in the spring.

THE UNIVERSITY CHURCH, Minneapolis, has been fitting itself to minister to the students of the university in the best possible way. Its building is not yet completed. The going of the pastor to the church at Madison, Wis., presents a trying situation to the church, but all members are looking forward optimistically.

REV. C. H. HILL, colporter and pastor-at-large for North Dakota, has been ill in the Mounds Park Sanitarium, St. Paul. His friends will be pleased to know that he is on the way to recovery.

THE FOURTH CHURCH, Minneapolis, is making plans for receiving the Minnesota Convention, to be held in that church early in October. Pastor Loucks is one of the busiest men in Minneapolis these days.

DR. JOHN A. EARL is back in the pulpit of the First Church, St. Paul. The members of the church are rallying for a strenuous fall program.

REV. JOHN SWANSON has resigned the pastorate of the First Swedish Church ot St. Paul. His counsel and good judgment will make him much missed among Baptist ministers of the Northwest section. Mr. Swanson leaves one of the strongest Swedish Baptist churches in the United States to become pastor at Brockton, Mass.

MISSOURI

REV. P. D. MANGUM has served the First Church, Charleston, four years. During that time the attendance at church and prayer meetings has doubled, and the offerings to missions and benevolences have also doubled. During the last year there were 110 dditions to the membership.

IOWA

REV. DAVID ALEXANDER, pastor of the church at Grundy Center, has returned from a visit to England and Scotland. He visited his mother after an absence of eighteen years.

THE CHURCH AT MINNESOTA recently closed a series of special meetings under the direction of Evangelist Franklin. The church received nine new members.

Our State Convention Enterprise

Many of the State Conventions hold their annual meetings in September and October. In establishing these Conventions, Baptists have followed the suggestions of both Scripture and good business principles. "Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria and unto the uttermost" is the divine order. "In America the State is the unit of sovereignty."

The Program Outlined

The State Convention program is missionary, educational and promotional. It seeks to evangelize needy fields, develop growing churches, establish denominational strength and help send the Gospel message to the ends of the earth. Its work is in the open country, the camps, the villages and the crowded cities.

A Constructive Missionary Force

Thirty-six State Conventions with their varied activities through field-workers, evangelists, associational missionaries, missionary pastors and other helpers constitute an ever enlarging and uplifting force. From Maine to California it forms an important factor in Kingdom work and denominational advance. It cultivates fields, develops resources and discovers new recruits for all undertakings.

Help Safe-Guard the Future

If Baptists are to make missionary conquests at home and abroad they must not fail to strengthen their State Convention enterprise by prayer, cooperation and adequate financial support. In this way can they help make America Christian, insure an enduring home base and project effective plans of aid for all lands.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE FIRST CHURCH, SAN FRANCISCO, recently closed a "no summer slump" campaign of three months. Fifty persons united with the church during that time, and at the end of the period nine letters were on hand awaiting action. Enough persons signified their intention of uniting with the church, so that the number of new members would equal one a day for the whole period.

THE ANNUAL DINNER OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Berkeley, is an occasion for a display of the interest of the members in the varied activities of the church. More than 400 members were present at the recent dinner. Reports given showed an increase in membership of ninety-six. The outlook for the future is encouraging.

Obituary

REV. T. S. WOODIN

Theodore S. Woodin was born in Dutchess County, New York, July 17, 1835, and died in Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 9, 1923, at the age of eighty-three.

Mr. Woodin was a graduate of Colgate Theological Seminary. He married Miss Sarah Van Nostrand also from eastern New York, who died eight years ago in Weston, Mich., after they had walked and worked together for over fifty-seven years. She was an ideal minister's wife. All of Mr. Woodin's ministry was in the state of Michigan, having served the churches of Troy, Romeo, Cassopolis, Rochester, Weston, Oxford, Hastings and Parshallville, making forty-seven years of faithful and abundant labors. Failing eyesight caused him to give up the ministry. His pastorates were always fruitful in soul winning and in training young people in Christian work, especially young men for the ministry.

Three daughters survive: Mrs. F. Barnett of Pontiac, Mich., Mrs. B. Abell, Toledo, Ohio, and Mrs. G. D. Cooley, Battle Creek, Mich.

A brief service at Toledo was conducted by Rev. L. B. Stivers. The funeral was held in the church at Rochester, Mich., where he had served as pastor. Rev. F. B. Cutler, a long-time friend, paid the last tributes of love to this aged servant of God.

MRS. JULIA H. SNASHALL

On the morning of Sept. 5, Mrs. Julia H. Snashall closed her eyes for the last time on the eyes of those nearest and dearest to her that expressed devoted filial affection. A final stroke, lasting but a few minutes, quickly took her to the side of her companion where she longed to get relief from long suffering.

Miss Julia H. Shapley was born in Earlville, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1843. Her girlhood was spent at Hamilton where she was one of the most respected and popular young ladies of the town, a devout member of one of the churches and a leader in the social and religious activities of her church. Here she met Rev. J. Snashall, to whom she was married after his graduation from old Madison University, now Colgate. This tribute, given at the funeral service, is taken from the address of Dr. H. O. Rowlands, a Colgate intimate: "Rev. J. Snashall was a brilliant scholar and eloquent preacher as well as a good minister of Jesus Christ. Mrs. Snashall's intellectual accomplishments, social refinement and above all her devout spirit and consecrated life made her a most efficient companion in her husband's ministry. The influence and efficiency of this ministry were greatly intensified by the inspiraton and spiritual zeal of his wife. Her disposition was optimistic, cheerful and sweet. She never wanted for friends and fellow-workers in any cause which enlisted her sympathy. When earth's friendships and love could no longer minister to her, out of the slumber of dying her eyes opened on the glories of the unseen holy. Earth is better for her life and immortality more attractive since she entered its portals. 'Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like unto hers.'"

The funeral services were held from the home of her son, Rev. C. H. Snashall, 511 N. Ridgeland Avenue, Oak Park, Ill., Sept. 8. Her pastor, Dr. Carl D. Case was in charge, assisted by Dr. H. O. Rowlands and Dr. Benjamin Otto. Burial was by the side of her husband in Oakhills, Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE THREE Baptist Hospitals—the only Baptist Hospitals of the Northwest—Mounds Park Sanitarium, Midway Hospital, Merriam Park Hospital, are thoroughly and efficiently equipped for service.

Our Book Shelf

The Religious and Social Problems of the Orient, by Masaharu Anesaki, professor of the science of religion in Tokyo Imperial University and of Japanese literature in Harvard University. New York: Macmillan. $1.

Four lectures delivered in the University of California, September, 1921. There is usually a charm in the literary style of an oriental scholar, especially after he has received finishing touches in an English or American university. The lectures give the reader a viewpoint of oriental religious conditions from an angle other than that of Christian missionary writers. He is not an opponent of Christianity, nor its believer, so far as we can surmise; nor does he seem to be a devotee of any religion; and yet he is in sympathy with religious life and spirit. He might be a Christian of the Tolstoi type. His presentation of Christian civilization with its business methods, progress, etc. in the orient (he does not recognize Christianity and "Christian civilization" as identical), its good and evil influences on oriental life, morally, socially and economically considered, inspires serious thinking and questioning. We read the volume through before laying it down. We shall read it again.

Christianity and Psychology, by E. R. Barry. New York: Doran. $1.50.

The author more than once declares himself a representative of the "new psychology." With many readers he prejudices the whole work when he declares that the "starting point of the whole inquiry must be the whole-hearted recognition of the hypothesis of evolution in the sphere of mental and spiritual life. . . . The 'new' psychology starts from a frank acceptance of the evolution theory." The "evolution" he has in mind is of the crassest type. He out-Darwins Darwin. He writes, "From the simplest form of reflex action in the most primitive types of organism up to the God-like reason of a Socrates is one unbroken process (of evolution) occupying millions of years." Darwin would have modestly qualified such an averment with his oft repeated "probably" or "it is likely." Yet on that "theory," always an uncertain basal proposition for a system of philosophy, our author builds his system of new psychology! It will not be strange, if only on account of mental bias, if many of his inferences and averments will appear to a class of readers as fanciful. We do not undertake to discredit his conclusions, we only aver that to many his "theory" is unacceptable, hence the conclusions likewise. He writes in full sympathy with spiritual Christianity and evangelical religion. He sounds no uncertain trumpet on those subjects. The chapter on the "Danger of Subjectivity in Religion" is timely, practical and helpful. He appreciates the peril of intellectualism on the one hand and mysticism on the other. They are Scylla and Charybides. Possibly on account of the unfixedness of the term psychology, and the mystic elements that enter into it, the argument of the discussion seems sometimes hazy, lacking in definiteness, crispness and clearness. We certainly would not charge the writer with that conciseness, directness and perspicuity that chains the mind of the reader to the pages. The book must be read not cursorily and hastily, but with the attention glued to the arguments in order to understand and appreciate the contents. Parts may be read and reread with profit. The volume certainly treats a question that absorbs much of the attention of the college and seminary class-rooms and obsesses every color and form of intellectualism in religion.

The Birth of the Bible, by Theodore Heysham. Philadelphia: The Judson Press.

The reviewer has special sympathies in the publication of this volume for he saw it in its earlier preparation at the home of the author in Norristown, Pa., Dr. J. K. Weaver, superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school, now deceased, being the friendly medium of communication. Doctor Heysham has spent days and nights in the arrangement of maps and charts that give a lucid delineation of the gradual but providential building up of the canon of inspiration. It is but here, after several years of lecture work, in book form for the convenience of the larger company of people. The anatomy of the structure of the Bible, as it were, is given in clear outline and explanation. The author rightly says "The Bible is a record of divine (not merely human) experience. It is God seeking man, rather than man seeking God." As such it is God's inspired revelation of otherwise inscrutable things, though man acts naturally and normally through it all. It is man in contact with God and God with man. How the divine One contrived to convey his high thought to man is told in marvelous story. The similitude of two streams, Old and New Testament record, is here used till in the course of history they meet in one book, our common and received Bible. The progress of scribe and council under the divine hand is here fully portrayed and a volume is placed in our hands which will be found exceedingly valuable and helpful to pastor and people in a working knowledge and glad confidence in the Word.

The Threshold, by N. W. A. New York: Macmillan. $2.

The self-advertisement of this volume declares that the author, whoever she may be—is "ill, on the threshold of death" when she writes these "meditations" on the "meaning of life, nature, evolution and the future." Her illness does not hinder a flow of elegant expressions, novel fancies, and weird imagination clothed in a choice literary diction suitable to the sentiments expressed. No doubt the book will charm a type of readers as an epic on human life with the accent on its mysterious earthly close. Others are apt to regard it as a collection of morbid sentimentalities brought forth from a mentality jolted out of the usual path of human thinking and giving forth utterances that to a healthy mind seem uncanny and uninspiring. Of one feature there will be no difference of opinion—it is couched in a diction that a Hamlet, or Shelley or Keats might have adopted when they uttered similar fancies.

Nevertheless We Believe, by Rev. A. Boyd Scott. New York: Doran.

A well wrought-out series of addresses upon the Apostles Creed. Beginning with the first presentation upon the disrepute of creeds, the writer discusses in a scholarly and reverent manner the various themes presented by the Apostles Creed. He concludes that changes emerge but the title of the book sums up his final conclusion.

THREE QUESTIONS AND ONE ANSWER

What will strengthen a church that has become weak?

What will make stronger a church that is already strong?

What will revive enthusiasm in a church that has lost its spiritual passion?

The Answer Is Stewardship

Nothing will so help to build up a church or more greatly redound to the glory of Christ throughout the world. Hundreds of pastors who have sincerely tried the stewardship plan, will testify that this is true.

The month of October has been suggested for the promotion of a Stewardship Program in every local Baptist church. Copies of literature and all material needed will be furnished on application to State Promotion offices.

In observance of "Constitution Week," Rev. E. L. Hamilton of Anderson, Ind., spoke on "The Constitution of the United States" using for his text Prov. 22:28. "Remove not the ancient landmarks which the fathers have set." The daily press gave large space to this address.

A school of missions is to be held in two semesters by the Wilmette Church, Wilmette, Ill. The first semester will deal with the problem of foreign missions, beginning Sept. 26. The classes are to be held on Wednesday night in connection with the regular mid-week meeting of the church. Courses will be offered for adults, young people, and for juniors. The adults will be led by Prof. Edmund D. Soper, professor of comparative religions at Northwestern University, who will give six lectures on Japan, basing the work on Fisher's book, "Creative Forces in Japan." The young people's class will use Doctor Axling's book, "Japan on the Upward Trail" and the junior will use the new book entitled "The Honorable Japanese Fan." Each session of the school will close with what is called the assembly at which on succeeding Wednesday nights, the presentation of one of our Baptist foreign mission fields will be given. The school will be conducted under the direction of the promotion department of the church.

Dr. Craig S. Thoms received from the Judson Press during the summer the first volume of his latest book, "Social Imperatives." It is already meeting with a cordial reception. One reader says of it: "It is a decidedly worth-while volume and presents its case in a clear, challenging way." This is the fourth volume from the pen of Doctor Thoms. "The Bible Message for Modern Manhood" appeared in 1912, "The Workingman's Christ" in 1914, and "The Essentials of Christianity" in 1919. Doctor Thoms is at the head of the department of sociology in the University of South Dakota, located at Vermilion, where he was pastor for fourteen years before taking up teaching. Besides his work in sociology, he conducts two courses in Bible study, one in the Old Testament and one in the New for which regular university credit is given.

Latest figures show seventy Italian Baptist churches and missions, fifty-three pastors and missionaries, 3,265 members, and 4,500 Sunday-school pupils. L'Aurora is a weekly religious newspaper published by the association. There is an Italian department of Colgate Theological Seminary. The Italian churches are working toward self-support.

"It Is to Laugh"

An American called at an English hotel one day and asked what the charges were and was told that they were thirty francs on the first floor, twenty on the second, and ten on the third.

"Thank you," said the traveler and turned to go.

"Doesn't that please you?" asked the landlord unwilling to lose a guest.

"Yes, your prices are all right," was the reply, "but your hotel isn't high enough."

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

ON AMERICANISM IN MUSIC

Art of any kind cannot be exclusively national. The creative spirit achieves the greatest success when it is untrammelled by local intentions or caste restrictions. Especially is this true of music. Perhaps no other art is as sensitive to environment and associations as the fine art of "sounded emotion," as one tender critic has termed it. Grieg wrote Norwegian music; Brahms, German; Liszt, Hungarian; Verdi, Italian; Dvorak, Bohemian; Sullivan, English; Saint-Saens, French; and so on indefinitely. But with none of these men was the purely national note of any great moment. The value of their work lies in the universal appeal of the same, not in its national mannerisms and peculiarities, interesting as these may be in melodic charm, in pungency of rhythms and in freshness of expression.

Although this is true, yet there is no more vital problem in the music world of today than this same urge for specialization along nationalistic lines. There is hardly an issue of any journal dealing with musical matters in this country today that has not in its pages a brief for or against the American composer and artist. Until a few years ago it seemed to be the tacit understanding that the foreign music and musician were on a higher plane, were better than those we had developed here. This was the truth years ago, for this nation was still in the birth throes; existence and expansion were the vital life interests, and the fine arts were merely trifles for leisure moments, even if they escaped the stigma of being excuses for an immoral waste of time. Of native production in painting, literature or music, there was little. And this culture was dependent for example and stimulus upon the much better appreciated artistic products of the old world.

Gradually our poets, novelists, painters, composers and performers developed their own stride, thought their own thoughts more and more and worked them out with less dependence upon the foreign modes. Naturally, those aspects of creative achievement which were most easily understood by the non-technical populace—the Poes, the Coopers, the Holmes, the Whitmans, the Longfellows and the fine array of artists and sculptors—won popular support and reaped a reward to some small extent commensurate with their labors. Native literature and art now need no "high tariff" protection against foreign competition.

But the composer is faced with a more difficult problem than the performer, the singer or the teacher. The equality as to footing and favor between the native-born and the importation is becoming a definite fact; in a few fields, such as grand opera and high-priced snobbish "society musicales," the chief requisites for success are a foreign name, a piquant reputation and a charming accent. But the American pianist, organist, singer or violinist need not worry as to his recognition if he has gift, grit, grace and patient zeal coupled with average business sense!

But we are not yet standing back of our own writers of music. And this must be done if we are to produce great master-works of music. A composer must have leisure in which to dream, to plan, to prepare. He must be assured of time, free from petty cares and interruptions, in which to carry out his ideas. And he should have an educated public, alive to the value of the great things in music and a knowledge of musical values. Today we face the difficulty that the larger part of our public is uneducated musically, some of it proud of the fact. To too many, classical music means uninteresting jingles, a mysterious fuss about something with no meaning apparent. And argument brings nothing but embattled prejudice and resistance. We have a great educational campaign ahead of us to spread the gospel of good music and demonstrate the value of the treasures of such. Music, good music, is a tremendous moral, ethical, yea, religious force whose power and possibilities we are yet but dimly aware of. We have got to get enough of it, hear enough, to make it familiar to all. The great saving grace of music is that good music fights its own battles. As a community becomes increasingly familiar with better music, the higher quality kills the lower automatically. And as the educated requirements of the audiences reach to ever higher standards, so the efforts of the composers and performers to meet these same standards will be increasingly stimulated and rewarded. The widespread web of musical clubs, of women's clubs, of choral societies, orchestras, the better class of movies, and the churches, all play a great part and could do much more in acquainting the vast public with good music.

Once rid of the fetish-worship of the foreign label—the production of native music and its valid interpretation will increase and improve. I am not advocating American music as a narrow stylist product. What I am putting up as a goal is the best music to be produced here. Whether our future musical vocabulary is to be drawn from the negro folksongs, the aboriginal chants and dances of the red men, the hill songs of Kentucky and the Ozarks, the varied swirl of polytongued folk song as found in the crowded quarters of the great cities, no man knows. All have their partisan advocates. My own feeling is that out of the great melting pot of life here will come a musical idiom which will be the precipitate of all of these varied ingredients. We must know the best of the old, sympathetically study the old world new, but, both as a matter of sentiment and good hard sense, put our concentrated encouragement and energy back of what we can produce here. That it will pay, I am convinced; pay in profit and in well-being.

A Great Soul in Prayer

O THOU who hast taught us to seek first thy Kingdom and its righteousness, teach me to say, "Give me my daily bread." Teach me to accept thy will as the foundation of my happiness, and other things as only its superstructure.

I am more afraid of the hunger of the body than the hunger of the spirit. Convince me that it would not profit a man to gain the whole world, and lose his own soul. Show me that it is only the possession of my soul that makes the possession of the world any gain.

Impress me with the truth that no thing can give me joy, if I myself am not already joyful. Inspire me with the knowledge that the issues of life are not from without but from within.

Guide me into the discovery that the pleasures at thy right hand are the only things that are pleasures for evermore. Amen.

—George Matheson

Fresh from the Field

As announced some little time ago, the executive committee of the Baptist Bible Union of America held a meeting recently in the Jarvis Street Church, Toronto. "It was unanimously agreed to launch at once a new paper. One for the whole wide world. It will be known as the Fundamental Baptist. Dr. W. B. Riley will be editor-in-chief and he will announce an editorial staff, every one of whom is known the world around. It will not be made a junk heap. All contributions will be solicited." The first edition will be 50,000. It will be published at $1 a year. Another important action was taken but will not be announced just now. One thing at a time.

Rev. C. J. Hill, well-known for his years of service as colporter-missionary in North Dakota, has been obliged to go to the Mounds Park Sanitarium in St. Paul for treatment. He would be glad to hear from his friends.

The First Church, Grand Forks, N. D., has extended a hearty call to Rev. A. S. Barner of Chicago. He has recently completed a four-year post-graduate course at the University of Chicago. He is a graduate of Colgate Seminary and has held two or three pastorates in the West. He began his work Oct. 1.

Reckless driving of automobiles is taking a terrible toll of human life. In Chicago and Cook County from Jan. 1 to Sept. 25, 507 persons were killed, the majority of them children. Most accidents are caused by reckless driving. It is a hopeful sign that the penalties are becoming more severe. In Massachusetts during August, 431 automobile licenses for driving were revoked.

Rev. O. P. Bishop, pastor of the Bales Avenue Church, Kansas City, Mo., has resigned to become pastor of the church at St. Joseph, in the same state. He has served the church in Kansas City for the past six years with a large measure of success. The building has been completed, the church having spent more than $200,000 of which less than $70,000 is in the form of a mortgage. The church budget has increased from $5,000 in 1917 to $52,000 in 1923. Last year there were more than 300 members added to the church.

Charles H. Grose, a brother of Dr. Howard B. Grose, Mrs. Justin A. Smith and Mrs. J. W. Weddell, is the editor of the Ballston Spa Journal, which belonged to his father before him. He has the distinction of being for thirty-eight years the acceptable clerk of the Saratoga Baptist Association.

Dr. Walter E. Bachman, formerly of Fargo College, N. D., has accepted an invitation to become professor of religious education in the Biblical Seminary in New York.

The recent sessions of the National Baptist Convention at Los Angeles, were the most encouraging in the history of that body. The attendance was not less than 10,000 at the daily sessions, and the amount of money raised was greater than any former year, notwithstanding the fact that the year began with December and ended with September. Dr. L. K. Williams of Olivet Church, Chicago, was reelected president.

Where Will They Pray Now?

Voluntary Attendance at Early Morning Prayers in the Mabie Memorial School

The Mabie Memorial School in Yokohoma Destroyed in the Japan Earthquake

An unparalleled disaster in Baptist Foreign Mission Work involving the destruction of the Tokyo Tabernacle, the Mabie Memorial, The Sarah Curtis School, four Japanese churches, five missionary homes and severe damage to the Mary Colby School and other property in Tokyo and Yokohoma. Seven missionary families and six women lost all personal possessions. Total loss not less than $500,000.

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED

With prompt heroic generous action this catastrophe can be transformed into a victory for Christ and the results of decades of missionary effort conserved. You gave generously to the relief work of the Red Cross. Give now for the missionary reconstruction of Japan.

Exits

A certain well-known church in its publicity calls attention to the existence of sixteen exits in the church building as if it would be an inducement to church attendance. At first the publicity did not appeal to us, but after reading one of the pastor's sermons we began to appreciate the value of having one of those sixteen exits right at hand for a get-away. Talking of exits, we remark that the office of THE BAPTIST has two besides the fire escape. We feel, especially in recent years, that to have an office with only one way of escape is an unnecessary tempting of Providence.

Killam's Kollum

That's It

"Leadership," says the Continent, "is of two kinds. One leader knows what the people ought to do and helps them do it. The other knows what the people want to do and lets them do it." That's it. We have both types among our pastors. One church gets a great list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST and Missions. Another has less than a baker's dozen. What is the difference? Leadership. One man knows that a Baptist to be most worth while to himself and the world should know something about his own denomination and the work of the kingdom outside the three-mile limit from his church. He acts on this knowledge. The other fellow—well, both priest and people follow the line of least resistance.

When a Knock Is a Boost

"I am one of those timid mid-western pastors who reads THE BAPTIST regularly as soon as it hits my mail box. The enclosed article from my publicity committee hopes to be edited and published. One favor only they ask—keep it out of Killam's Kollum. I suppose they meant this for humor, but publicity committees as a usual thing are poor humorists. However, I have read the Kollum from the beginning and still live. One thing I wanted to speak about for your discouragement and encouragement. Just as a member of my church does to me. Every Monday she calls me up just about the time I am trying to estimate the effect of Sunday's work and have come to the conclusion that it was a rank failure and am necessarily blue. She crowns my emotional state by telling me something worse than anything I had thought of and then tells me something encouraging before she leaves the phone. It is like an explosion of electricity in the fog. It clears the atmosphere. The point is this: A man arose in an associational meeting I recently attended and said that he had discontinued THE BAPTIST because of a certain article he did not like. Furthermore, he said that he had turned away a number of young people from our denominational schools. Well, he made nothing out of his statements except that he made a fool of himself. The result was that most all of us folks went out from that session with a greater determination to sell THE BAPTIST to every Baptist and to see to it that our young people as far as we have influence shall go to denominational schools. It would pay you to send some one about the country to say mean things about the paper. You could charge it to advertising. It is the best kind of advertising, as results show."—Rev. R. E. Williamson, Waterloo, Iowa.

Rev. Albert H. Gage, for the past five and a half years director of religious education under the joint appointment of the Chicago Executive Council and the Publication Society, has resigned this position in order that he may reenter the pastorate. He is now acting pastor of the North Shore Church, Chicago.

Dr. Henry Edward Talle, of New York City, was one of the speakers recently in the Vermont Baptist Ministers' Conference. He has engagements for the fall and winter in New Hampshire, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Michigan and Virginia. He is to be one of the teachers in the Columbia Community Training School in New York City.

George H. Carr was ordained at the First Church, Marathon, N. Y., on Sept. 19. Rev. G. A. Fairbank of McGrawville was moderator, and Rev. Whitney Yeaple of Groton was clerk.

On the calendar of the First Church, Grinnell, Iowa, Rev. C. A. Carman, pastor, is the following suggestion: If I were the usher, I'd appreciate the folks who were willing to sit a little farther front in order that I might find it easier to seat the late comers and the strangers who are a bit embarrassed. I'm sure I would think more of the folks who remembered to put the hymn books back in the racks instead of dropping them on the seats. More than that, I would almost love the folks who would try not to block the entrance-way after Sunday school in order that people coming in might have a chance to be greeted properly. (Between you and me) I'd always feel proud if the offering plate were filled when I took it up to the altar."

Out of the 600 negro girls in Spelman Seminary the past year, only three are not yet professing Christians. This tells the story of the religious life at Spelman more eloquently than any words could do.

All through the Northern Baptist Convention field this week little blue and white buttons are beginning to appear. They are unassuming, yet they have all the dignity that pertains to enlistment under a noble standard. They are small, yet their message stands clearly forth for the world to read: "Registered Bible and Missionary Conferences." By wearing one of these buttons you will show the members of your own church, the members of other denominations and those who acknowledge no creed at all that, as for you, you have put first things first, allowing nothing to be of more moment to you than the Bible and missions.

Freeport, Ill., is experiencing a great awakening in religious interest. The Protestant churches took a religious census of the entire community of 22,000, then commenced a six weeks' evangelistic campaign under the leadership of the business men's gospel team of Fairfield, Iowa. Fourteen churches are cooperating with an aggregate membership of 4564. Factories, churches, banks and private homes are open for prayer services and gospel messages. Business men are promoting the union effort and bringing Christian business men to speak night after night, Harper of Fairfield, Judge Udderbach of Des Moines, Chas. Goff also of Iowa, and numerous others. Hundreds are being reached and the building is wholly inadequate to accomodate the crowds.

Rev. R. M. Garrett, pastor of the First Baptist Mexican Church and superintendent of the Mexican Christian Center in Phoenix, Ariz., greatly needs good books in English or Spanish. Will our readers please mail books to Mr. Garrett, 1005 E. Washington St., Phoenix?

Enrolling 319 licensed and ordained ministerial students on Sept. 18, twenty-six more than on the opening day last year, and as many as the total enrolment during the whole session four years ago, the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary recorded its most auspicious opening since its inaugural session sixty-five years ago. Dr. John R. Sampey is beginning his thirty-ninth year as teacher and Dr. A. T. Robertson is starting his thirty-sixth year. Pres. E. Y. Mullins now begins his twenty-fifth year, while Dr. W. O. Carver, fresh from a year's tour of world mission fields, is entering his twenty-eighth year of service.

The National City Bank of New York in its trade review calls attention to the rapid increase in the exportation of the cigarette to China. "Out of the twelve billion cigarettes passing out of our port last fiscal year, nearly nine billion went to China. This big increase in our exports of cigarettes to the Orient occurs chiefly in the shipments to China."

The motion picture bureau of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. has become the largest distributor of non-theatrical films. This bureau is furnishing a free service, excepting transportation, to churches, schools as well as its own institutions. If you are interested, write the bureau at 347 Madison Ave., New York City.

Prof. Charles Homer Boynton of the General Theological Seminary in New York, was honored during a recent visit to Jerusalem by having the Order of the Holy Sepulchre conferred upon him by the Orthodox Patriarch of Jerusalem. This honor, one of the oldest and most prized of the gifts of the Christian church, has been conferred upon few Americans. Professor Boynton's visit to the Patriarch was made on behalf of the American Committee on Preservation of the Sacred Places in the Holy Land of which he is secretary.

New Duties of the Church

THE changing circumstances of life in different ages sometimes alter the moral quality of an act, and they still more frequently bring to light the importance of certain duties that had not been recognized previously. Familiar examples are the changed attitude toward dueling, the lottery, human slavery, and the traffic in intoxicants. These are negative changes in moral judgment; but the church of Christ is also along positive lines finding new duties appearing and placing peremptory obligations upon us. Our fathers cannot be greatly blamed for not having considered them as duties, but when once they have been clearly brought above the horizon and pointed out we can never again ignore or repudiate them.

It is not necessary, as certain radicals assert, to make a total shift of emphasis in religion from an attempt to secure the conversion of individual souls to an attempt to secure the reconstruction of society as a whole. It is not necessary to raise a sharp issue between the duty to save souls and the duty to save society. Probably the most of Christians will admit that Christianity has both functions; but the Scriptures and the whole philosophy of the Christian religion undoubtedly place the emphasis on a radical change in individual souls, and contemplate the betterment of the world through the multiplication of redeemed lives and also through the gradual predominance of Christian principles. These principles are the master motives of the highest civilization as well as of the individual life. Governmental business and social affairs will find their highest attainment and fullest success only when they have conformed to the principles set forth by Christ centuries ago. It would not require the universal acceptance of Christ as Saviour and Lord to ensure the triumph of Christian principles in society as a whole; but it will require the leadership of the organized Christian forces of society and of great Christian citizens and patriots to secure such a result.

It would have seemed strange to Christian leaders of a century or two ago to see some of the present activities of the Christian churches. The suggestion of missions to the heathen was by most Christians considered an impertinence and a usurpation of the divine prerogative. Less than a century ago a Baptist church in Ohio excluded a member for joining a temperance society. But the churches have come to consider not merely personal abstinence but the total abolition of liquor traffic a part of their duty as Christians. Still more recently the churches have dared to align themselves against the divorce evil, against child-labor, against all exploitation of human labor by greedy employers, and in many other instances to express their convictions and to direct their influence as powerfully as possible in matters that to our ancestors would have seemed beyond or contrary to the proper functioning of a Christian church.

One of the most striking examples of this change of outlook is in the adoption for home mission study classes this year by the united missionary societies of America of ex-President John H. Finley's book, "The Debt Eternal," which is an appealing and utterly convincing presentation of our obligation to child-life for its protection from disease and abusive labor conditions and for ensuring to the children their proper heritage of home and church nurture, of play and instruction. It sets forth unanswerably, yet with beauty and tenderness, the church's duty in the matter. Yes, that is to be our home mission study book this year. Lowell had prophetic vision when he wrote more than two generations ago,

"New occasions bring new duties; time makes ancient good uncouth;
He must upward still and onward who would keep abreast with truth."

A Rally Day

THERE is good Christianity and common sense in the idea of a Rally Day for the forces of a local church after the vacation period in the summer. A well-planned Rally Day program for the Bible school, the young people's society and for the morning and evening services of worship, helps to concentrate attention afresh upon the value of worship and study with the people of God in the church of Jesus Christ.

A vacation period combined with hot weather is very apt to cause a loss of interest and therefore a lessening sense of value in the routine of life, but the Rally Day program should restore the routine of spiritual habits if they have been lost during the summer months.

Another value derived from a Rally Day program is a rising tide of enthusiasm for the spiritual exercises in church life. Enthusiasm is essential to growth in grace. The absence of enthusiasm is the cause of much of the failure in local church work, its presence is a mark of progress and denotes unity of purpose. Enthusiasm is very contagious, hence the value of a Rally Day program.

The plans and program for a Rally Day in the local church need to be carefully and prayerfully worked out. Mere movement or added mechanism will not get anywhere. The union of like-minded people who love Jesus Christ, who aim to follow the lead of the Holy Spirit and who definitely seek a united goal, will surely bring a new measure of success to the forces of a local church.

One other thing we desire to point out in connection with a Rally Day in the local church. Circumstances may have combined to lead some people out of the line of attendance and participation who were either too weak or ashamed to return under normal conditions, but who, when approached in connection with the special effort of a Rally program, would quietly drop back into their former activity.

The Week-Day Church School

PERHAPS it is safe to say that the week-day church school is beyond the experimental stage and that it has demonstrated its value as one of the educational factors in a modern local church. We wish, therefore, to point out several things in connection with the establishment and maintenance of such schools.

Education must never be made a substitute for the act of God called regeneration. The local church must teach its constituency concerning the way and will of God, but in the case of the unsaved the processes of education must only be used to bring them to the knowledge of their unsaved state and their consequent need of salvation through the redemptive work of the Lord Jesus Christ. After regeneration has taken place, the church school can be mightily used to teach the saved life more about the way and the will of God. We are, therefore, strongly in favor of the church school on a week day because of the opportunity it gives to teach the young and the maturing the revealed truth about spiritual ways and things.

We next desire to draw the attention of our readers to the fact that the weak spot in the work of the average local church is in its educational processes. Anything that will help to overcome that weakness will be a blessing. In many cases a church is weak because the minister is unprepared to meet the situation that confronts him. He is an uneducated man confronting a congregation that has in it a large percentage of educated people. Perhaps he is slovenly about his study life today. Perhaps he is blind to the educational needs of his people. Fervor is useful, but knowledge with fervor is much more useful. We shall never have a local church with continued power until we have a membership educated in all the way and will of God. The key to this is in the pastor's keeping. The week-day church school will help to produce an educated ministry. About the most pathetic thing we face sometimes is a preacher with an evangelistic passion but an utter lack of knowledge to enable him to present a balanced meal of truth. All learning and no passion is of equal danger, we think. We favor a church school because it will enable the local church to focus its attention upon spiritual things between the Lord's days and thus put into the thinking of parents and children the needs of the spiritual life.

The week-day school must not be a preaching service, but a teaching ministry. The week-day school, where it is under the auspices of the public school system must meet the high educational standards of that great American institution. This will be a good thing for the educational vision of the average local church, the educational standards of which are often low or non-existent. Dangers? Yes, there are always dangers in any advance movement, but if the local church and its leadership are in right relationship with God and the spirit of truth, we can achieve advance while retaining all that is fundamental to the gospel. Dangers? Yes, but it is equally or more dangerous to refuse to profit by an advance educational opportunity. We need much more education in our church life and the week-day church school will help to give it to us.

Leave Room for Spontaneous Service

WE believe in organization. We cannot in the church, in a day of standardized business and complex social life, ignore the best methods of co-operative work.

Wonderful things have been accomplished by the family group plan, by committees and canvasses, by roll calls and rallies. We are not leaving, and cannot leave, the work of the modern church to chance. We are here calling attention to the fact that the human heart—the Christian conscience—cannot be satisfied with a service strictly standardized.

When a Christian man sees his brother in need of counsel or clothes, he should not feel his duty done when he has notified the calling committee or the associated charities. There will be, if one is truly Christian, a personal, spontaneous giving of one's self. With the coming of improved church organization we must still leave room for and encourage men and women to speak the words and render the service which is unofficial and personal.

Working for Fun

CAPTAIN A. V. BROWER, a millionaire, serves in the army without pay, it is said. His reason: "I get more real fun out of my work in the army than I get out of all my wealth."

This defies the conventional presumptives. How often are we assured that men will not serve the public without the incentive of profit! To cherish any higher faith in human nature is social heresy.

But here is a man actually serving the public without pay and calling it fun! And there are thousands like him. In fact the old profit incentive theory is hoary humbug. Every man worth counting gets more enjoyment out of doing something than of having something.

When those who serve find out one another and get together, those who grab will be out of a job.

Science and Religion

DURING the past summer a joint statement upon the relations of science and religion was issued by a group of forty-five scientists, religious leaders and men of affairs. Almost every one of the men who signed the document is known nationally and internationally. We have seen only partial reports of their deliverance and so print herewith the statement in full.

Its purpose is to assist in correcting two erroneous impressions which seem to be current among certain groups of persons. The first is that religion today stands for medieval theology; the second that science is materialistic and irreligious.

"We, the undersigned, deeply regret that in recent controversies there has been a tendency to present science and religion as irreconcilable and antagonistic domains of thought, for in fact they meet distinct human needs, and in the rounding out of human life they supplement rather than displace or oppose each other.

"The purpose of science is to develop, without prejudice or preconception of any kind, a knowledge of the facts, the laws, and the processes of nature. The even more important task of religion, on the other hand, is to develop the consciences, the ideals, and the aspirations of mankind. Each of these two activities represents a deep and vital function of the soul of man, and both are necessary for the life, the progress and the happiness of the human race.

"It is a sublime conception of God which is furnished by science, and one wholly consonant with the highest ideals of religion, when it represents him as revealing himself through countless ages in the development of the earth as an abode for man in the age-long inbreathing of life into its constituent matter, culminating in man with his spiritual nature and all his God-like powers."

What is Our We-Group?

ONE of the problems of Americanization is the fact that an almost impassable gulf seems to be fixed between American ideals and those of the vast foreign communities which lie like islands in the midst of our great cities. America stands for the regnancy of the individual. The corner-stone of our national existence is the doctrine that men are created free and equal as far as their political rights and their right of self-determination and individual advancement are concerned. The class of foreigners who in recent years have come by the million to our shores is for the most part composed of those whose horizon is bounded by their village and its immemorial customs, who are held to an unprogressive round of activities of a simple character, and who resent all initiative or innovation on the part of an individual member of the community. It is said that to many of those immigrants from southeastern Europe their nation means nothing to them and their village everything, a Polish or Albanian peasant denying that he was a Pole or an Albanian and declaring that he belonged to such and such a village. To him "we" meant not his nation but his village; that was his we-group.

The problem for Americanization is that it is not a simple question of teaching open-minded, reasoning and progressive people to adjust themselves to the new life around them here, but to do anything at all for simple-minded, self-centered peasants who coagulate into groups and large segregated communities, perpetuating the crude customs and backward ways of their own people and of centuries past, impervious to a progressive or American idea. There is something tragic about it all, with the exploitation of these simple folk, sometimes by big business interests here, but most often by some of their own countrymen, smarter than the mass of their people but unscrupulous in using the confidence of their countrymen to swindle them. But the deepest tragedy is the willingness to live in a mental and social vacuum, shutting themselves out from that freedom of mind and body, that power to think and decide for oneself and to progress to the highest station which is the soul of America.

But we seem to see as we look into the matter a little more deeply that these poor unassimilable peasants are not alone in suffering from the obsession of too small a "we-group." Some of the richest and most fashionable native Americans live in small groups possessed of means and moving in what is called society. They are not precisely ignorant of the existence of the millions of other people in America, but they never think of them as comprised under the signification of the personal pronoun we. That pronoun, their we-group, is as limited as that of a Balkan peasant village, and oftentimes it seems bound by as rigid and senseless group customs. Where that is the case, and it notably is not always so, the exclusive society group are as much in need of Americanization as the other.

But what shall we say of a local church which looks after itself and its comfort assiduously but refuses to treat seriously the need of a Christless world? In their plannings they omit or belittle everything but their personal interests. It is the most significant thing about Christianity that just to the extent that it gets thorough hold of a man and possesses him it enlarges his we-group until it no longer means his family alone, or his business partnership, or his town or his local church, but reaches out through desolate places of need and irreligion in his own and other lands until its periphery is no less narrow than the wide world Christ came to redeem.

"If God be your partner make your plans large."

Needs Parental Discipline

WHO said that family discipline is becoming too indulgent?

A father in New England is reported to have beaten his son into unconsciousness with a rope, which indicates a need of parental self-discipline. Parents in at least sufficient number lose their temper, rant, scold, swear and cuff outrageously. The way of many a child is hindered by parents fit for a mad-house or penitentiary. Sometimes such a child falls into the hands of a board of children's guardians; sometimes into the hands of the devil—parentally damned.

A father who knows how to control himself has no need to beat his son with a rope.

An Educational Program for the Young People's Society

By Frederick B. Igler

THE young people's society movement is a matter of quite recent growth in the life of the Christian church. The church services had developed too much into a "being-talked-at-and-talked-to" sessions, and frequently without any understanding, especially on the part of the youth, of the method of the attack or its content. The Sunday school for the most part had developed into another listening station where youth was supposed to receive moral instruction. There was great danger of our Christian young people suffering from an overdose of predigested religious education prepared after denominational formulae. The spirit of rebellion was in the air.

Careful diagnosticians of the church who were precursors of our modern spirit observing the tendencies at work in our youth, wisely decided that youth must be emancipated in religion; that service in the kingdom commenced not with maturity of years and acquired piety, but with youth; that the vigor and enthusiasm of youth must be given outlets of its own and that in some way through their own efforts, young people must be saved for the church and the kingdom. Out of such a background the movement of the young people's society was born.

The purpose of their being as conceived in the adult mind is well stated in the constitution of one of the denomiational groups—

"The object of this union shall be to secure the increased spirituality of our own young people; their stimulation in Christian service; their edification in spiritual knowledge; and their enlistment in missionary and social service activity. To promote good fellowship and a closer spiritual and social relationship between various societies of young people in this vicinity, and to hold before them a high ideal of Christian service."

Or in the Christian Endeavor pledge known to us all—

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do; that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and to read the Bible every day and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and mid-week services, unless prevented by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Saviour, and that, just as far as I know how throughout my whole life I will endeavor to lead a Christian life. As an active member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at and to take some part aside from singing in every Christian Endeavor prayer meeting unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master. If obliged to be absent from the monthly consecration meeting of the society I will, if possible, send at least a verse of scripture to be read in response to my name at the roll-call."

The reading of these two objectives or purposes with which I have burdened you, especially the latter, must have convinced us all that the young people's society movement was thought of as an integral part of the church and still very much in need of adult supervision, direction and limitation and that it was trying sincerely by developing initiative and providing for expression to be a training department for lay religious leadership in our churches.

The movement took root and under the guidance of consecrated friends it spread rapidly. Just about as rapidly, however, having served its day, it became stereotyped in method and practice. The old programs savored of a sameness and a type of bibliolatry. Too frequently they provided no area for discussion and gave birth to no new ideas. They were far removed from actual, modern life and thought and were for the most part propagators of certain religious biases and denominational prejudices.

A noticeable decline in enthusiasm and interest has brought about in recent years an attempt, by large conventions, modern methods of approach and institutes, to revitalize and readapt the movement to our day, and yet just recently a trained observer and worker in the religious field has said that "The movement is moribund and will remain so until it awakens to its place in the movements of our day."

It is particularly with this movement as we meet it in churches ministering to our university students that we are at this time most concerned.

The minister to students immediately faces in the local church society some real difficulties. He must remember continuously the old "town and gown" theory or fact, for the great majority (the exceptions are very few) of the societies with which we deal get their backbone and continuity from year to year in the local non-university group. Too, the student ministers must be careful of interfering in a program promulgated by the denomination with which he works, especially when its field secretaries desire to put it across on the local society. Teaching the students loyalty to the church as we hear it in some of our groups stays many an impulse toward change. Then, too, we are being reminded constantly of the differences in our students relative to the religious background from which they have come and the courses in which they are entered and the changes of mental attitude brought about by the same.

Despite these evident difficulties the student ministry throughout the country is trying to redefine and reshape the movement in university church centers so that it will make a distinct contribution to the religious education of the student group. A summary of reasons gleaned from the answers of a number of student ministers scattered over the country as to their definition of the objectives which ought to underlie the young people's movement in student centers would resolve into the following:

1. Provision for a wholesome social life.

2. Training in moral and spiritual lay leadership.

3. Training in service.

4. Education in knowledge of Christian literature and the faiths of all mankind.

5. Presentation of world and home needs in all phases of life.

5. Recruiting for definite religious life service.

7. Presentation of and acquaintance with great men and women of action.

8. Training in loyalty to normal church life.

The student ministry would combine these eight or more objectives and say: "This is what we believe ought to be the contribution in religious education of our young people's societies in university centers to our students." One student minister advanced as a compressed definition of the opportunity of our societies to contribute to the religious education of our students the following: "The teachings of Jesus at work on the background of comparative religions—"

Now as to the programs by which the student ministry endeavors to get across these varied objectives which seem to be essential in a religious educational program—There are some student ministers who still think that the best results can be obtained by sticking to the programs formulated for societies in general by national denominational boards, while others say: "We never use a denominational help because we believe in developing self-reliance and thought and, too, we want each leader to do some constructive thinking on the subject." And others—"The C.E. topics ordinarily published are not suitable for students and many of them are not suitable for anything. They are not discussable." The latter point of view seems to be the prevalent one and with this idea in mind, the programs are built up or constructed.

In the first place, our programs, to come within the field of any contribution in religious education, must be so phrased and framed as to tie up the life and thinking of the student with the problems as he meets them on the campus, class-room or city. They must be practical. For instance, an announcement reads that "Prayer" is the topic for discussion Sunday evening at 7 p. m., but as such it is far removed from the interest of the average student. Phrase it, however, "Prayer—what did it mean to Jesus? What does it mean to you? Did the "Praying Colonels" ever win a football game by prayer?" And you have made a contact with the student mind. The students' field is the world, but we must be careful to find counterparts in our subjects in student campus and city contacts.

Then, too, in the second place the program must be constructed along lines of intellectual honesty and candor if it will serve as an agent of religious education. There must be no pussyfooting or compromise. Many student ministers believe an aid to such honesty and candor is to have one subject or problem the dominant note of the month, and that the first presentation should be by an outsider, an expert in the field if possible who will open avenues of thought on which student leadership for the next three Sundays will prepare discussions.

Another suggests that a way to develop this honesty and candor is to have every theme presented from the point of view of the actual, and the ideal, the difference being marked and the way toward the ideal made plain. Still another student minister says we ought to be more interested in creating thought during university days than in driving home conclusions. "Our students ought to be shaken out of their mental religious lethargy. We must shock them," wrote another. Question boxes where religious problems are answered, thinks another, is a way of approach toward this intellectual honesty. The forum method has also been found serviceable. Too, the use of the study class before the society meeting where in small groups under competent leadership, the Bible, books about it, or others related to any modern problem are studied and rewritten if need be, is found the way out in some places.

A circulating library of modern books bearing on the problems of personal and social religion and the message of Jesus with an attempt on the part of the student minister to meet particular student needs ought to be a contributing factor toward intellectual honesty in making our programs really educational and religious. Whatever way we approach the make-up of our program, there is an apparent unanimity of opinion that it must be rational, intellectually stimulating and honest.

Religious education demands further that our programs be spiritually dynamic. We must get our students beyond the point of intellectual coldness or where they are mere collectors of data. Taking part in the expressive side of the meetings, or going as society groups or teams to hold services in nearby churches or institutions are helpful to students in rooting their spiritual convictions. Taking part in the staging of dramas of religious themes and characters and missionary plays is also found worth while in making permanent and serviceable spiritual tendencies. The source of all spiritual power—quiet communion and meditation, must not be overlooked.

There are many of our student ministers who are finding that a large and varied and wholesome social program is both necessary and effective in bringing to the fore this spiritual dynamic. One of our number has written: "Our primary aim in young people's society from the point of religious education is social in the larger and better sense. If our young people make the right sort of friendships in our society a Christian community or society is formed. We need have no fear as to the spiritual development of those who have such Christian associations." While another writes: "The social life of our society makes possible the expression of the spiritual dynamic which we must have."

What a variety of methods and means are used for this training in religious fellowship which surely is a phase of religious education! Suppers free and teas at 10 cents; social hours, sketches, fireside gatherings, Sunday evening church "open house," and so on ad infinitum.

"Not ours" says Henry Cope "to make these youth this or that as to party or sect, but to make them makers of a new world, to give them purpose and task that can only be conceived in spiritual terms, only carried forward in the religious motive of love. College youth needs a faith for the future great enough to satisfy imagination, high enough to call out the depths of devotion and spiritual enough to make them spiritual in seeking its splendid ends."

The contribution of the young people's society movement in our student centers to the religious education of our students will depend largely on these factors of practical coherence and interest, intellectual honesty and spiritual motivation of our programs.

SAMPLE PROGRAM FOR YEAR'S WORK IN A SOCIETY

Suggestions for Meetings

1. Keep the circulating library at work throughout the year.

2. Remember the necessity of the opening devotional period in every meeting.

October: The College Budget—(The dominant note)—
—Have an outstanding professor speak on what he did with his time during his university life—followed by forum period.
—Then for three following Sundays discuss Why did you come to college
—what are you driving at?
—What ideals are you going to cultivate at college?
—What friendships form?
—What are you going to do with your time?
—What is the stewardship of life?

November: Our Industrial Life and Christianity—(the dominant note.)
—If you dare, have a laboring man speak his heart.
—You can easily get an employer to present his views.
—Have discussion on: Open vs. closed shop—is there an argument?
—Is our industrial system creating classes?
How can we get a child labor law past Supreme Court?
—What is a Christian attitude toward industry?
—How important is unemployment?
—Is the way of "Golden Rule" Nash, the Christian way?

N.B.—(Have a class studying, under competent leadership, a good book on this problem previous to the Society meetings.)

December: Home Missions or a Purified Nationalism—(the dominant note.)
—Make use of pastors working among foreign-speaking people.
—Have tours to mission centers or places where mission work is needed.
—Make use of a supper and Christmas tree and gifts for orphans. Have some of them present to make it real and let them talk.
—Have discussion center on:
—Can we win our cities?
—What is the matter with our immigration law?
—Church cooperation in home mission work? What progress?
—How does our rural problem present a home mission need?
—Is the Mormon movement a menace?

January: A few Fundamentals of our Faith—(the dominant note)
—Have month of discussion on
1. Why I believe in Jesus.
2. Why I believe in the Bible.
3. Why I believe in giving justice.
4. Is what I believe a true test of Christianity?

THERE are two striking indications of Christian growth. One is humility—not humility before men—but before God. You have no more right to humble yourself before another human being, unless you have wronged him, than to allow him to humble himself before you, unless he has wronged you. But the more Christlike you become, the more you feel the need of greater Christlikeness and feel dependence on him.

The other mark of real growth is an increasing consciousness of power, a power whose source is in Christ "the power of God and the wisdom of God." The humbler Paul became the more confidently he could say, "I can do all things in him who strengtheneth me.". "If God be for us, who can be against us?. He that spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?"

—Calendar Third Church, St. Louis.

Have each theme presented by students, discussion following. I have found it worth while to give out to those present the pamphlets on same written by outstanding scholars and published by the University of Chicago.

February: Foreign Missions or Christian Internationalism—(the dominant note).
—If a live, wide-awake missionary is available, hear his story.
—Have foreign student meeting
—special invitations to same.
—Have supper for selected foreign students and representative American group.
—Present missionary play.
—Use stereopticon of foreign mission work.
—Discussion on —Place of missionaries in the revolutions of the world?
—What is Ghandi's relation to Christian message?
—What ought to be attitude of U. S. toward Turks?
—In what country is mission work easiest?
—Shall I be a diplomat, a foreign trader or a missionary?

N.B.—(Have a class study under competent leadership for four Sundays a book on foreign missions before meeting.)

March: Race Prejudice—(the dominant note.)
—Get an object of race-prejudice to reveal his heart reaction at first meeting. Discussion on following Sundays of month.
—Is any people God's favored folk?
—What are the poisons of race prejudice?
—What are forms of present day slavery?
—Are there other race-prejudices than between black and white?
—Why do we discriminate against orientals in the West?

April: Men and Women of action—(the dominant note).
Presentation of live men and women at work now in home or foreign field or in lay service.
Have outstanding bankers, lawyers, business men and so on who are doing outstanding work in the kingdom to talk, about the stimulus by which they go forward. The idea of contact with these people is all important.

May: Life and My part in it—(the dominant note).
Get students to face up with the world's needs, and make decisions for life service on this background. Present what ought to be guiding factors in life decision.
—How can I best serve the world of need?
—What is a "call"?
—Is there place for a life decision for any other than definite Christian work?
—What is the cost of discipleship to Jesus?

Birth Throes of a New Republic

An interview with Dr. Jacob Speicher

WHAT is the present militaristic situation in China?

At the present time there are three or four military leaders standing over against each other with great forces to grasp the leadership of the country. First should be mentioned Wu Pei Fu who holds in his grasp central China and faces his old enemy Chang Tso Lin to the North, and the patriot Sun Yat Sen to the South. It is said that Wu Pei Fu favors the election of Marshal Tsao Kun as president of the republic and efforts are being made at the present time to force his election by a rump parliament, a large body of the original parliament having left Peking for Shanghai, and who favor the election of Sun Yat Sen as president. The contest is largely for the grasping of the presidency and what it means in terms of special privilege, political preferment, etc.

The character of Sun Yat Sen appeals to the educated Chinese far more than any other leader in China because he stands for enlightened government. As a matter of fact all the educated young men stand by Sun Yat Sen and there is hardly a Chinaman who knows anything about America who doesn't support him. He has met with one difficulty, the going away recently of his lieutenant, Chen Kwing Ming, who played the traitor and went over to Pei Fu. This fact may cause Sun Yat Sen's downfall.

Do these contests result in bringing about chaotic conditions among the people generally?

The fact that the Chinese have had for thousands of years inherent, democratic local self-government, is the saving element of the present situation. Fighting may go on terrifically in one county and leave another county unimpressed and unmoved. There will be fighting on one side of a stream and the farmers will be planting their sweet potatoes and rice on the other side and say that the fighting on the other side is none of their pigeon. So also with the business man. Only one factor is proving to be a source of irritation to the well-to-do Chinaman and that is the bandits. They are a real menace. They will kidnap the children of merchants and hold them for ransom. But it is their own lawless element which can be subdued as soon as a regular government is organized. This has always been the case in China when there has been a change of dynasty.

This was largely due to members of his cabinet who were influenced by militarists urging a change of administration, and to the pressure of the militarists around Peking. This is the second time he has resigned. He has thus proved a disappointment to the Chinese who at one time idolized the man. He was the great hero of China. The man who is now being groomed for the presidency is Tsao Kun a man who is militaristic, not of the modern type, and whose government would not by any stretch of the imagination be ever comparable with the enlightened government that Sun Yat Sen would give the Chinese. In the first place, he does not have around him the educated young men who would dare to introduce new measures in the government. George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson were youths who dared offer their lives for new ideals and to bring about new conditions in America. So today, there is no man that has these idealists around him as Sun Yat Sen, and for that reason it would be a pity if Sun Yat could not have at least a trial at the presidency. He's the ideal of the youth of China who consider him the George Washington of the Chinese. Most of these militarists are men who were schooled according to the old traditions and for that reason there is no progress in Peking. It's different with the type of men who gather around Sun Yat Sen.

IN this interview with Dr. Jacob Speicher of Swatow, THE BAPTIST has been able to secure some interesting comments upon conditions in the far East.

Doctor Speicher has already entered upon his twenty-ninth year of service in China. For seventeen years he was engaged in regular evangelistic work on the Kityang field, for five years he was connected with the China Baptist Publication Society of which he is still editorial secretary, and for the past five years he has been director of the Swatow Christian Institution.

What is the financial situation?

The financial situation in China is almost hopeless. For some time the government has failed to pay the amounts due on bonds. The government has also failed to pay the outstanding amounts that were due to foreign governments. Defaulted payments add millions of dollars of interest to the great debt that rests upon China. There is no hope at the present time of China's enlarging her income nor of foreign nations coming together to work out the schedules agreed upon at the Washington Conference allowing the Chinese to increase their tariff on imports. Certain nations are holding deposits made by the government because of some misunderstanding between the Chinese government and these nations, therefore making the financial situation all the more strained. The condition has become so critical that all of the members of the cabinet have resigned and stepped out and only one or two assistant secretaries are holding together a form of government. It would seem to the outsider that the United States must sooner or later step in with a grant or loan to the Chinese government by which it can begin to function and pay off its immediate debts that seem to hamper the very first steps toward orderly government.

When we speak of the government, we speak of something that is almost entirely separate from the interests of the average man on the street. And here is the great menace to the continuance of a republic in China—the indifference of the average intelligent citizen. David Yui, the chairman of the National Y. M. C. A. of China, and perhaps one of its most prominent statesmen, is today doing a splendid piece of work in going from city to city arousing the interest and patriotism of the chamber of commerce of each city. It would seem to the outsider that he gets in the closest contact with the best elements of the nation and I hope he will succeed.

What is the attitude of the missionary generally to the assertion of the native leadership in the churches?

Missionaries who are really worthy of the name rejoice in the determined stand that the Chinese leaders are making today for a larger share in the development of church life in China. The missionary, if he understands his position, will say with John the Baptist, "I must decrease, but he"—the spiritual body of the Lord Jesus Christ, the church in China,—"must increase." There is great optimism among the Christian forces in China. There is no room for pessimism. On the contrary there is great optimism in China, for when speaking in terms of the kingdom of God men have a long look. When the Boxers had finished their bloody work killing 20,000 Chinese Christians and several hundred missionaries, their wives and children, it seemed as though missionary work was done to death for a generation or two, but the blood of the martyrs has always been the seed of the church of God. And so, while after the Boxer revolt there were barely 50,000 Christians left, there are today in the Protestant churches the number of nearly 400,000 Christians. This is an increase of over 300,000 Christians within two-thirds of a generation. We know from church history that in the days following the Ascension when the disciples went out, it took 100 years of work in the Roman Empire before the church of God numbered 300,000 souls. What took 100 years has been accomplished in twenty-three years in China. Of course when this number is put over against three or four hundred million of population, we at once are brought face to face with the stupendous task that awaits us. It is essential that the Chinese should evangelize their own people and the very fact that some of us who have seen the very beginnings of this work have lived to see the day when the Chinese college and seminary men are eager to take upon themselves this task and say "The task is ours," fills us with thanksgiving to God. In a religious movement a development of prime importance is strong high schools and colleges and seminaries. To think of conquering a civilized people like the Chinese with anything less than the best methods of education, is simply to fool oneself. The very best institutions in China today are the Christian institutions. They are filled to overflowing and the attendance could be enlarged twice the number if they had the facilities and money. One of the outstanding schools in China is our Shanghai Baptist College. The development of this institution under the leadership of President F. J. White has been simply phenomenal. It may be said that there are more men preparing themselves for Christian work in this institution than in any other college in all China.

The Fall Church Program

By Arthur M. Ellis

IT is not my desire to offer a program that can be accepted as workable in every church without change. My own pastoral experience in a country church, in a small village, in a rapidly growing foreign section of a New England city, and in a New York suburban community has proved the impossibility of accepting any set program as of equal merit for all types of work. Still, such experiences have also demonstrated the fact that a program similar to the one here offered will be found valuable in practice. In other words, this is just a testimony from one pastor to his brethren.

Most pastors feel that our church year is too short, and is getting shorter each year. The coming of the automobile and the multiplication of summer pleasure resorts are, together, making for a larger annual migration of people from our city churches during the summer months. And even in the country parishes the busy weeks of the summer are relieved by Sunday trips rather than by faithful church attendance. So we are each year being faced with the necessity of planning a more enthusiastic rallying of our people for a united start as early in the fall as possible.

Personally, I have never favored beginning the church year with a whole year's work planned ahead. Such a plan is apt to produce formality of service and a lack of spontaneity that is difficult to overcome. For that reason I believe we show greater gain if we make our fall program complete in itself and as simple as possible. The following outline has proved very valuable.

1. Leader's Conference.
2. Rally Day.
3. Social Rally.
4. Fellowship Campaign and Every-Member Canvass.

The Leader's Conference

Few things have proved of more genuine value than the bringing together of the real leaders of the church for a conference early in the fall—early enough to make it possible, at this time, to plan for the Rally Day service. It is not wise to limit the membership of this meeting to officers of the church only. It should be made representative of the entire membership: trustees, deacons, Bible school, men's work, women's work, young people's organizations, and, in addition, there should be present some outstanding members of the church who, though holding no official positions, are in reality leaders in the work.

Many men have found it valuable, at this time, to discuss a program for the year that is at hand. Each man must use his own judgment. Personally, I believe it is far more profitable to leave all detail programs to smaller committees, and at this conference to discuss definitely the Rally Day services and then spend the time in reviewing the year that is past rather than in laying detailed plans for the year that is to come—examine the work done and decide regarding things that should be tried again; frankly consider those things that should not be repeated; ask for suggestions concerning specific services, for instance:

a. What shall we consider the best plan for our evening services this coming year?
b. Are the mid-week services as useful as they should be? What changes would be valuable?
c. What organizations are most fully justifying their existence? What society is failing to fulfill its purpose? Wherein lies the remedy?

THE author of this program is pastor of the Union Congregational Church, Richmond Hill, N. Y.

This program of activities was laid out for his own church and was printed by the Commission on Evangelism.

We find that our church workers appreciate such articles because they give hints as to the methods used by successful workers.

Rally Day

A full discussion of Rally Day is then in order. Plans can be made, committees formed, and the work carefully planned. In order to make Rally Day mean all that it ought to mean for the church, every organization represented at the conference should be represented on the Rally Day Committee so that eventually the service will mean not merely a rallying to the church services or to the Bible school, but will be an enthusiastic starting point for all organizations.

For instance, we have on our Rally Day committee, representatives of the men's club who not only get out a special letter to the members of the club telling them of the Rally program but who, before coming to the meeting, obtain authority from the finance committee of the club to pledge their share of rally day expenses for the joint work. The same is true of the women's committee. After the general plans have been made, each organization creates its own Rally Day machinery—which means a committee on organization. Again the men's club committee will serve as an example of what I mean. It usually consists of seven to ten members. These men select from the list of club members twenty captains and assign to each captain from a dozen to twenty men. The captain himself is at liberty to create lieutenants, among whom are again subdivided the captains' quota of members, so that with very little work for any one individual, every member of the club not only receives a letter from his officers, telling him of Rally Day and asking him to be present, but receives a personal call from a lieutenant soliciting his hearty cooperation. The same thing is done by the other organizations.

The result is that Rally Day means practically a 100 per cent start for the year and the enthusiasm thus created at the beginning of the season, itself creates a momentum that does not die out until the completion of the program. The value of Rally Day depends very largely on the degree of detailed organized effort made during these preliminary days. Use all the advertising material you can, but I firmly believe that this personal type of preparation is the best advertising any church can use.

One thing is essential to the full productiveness of such a conference—a willingness to put into operation the worth-while suggestions offered. While speaking of this matter at an association meeting recently, a layman said: "What you said about the leaders' conference appealed to me, but the holding of the conference is not enough. Our minister is the best leaders' conference caller in the state, but he always loses the minutes of the meeting—at least no one ever hears of them again until the following year. We have now come to the place where the invitation to such a conference makes us smile and causes us to ask 'What's the use? Nothing will come of it."

The Social Rally

Too often the opening of the year's work drags because while the church services and the organization meetings start on Rally Day, or before, the social life of the church starts very unevenly. In due time each organization plans some social event, but no one of the societies reaches the whole church membership. Now say what we will concerning the place of the social activities in the plans of the church, we must admit that man is a social creature and few things do more to create his interest than opportunities to meet people and to make friends. We can well learn a lesson from the various lodges—they thrive on friendship and grow on brotherhood.

A church well known to me once had a disagreeable experience. Its membership became badly split over the effectiveness of the minister. For years the life of that church was a disgrace to the community. Finally the minister left and, of course, his successor had to be chosen. The prospects were gloomy. However, several of the men got together and said: "Before we set out to find a new minister, let us have a get-together social." They planned a great social event which most of the members of the church attended, and the result of that night's work was a new spirit in the life of that people, and when the new minister was finally called he was unanimously called and there began an era of prosperity seldom equalled in the life of any church.

Something of that kind can be done for any congregation if, early in the church year, a committee composed of the real leaders of the church will plan a general get-together social for the entire congregation. One church I know puts the task up to the young people's society. Every October a reception is given by the young people of the church, to the older people of the congregation. The Ladies' Aid supplies the refreshments and the young people provide the entertainment. It is a yearly event and is planned for and worked hard for and great is the general interest aroused by it. No charge is made so that none are so poor that they cannot attend, and no one is rich enough to buy reserved seats because there are none.

Still another church has what it calls "New Members' Evening" when the members received during the year provide the entertainment and the members received the previous year serve the refreshments. The whole membership of the church come as guests. This plan has the following advantages: First of all, it solves the assimilation problem because, in the preparation for the night the new members learn to know each other remarkably well and by the night of the reception none of them are any longer strangers to each other. Furthermore, when the entertainment is over, the older members have a fair idea of the talent that has been received into membership and consequently know just what kind of work they can expect from the new recruits, and by the time refreshments have been served both old and new members have become thoroughly acquainted.

The Fellowship Campaign

In order to make the fellowship campaign of greatest possible value to the church a great deal of detail work is required. Experience has proved that a good first step is to appoint a small committee of energetic men and get them thoroughly converted to the idea, and make them leaders in the whole operation.

The value of a fellowship canvass will be enhanced if the whole church is thoroughly prepared beforehand for just what is to take place. Let me here illustrate what I mean. After giving the details of such a campaign at a meeting of an association, a minister came to me and said: "I did not have your experience with the fellowship campaign. My people 'caught on.'" I asked him what he meant by "caught on" and he said: "They found out that the visitors were sent by the church and did not merely drop in for a friendly visit." In other words this minister, serving a church of about six or seven hundred, had really tried to put one over on his congregation by sending out fifty or sixty people to call on the rest of the church, with the idea that they were going to pretend that they were calling on their own initiative. Naturally you cannot put anything over on all the people. In fact, the greatest benefit of the campaign is only realized when these visitors go with the authority of the church, to call in the name of the church. For that reason a letter should be sent to every member of the congregation, telling them what you have in mind.

What are the values received from such a campaign? First: The benefit derived by the visitors themselves. Each year, after the day is over, many of the new visitors say to me: "I dreaded to make the attempt but I would not part with the experience of this afternoon for anything. It has been the most satisfying thing that has happened during my experience with the church." This is the universal testimony of men who, having been prepared for the day's work, enter into the task in the right spirit and come in contact with a people thoroughly prepared for their visit.

Second: There is created in the congregation an esprit de corps that can be obtained in no other way. The whole church appreciates the fact that an effort has been made to give them a part in the formulating of the church policies and in the offering of suggestions for the welfare of the organization together with the chance for fellowship when no financial demands are made.

Third: The creation of a list of prospective members. Such names are apt to be of far more value than are names obtained in any other way because you not only know where to go for your next new members, but you already have individuals in the church interested in winning those new people for membership. In that way it is possible to set the majority of your present people scanning their neighborhoods looking for material for which they will get the credit. It is surprising how eagerly members will go out after other people if the task is put up to them and if, in return, they know that the credit is to be theirs.

Finally, such a campaign creates machinery that can easily be used by the trustees and the committee on benevolences for the joint financial canvass with which we close the year's work.

Reception of Members

Four weeks before the date announced for the reception of members, a small membership committee of active men and women, working with the minister as chairman and advisor, can very quickly go over the list of prospects and by personal visitation, have the people ready for the deacon's meeting. Some formal application blank will be of great help. The ones supplied by the Commission on Evangelism can be used, but if the expense can be met, a new one ought to be printed by each church. The peculiar value of the application blank is seen, first, in the feeling of confidence with which your membership committee will work if they have a specific task to perform—it offers them an opportunity to come definitely to the purpose of their visit and, as our insurance men say, to "close the contract." Second, the prospective member receives help from this method in that he agrees to join a church that has definitely articulated its creed. He is saved from the embarrassment of feeling that by joining the church he is inheriting the prejudices or the vagaries that have in many communities attached themselves to ideas of church membership. A church that can say, "This is what we believe" and "This is the thing that we stand for in this community" will, in these days, make a great appeal to progressive men and women.

The committee should not only report the results of their work to the deacon's meeting, but should also accompany their friends as sponsors. Again the value of this method is twofold; it gives the sponsors themselves a realization of what they have done—a sense of victory; and it gives the people sponsored an added sense of friendliness—they are not going before a strange committee alone, but are going with one who has traveled that way before.

All that now remains to make the fall work complete is to set aside a definite date for the receiving of new members because, after all, this is the thing we have been working for. Our program will have accomplished very little if it has merely meant the moving of machinery for its own sake. The purpose of all our organizing and all our planning must be the deepening of the spiritual life of our people. But that can never take place as an end in itself. A deepened spiritual life always means active searching after those who are not yet members of the church. The locality in which we work will have to play a large part in deciding the particular method we use, but whether we are going to receive five new members or fifty, it will pay to make the date of their reception a special service, when the new members themselves will feel that their coming into the church does make a difference, not only to themselves but to the church; and the older members will be stirred to exert themselves and welcome the new comers in their midst.

I do not believe it wise to have this communion date coincide with any great date of the church year. In order to keep a maximum of interest among the people, the great days of the church year ought to take care of themselves and every opportunity to create an additional red letter day ought to be taken advantage of, because in that way you have more rallying points throughout the season.

We are now approaching the end of the year with one definite period of activity closed. One goal has been reached. And after a very brief period of rest we put into operation a carefully prepared Lenten and Easter program.

Clients Who Are College Graduates

By Roger W. Babson

FOR some years this organization has been emphasizing the importance of the spiritual factor in business. This has not been done in the interests of any church or sect. Moreover, it has at times been awkward and embarrassing to take a stand on such a question. It is only human nature that, after taking such a stand, we should be seriously scrutinized and criticised. Thus not only do we get no thanks, but we have subjected ourselves to a great deal of unnecessary criticism. On the other hand, we could not have been honest with clients without frankly telling what statistics clearly demonstrate to be the fact.

If statistics have taught us any one thing during the past twenty years, it is that the spiritual factor is the greatest factor in the growth of communities and nations. It is well enough to talk about land, labor and capital. They all have their uses and functions, but of themselves they are helpless in bringing about prosperity. Land, labor and capital existed long before there was even civilization. Many great nations, such as Babylon, Persia, Egypt, Greece, Rome and even Spain, have possessed land, labor and capital in abundance, but fell for want of this far more important quality—the spiritual factor.

I'm looking out of my window at the highway where a man is at work with a pick. The highway is the land; the man is the labor; and the pick is the capital. This is a perfect illustration of land, labor and capital; but it also illustrates that such a combination can be used either to destroy or to construct,—to break up the road, or to repair the road. The man can use the pick to make the ruts and holes deeper, or to fill them up. It all depends upon the purpose, the motive and the desire of the man. Purpose, motive and desire are spiritual factors and are all important. Land, labor and capital, and even education, are mere tools which can be used either for good or for evil. Two men graduate from the same law school and get the same degree.—one uses his education to uphold the law, and the other uses his education to help men evade the law. Two chemists graduate from the same technical school in the same class—one uses his training to make foods pure; and the other uses the same training to adulterate foods.

However, the purpose of this letter is not to prove our proposition. You know that this position is absolutely right Rather, the purpose of this letter is to urge you to use your influence in having our young people at school and college taught the truth of the situation. There is altogether too much materialism in our schools and colleges. The public documents and the private reports of many professors are harmful. The talks which many professors give, sneeringly referring to the spiritual forces of life, are very harmful. This materialistic trend is distinctly dangerous and every college graduate should use his influence to stop it and check it. Those of you who are actively interested in alumni associations should at once bring this question to the front. Members of boards of trustees have a wonderful opportunity to do something effective in this connection. When asked to contribute to a college, find out what the college is teaching as to the fundamentals of business.

Conditions are getting so bad that they must be checked. It would be far better for the country if some colleges were closed up altogether than to have them continue to teach the materialistic economic doctrines that they are teaching today. Failing to teach the importance of the great spiritual forces is not only doing the country much harm, but is giving the students an idea which is absolutely wrong economically and statistically. The great need of the hour is more sane religion. Education, unless guided by a religious purpose, is a very dangerous possession. Giving wrong economic teaching to the average man is like giving a gun to a maniac.

One thing more—do these colleges realize by whom and for whom most of them are founded? If you will study the history of the college from which you graduated, you probably will find that it was originally founded by a group of God-fearing, praying men. If you will turn to the original charter of your institution, you will probably find that it was founded to strengthen the youths in the fundamentals of righteousness. Ah! how far some of these institutions have fallen from the high ideals for which they were originally founded. Hence my appeal to you college men to use your influence to get the colleges back again on the track and have them again teach what they were originally founded to teach,—namely, the true fundamentals of prosperity!

German Impressions of the World Congress

By Herr Georg Hammann

THE third Baptist World Congress now belongs to the past. We have all returned to our respective fields of work, but our thoughts constantly go back to that great and memorable gathering at Stockholm. It occurred to me that it might interest the readers of your paper to know how the German delegation saw things.

About sixty delegates had been appointed and, as far as I know, all were at Stockholm except one or two who lived in the Ruhr district, and who did not get permission to leave it.

We are very grateful to our American and English and Swedish brethren for their financial help. Hardly one of us could have attended without it. It would have cost us from six to ten millions of marks, and that is more than a Baptist preacher can afford, notwithstanding the decreased value of our money.

It was very fortunate for us that the Congress met in July; if it had met in August only a few of us could have attended, as our money has decreased in value from 180,000 marks to the dollar to more than five millions to the dollar. This amounts to a catastrophe in our business life, and is the cause of strikes and plunderings and troubles of all kinds.

The greater part of our delegation met at Berlin on Thursday, July 18, and here we had a memorable meeting at the First Baptist Church, with an American party, the so-called Wicker party, consisting of ninety-nine delegates from the Southern states of the United States. The writer of this letter had to act as interpreter for about half-a-dozen of these brethren, and at the close of the service Doctor Ramsay, who presided at the meeting, with a heart full of love and sympathy, stepped to the pulpit railing where I stood, and, throwing his arms around me, and pressing me to his heart, said, "I consider myself the representative of these Americans, and I consider you as the representative of this German audience, and as such I press you to my heart."

This meeting gave us a foretaste of things to come, and I want to say right here that the same wonderful spirit of love and unity and sympathy and brotherly kindness pervaded all the meetings at Stockholm.

While the nations of the world are quarreling with each other, and while envy and hatred and strife and selfishness are rampant, and doing their deadly work, the Baptists of all lands and all nations unite in one place, are together with one accord, "like the disciples at Pentecost," and prove to the world that brotherly love and sympathy and kindness and good will among men is a reality, and not a fantastic dream of idealists. I think the angels of heaven rejoiced over this uncommon spectacle.

On Friday morning, July 19, we left Berlin on a fast train, and arrived at Sassnitz, the last station on German soil, late in the afternoon. Here we took the steamer for Trelleborg, Sweden, At Trelleborg we again took the fast train that left that place at about 10 p. m., and reached Stockholm at about noon on Saturday. It interested us very much that it became dark at about eleven o'clock, and that the new day dawned at about two o'clock. At four o'clock the sun shone brightly. We were also struck by the fact that we saw but few people at the stations and elsewhere, coming from such a densely populated country as our own, where crowds of people are at the stations any hour of the night as well as of the day. Excepting Malmo, I think that I did not count more than a dozen people on this twelve hours' ride.

At noon on Saturday we arrived at Stockholm, were met at the station by Swedish brethren and sisters, and taken to the homes to which we had been assigned.

And now the meetings of the Congress; what great occasions they were! Great crowds in that large, fine church—thousands of fine looking men and women from all parts of the world, many of them in their national costumes, then fine speeches and fine sermons from our Baptist leaders, and, above all, that wonderful spirit of brotherly love that characterized all the proceedings.

I have heard and read much about Douglas Brown and Fullerton and Carlile and Marnham and Blomfield and Ewing, of England; and of Mullins and Love and Franklin and Brooks and Truett and Gill and Scarborough, of America; and of Benander and Bystrom and Moden, of Sweden, and it was exceedingly interesting to me to see and hear these men. It was one of the greatest privileges of the Congress.

I met and talked with a number of them, and the greatest impression upon me was not made by their great speeches and sermons, but by their childlike simplicity and the brotherly and graceful way in which they treated a perfect stranger.

About the only thing that we did not like was the speech of our representative at the roll call on Saturday afternoon Mr. Hoefs is the editor of our paper and a good and able man, but in this case he missed it altogether, as well in the tone of delivery as in what he said The rest of us did not at all feel "poor" and "downtrodden," but as joyous and hopeful and enthusiastic as anyone in that meeting.

Our negro brethren from America attracted a good deal of attention, and they seemed to be very much pleased

One day I approached a group of them standing before the church, and turning to the blackest of them, asked him how he liked Sweden. His reply was: "If I had to decide about that I'd stay here all the rest of my life." I believe he meant what he said. We asked them to come to Berlin after the Congress, and take part in a meeting we had planned for Sunday. They promised to come, but did not. We wanted our people to hear them sing "Mary, don't weep and moan for Pharaoh's army been drowned;" and that song about heaven, in which they pronounced the word heaven in quite a new way by putting about a dozen m's phonetically pronounced at the end of it.

Our party had planned a visit to Gothenburg to see the exhibition, but when we heard that the communists were going to make trouble, we returned home the shortest way. Quite a large number of Americans went with us to Berlin. Some of them, especially the ladies, were anxious to know whether it would be safe to go out on Sunday. We found Berlin more quiet than usual, as a great many had gone to Potsdam, where the communists had great meetings.

Our meeting at the First Church was a great success. Doctors Truett, Scarborough, Cree, Gill and Wicker, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, Doctor Beaven and Senator Upshaw spoke to us; our choir sang the great Hallelujah from Handel, then we shook hands with our American friends and brethren and parted, to meet again, at Toronto or in heaven. "Hallelujah, the Lord God omnipotent reigneth," is the thought that inspires and supports us in these times of want and trouble and unrest in this country.—Baptist Times and Freeman.

A Jungle Tour in Congoland

By Ruth MacDiarmid

ONE hundred and twenty miles from Sona Bata with no other white person for miles around except Mr. MacDiarmid, and he has gone on a two days' journey further on—thus I sit in a grass hut writing by the gleam of my lantern. We have been four weeks getting here and our experiences have been as varied as the ground we covered. There have been restful, cool forests, grassy plains and stretches of burning white sand where the sun seemed not quite satisfied to beat down upon us but caught us on the rebound as well. There have ben restful, cool forests, marshes where the men sank to their knees in mud and came out with leeches on their legs, little streams which we crossed on logs, larger streams bridged with poles and a network of vines, and others where we had to take off shoes and stockings and wade.

For the past three weeks we have been in Bayaka country. Our Belgian Congo Mission has had work out here only four years, I think, and even now we have comparatively few teachers. A native teacher, who goes to a strange tribe is a real foreign missionary, for he feels as far from home as we do from America. In the villages that have had no teaching, we found that the women were timid, usually taking to the tall grass as we approached. In two instances women threw themselves to the ground and rolled over in the dust. We thought they were epileptic, but were told that they were going through some fetish trick to counteract our evil influence. In one village the witch doctor, who had been imbibing palm wine, made such a fuss that the chief thanked us quietly for what we had said and for the Victrola music, and excused himself. We also went to our beds. The witch doctor disturbed the peace half the night.

The Bayakas do not bathe, they rub their bodies with soot and oil. Dirt adheres to this and then they oil themselves some more. The result can be easily imagined. Their hair receives the same treatment; consequently many of the older people are bald. These are the only cases of baldness I have seen in Congo.

Our little teachers have all been delighted to see us, for they grow homesick. One, hearing that we were not planning to visit his village, took a days' journey to beg us to come. He wanted us to see his school and said the chief would be greatly disappointed if we did not visit him. His pleadings prevailed and Mr. MacDiarmid went back with him, sending me on the way we had first planned. Mr. MacDiarmid had a hard trip for this detour gave him a number of very steep hills and his push-push was worse than useless. Still he felt repaid, for he had a great reception and the people always have more confidence and faith in our sincerity after we visit them. They are quick to grasp the fact that we, unlike other white people in their country, are here to give and not to get. "Surely," they say, "this spirit comes from God and people who have it must have a message worth listening to."

Our destination on the outward trip was to be Zikomba where Antoni and his family have been witnessing for four years. Many a long hard tramp we had before reaching there sometimes starting off early in the morning without breakfast and taking advantage of the carriers' first stop for rest to boil the kettle for a cup of coffee and eat a picnic lunch of bacon and eggs, then on again until noon and then perhaps until six o'clock. One day we crossed no stream from nine o'clock in the morning until we reached the village at six o'clock. We had a bottle of boiled water but the carriers had none, as no one knew the road and no one was prepared for such an unusual experience. In the afternoon when we were all huddled together in the shade of a little gnarly tree that had fought for life against many a grass fire, with the men sore of muscle and sore of spirit, Mr. MacDiarmid made them all laugh in spite of themselves by dividing our last two oranges into thirty-two pieces and passing them around with a few jestful words and antics.

That night we reached Kintombo-Yamfu, the largest village we have seen in our district. We counted 217 houses. No Protestant teacher had ever been there and except for a building with a rude wooden cross on it, one would surely think no teacher of any creed had ever entered the village. We stayed there two days, giving the carriers a little rest and twice daily preaching the gospel in a very simple way. The last evening we were there, the chief and some of his headmen came to request officially that we leave a teacher with them. Even a young man who had been on a Jesuit station for some years came and said, "I want to hear more of this teaching. I have never been told this story as you give it and I am just like the other village people, living in darkness." We were able to grant their request for we had with us a fine young man who was willing to stay where he seemed most needed. So Nsingi remained in Kintombo-Yamfu. The next morning when we left he walked a long way with us. He looked pretty much alone in the world when we said goodbye to him. He will build his house and then send for his wife and baby.

Does the gospel change the heart of the African? Antoni has given me the story of his experiences in Zikomba. For the first two years the heathen people, who of course formed the whole population, did not want him or his message. He was a stranger, far from home, yet they gave him no help whatsoever. They would not sell him food or anything else which he needed, although they had it to spare. Many a time before his first crop of beans and corn was ready, he and his family were hungry. But he stayed on sowing the seed carefully, slowly and tactfully, until gradually he could see signs of encouragement; a weakening of the old prejudice and a more friendly attitude. Last evening he pointed a woman out to me, whose face had previously impressed me, and said, "She was the first to be friendly. She loaned my wife a cooking-pot and later gave us some bread." Now every grown person in the village but one, is a professing Christian. Their bodies and hearts have both been washed. As we descended the hill into their village between two long lines of welcoming fellow Christians a few days ago, we could not help noticing the way their bodies shone. I have studied these people during the days that I have rested here with nothing else to do and I see joy and hope and the love of Christ shining on their faces.

Their village is clean. Although many of the houses need rethatching, the chapel is one of the finest native chapels in the whole district. The people said, "We wanted the church built first, for we would see shame to neglect it and make our own houses nice with our first efforts." Their houses will now receive attention. Every child of school age is in school; that includes every one from children five years old up to married

SEVEN years ago Mr. MacDiarmid did pioneer work in the very district of which his wife is writing. He was the first Protestant missionary, either native or foreign, to give the gospel message to these people. On the tour described, he and his wife baptized 500 persons. In the whole Sona Bata region between June 1, 1921, and May 31, 1923, there were fifty-eight baptismal services with a total of 7,006 baptisms.

men with babies of their own. Between thirty and forty have learned to read. All know by heart most or all of Mrs. Frederickson's splendid little catechism. Their gifts of money do not make a large sum when we turn it into dollars and cents, but on high where the heart is seen and understood, these mites are reckoned great.

There is no market for produce. The people have plenty to eat but no hoarded wealth. They dress principally in grass-cloth or skins of animals. A five-pound loaf of native bread sells for less than one cent. An egg costs one-third of a cent. I look at them, their children unencumbered with clothes, the older ones with so few earthly possessions to worry about, and I feel that we in our nervous haste and with our many petty cares have a lesson to learn from their simplicity.

The teacher's wife has told me how lonesome she was at first away from her relatives. "But," she said, "these women have become my own people. They have been so good to us all. My mother and sisters could not have done more."

Nothing in the world but the gospel can lift these people out of their superstition and degradation. The gospel can and does, make them new creatures.

It Really Works

BY BENJAMIN STARR

LAST fall the pastor of one of our large city churches of more than 1100 members conducted a stewardship campaign in his church as suggested in our denominational program. I quote the following from a letter received four months later.

"One of our men turned up in prayer meeting on the twentieth of December for the first time in my knowledge. He said something like this to explain his presence, 'I realize that I have not been treating the Lord as I should. Sunday I signed one of the stewardship pledges. If I am going to be a steward in money matters, I must also be a steward with my time and my place is in prayer meeting and I want to be found in my place.' He is an able man and his influence is great and will be greater. He hasn't missed a prayer meeting since that day.

"He has recently assumed the chairmanship of our missionary committee, and is pushing the attempt to secure thank-offerings that will enable us to meet what is due on the New World Movement pledges, which would have been impossible unless he had taken hold of it.

"He is a living witness to a new interest in every phase of Christian life. Without saying a word he is having a marked influence on other men. They are saying to themselves and to me, 'What's happened to Mr. A.?' or 'Isn't it wonderful about Mr. A.?'"

Last October the writer spent a Sunday with one of our progressive rural churches to help the pastor start a stewardship league in the church. In the afternoon we drove out to see a farmer who thought he could not tithe, as he never knew what his income was. We made a few simple suggestions for figuring the tithe, pointed out the material benefit it would be to know whether his different lines of work were paying or not, and assured him that he would receive an added spiritual blessing if he would try it. A few days later he and his wife handed signed tithing cards to the pastor.

Six months later the writer met the wife and asked how they were getting along since they began tithing. Her face lit up and she replied something like this, "Oh it is simply wonderful. Now we sit down every night and go over the day's transactions, putting down every thing we have paid out or taken in, and it seems just as if the Lord was sitting right there with us and we were really doing our work together." And then she added, "My husband and I were talking it over a few nights ago and saying that we had never gotten along so well in our lives as we have since we really began taking the Lord into partnership in business matters."

In one church the writer visited last fall, a certain man hesitated about signing the stewardship card as he did not see how he could afford to tithe. He was earning $100 per month, and he and his wife were each paying 50 cents per week into the church. There was a doctor's bill of $500 that had been hanging over them for some time which they had not been able to pay. They finally decided to try tithing any way.

Eight months later we met the pastor of the church who told us they were very happy over their experience. Since they began to tithe, they have been contributing $18 per month into the church instead of the four or five dollars they used to pay. They have paid off the doctor's bill and for the first time in their lives have started a bank account. At the same time they say that they have lived better than ever before.

Their personal testimony is, "When we began to realize that we were stewards of God's money instead of owners, we began to plan systematically to use it all wisely and to be careful how we spent it." The results have been as stated above.

A Summons to Northern Baptists

The Bible and Missionary Conferences

Northern Baptists are entering upon one of the greatest enterprises that the denomination has ever known. As you read these lines, a movement of tremendous significance is about to begin. It is not a campaign for money, not a campaign for members, but a movement for something far more essential than either of these. It is to set in motion a vast tide of missionary spirit that will spread around the world.

Most of us have already heard of this vital movement, under the unassuming name of the Bible and Missionary Conferences. The months of October and of November are to be given over to a nation-wide series of meetings, to be held throughout the Northern Baptist Convention, with thirty-five large cities as focal centers. From these conferences a spirit will radiate that should extend to every one of the 9,034 churches in the convention field, and to every member of the denomination.

Dr. W. H. Bowler, of the General Board of Promotion, now organizing plans for the Bible and Missionary Conferences, tersely tells why it is necessary to make these conferences a success.

"The world is ripe for evangelism as never before," he points out. "Millions of men, women and children in our own country and in other lands are waiting for a tide of missionary spirit to carry them on to God. At this crucial moment, the time has come for our denomination to renew its covenant with Christ."

That is the outstanding feature of the Bible and Missionary Conferences which are about to begin. They are for the renewal of our covenant with Christ. Through our interest in them and our work for them we will show that in this modern world with all its perplexities and its complexities we still hold to our belief in the paramount importance of the Bible and missions—his Word and his work.

No efforts are being spared to secure the highest possible results in these conferences. Thirty-five conference secretaries have been chosen, picked men, appointed temporarily for this important task because of their energy, their organizing ability, and their previous successful denominational service. Recognizing the supreme importance of a chain of conferences that may be instrumental in the advance of evangelism all through the world, their own pulpits, or their businesses or their daily walks of life are lending them to this great task. Some of them have already begun work in the cities to which they have been assigned, and the others will shortly begin. The task that awaits them is so stupendous that they will need the help of every Northern Baptist in the entire convention field.

The Bible and Missionary Conferences will offer Northern Baptists everywhere a rare opportunity to hear some of the best-known speakers of the denomination, who will appear in the various conference centers to present the spiritual needs of our own and other lands. The list includes a score or more of nationally known men and women as well as missionaries from the home and foreign fields, who will bring vivid pictures of the millions waiting for Christ all over the world. A feast of spiritual refreshment awaits the entire denomination.

But the main issue in the Bible and Missionary Conferences is not what we can get, but what we can give. The responsibility for the success of the conferences rests not merely upon these leaders, but upon each one of us. A special task, something which no one else can do for you, something without which the Bible and Missionary Conferences cannot bring the highest possible good to the greatest possible number awaits you—and this means you. Perhaps the conference secretary in your

BETTER FIGHT DEVIL THAN ONE ANOTHER

How the Christian heart is saddened by some of the headings to articles in the Christian papers and magazines! In a Baptist denominational paper of recent date we find an article headed: "Is America Plunging Hellward." Also in a Christian magazine of reputation comes an article with headings: "The Battle Within the Churches"; "Fundamentalist versus Liberalist"; and still from another Christian magazine we get advance notice that next year at the Northern Baptist Convention will be fought the greatest battle (or war) known to ecclesiastical history.

Now, Mr. Editor, please tell me—what is to save the people of our nation for Christ if the churches are to spend their time battling over petty differences of opinion? Can we expect the young generation reared under such influence to look upon the church as their spiritual guardian? I can understand Doctor Batten's feelings when he said: "It almost makes one despair of the churches. Millions of people have been confused by the controversy." Let us pray that God may intervene, and that the sweet spirit that was so manifest at Atlantic City in our convention may continue; "that the wheat and the tares may grow up together until the harvest." Has not Christ made plain a general principle for our guidance in all doubtful questions arising between man and man and that will not retard the kingdom of God upon earth? Truly we are forced to say, "who is sufficient for these things"?

Let us cry to the only wise God for wisdom that we may deal with others as we would like others to deal with us. Would this not be real Christianity? This does not merely forbid all petty malice and a revengeful spirit; it does much more. It would settle difficult points which are continually arising in a denomination like ours, and would prevent the necessity of laying down endless rules for our conduct in specific cases. It sweeps the whole debatable ground with one mighty principle.

One fearful truth should arise in our hearts and minds: am I helping God to establish his kingdom upon earth, or am I a block? The Lord Jesus gave to us a general warning against false teachers in the church. They will rise up. They began in the days of the Apostles. Even then the seeds of error were sown. They have appeared continually ever since. We must be on our guard. There are thousands who seem ready to believe any thing in religion if they hear it from an ordained minister. They forget that clergymen are not infallible. We must weigh all teachings in the balance of Holy Scripture for guidance. May we all bear in mind our Lord's warning: "the world", "the devil", and "the flesh" are not the only dangers. There remains yet another—the false teacher. Happy is he who prays over his Bible, and knows the difference between truth and error in religion. There is a difference, and we are to know it, and use our knowledge.

The parables meant to teach us that men, really convinced of the importance of salvation, will give up every thing to win Christ for the world; and the miracles are an unanswerable proof of our Lord's divine power; a sufficiency of the gospel to meet the soul-wants of all mankind. I fear there are some who are attempting to add to the word of God. Whenever a man takes upon himself to make additions to the scriptures by word or meaning, he is likely to end with valuing his own additions above scripture itself. All false doctrines and teachings our Lord has declared should be opposed; that their final destruction is sure.

There may be some spiritual ignorance even in a true disciple of Christ. He said unto Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan." These things are meant to teach us that we must neither regard good men as infallible, because they are good men, nor yet suppose they have no grace because they differ in their interpretation of the scriptures. He may err, but has he faith and love toward our Lord Jesus? If so, let us deal patiently with him. What he sees not now, he may see hereafter. Like Peter, he may now be in the dark, and yet, like Peter, enjoy one day the full light of the gospel. We believe that most of the advocates on all sides are good Christian men, and would not consciously do anything contrary to God's will, but would rather promote a Christian fellowship. We must believe that most of them, on all sides, are honest in their convictions; but some are in error. Who, we are not to judge. We should follow the light given to us through the scriptures prayerfully sought.

ONE CROWD MAD; THE OTHER SICK

A few weeks ago I sent a trifling paragraph to you about an old Baptist preacher who, upon visiting the Roger Williams spring in Providence, R. I., insisted on taking a drink from it. I thought that you might take a casual personal interest in it. You casually printed it in The Baptist one day.

Now, in consequence, I find myself in No Man's Land, with a hot barrage on either side. They are firing letters at me.

One group of critics finds in the story an unseemly sneer at the old man's reverence for the ancient religious landmarks. The other thinks that I am holding him up as a exemplary pattern of the unreasoning devotion that would drink to the memory of Roger Williams, no matter how full of germs and other things the water might be. So, one crowd is mad, and the other sick.

One disgusted correspondent exclaims: "What does the blamed thing mean, anyhow"? I am blest if I know what it means.

FORMER COUNSELORS

In a recent issue you gave two items about our ministerial brethren which were of special interest to me. One was about Dr. E. M. Poteat having gone to Shanghai College, China; and the other about the death of Dr. Lathan A. Crandall, late editor-in-chief of The Baptist. Each of these men had been a former and beloved pastor of mine, Doctor Poteat in the Calvary Church of New Haven, Conn., in 1888-89, and Doctor Crandal! in the Memorial Church of Chicago for four years. When I knew Doctor Poteat he had but recently graduated from the Louisville Seminary, after four years instruction as a pupil under that prince of teachers, Dr. John A. Broadus. The fathers of both these ministers were Baptist ministers, and I recall with pleasure the very able and spiritual sermons I heard several times from Doctor Crandall's father in the Memorial Church.

LAWS OR RULES?

The word "law" means the statement of unvarying order in which events follow one another, or the order in which some authority commands them to follow. The moral law is the statement of the order in which moral events proceed. They are the expression of moral principles that are in the nature of things a part of the moral constitution of the world.

A "rule" is the specific direction concerning the way that "law" is to be applied to individual cases. A "law" is like a mathematical principle; a "rule" is the direction that the principle is to be used in solving the problem. It is a law that the circumference of a circle is about three and one seventh times the diameter. But when we want to know the circumference of any specific circle, we must follow a rule to find out.

So in ethics. It is a law of Christian ethics that we are to do unto others as we would that they should do unto us. But when we desire to know what is the right thing to do in any specific case, we must think out the problem and apply the law. When we have done that, we formulate a rule to follow.

The Bible contains—expressed in many ways—the laws of moral and religious life. They are embodied in the history and the biography of its books. They are

Back to Old-Fashioned Work

By Benjamin Jenne

In recent years I have been much cheered by the optimistic note in the communications of Roger W. Babson, the great statistician.

But of late months I have been wondering if he would not issue a warning; and it has come. In a statement, issued generally through the press, he sounds a note of fear and admonition. He seems to think that if the younger generation is not more strictly trained to habits of industry and thrift, and more thoroughly inoculated with a sense of its responsibilities in the world, we must pass into a period of depression and possibly serious disaster.

Now this has been observed by many of us in recent times—many of us who could scarcely write or speak on the subject without coming under the imputation that we were "grouchy" toward the rising generation. I myself, have been reminded many times in conversation that the older people of every age made the same complaint about the youth of their time. But I have noticed that in many cases the very citations were of instances where the decline in the integrity of youth was but the precursor of national ruin. So the argument countered against me was usually its own cure. However, as Mr. Babson, who is accepted as the business men's guide, philosopher and friend, has seen fit to speak, we may hope that even the most careless of our observers will give some heed.

One complaint is that the youth of today is interested only in spending. It makes little difference from what source the money comes. If a boy earns a salary he wants it all for himself. If a girl is a producer, she wants to spend her whole salary on her wardrobe. In both cases if relatives can supply additional funds these are in demand.

But I differ from most of the critics in placing the moral responsibility. Some time ago I read in the Christian Statesman that the older people were to blame because the youth of today goes only as far as youth is permitted—just as youth has always gone as far as older people allowed. That is the exact truth, and it fixes the moral responsibilities upon fathers and mothers, upon guardians, and upon all the mature people in society at large. In one of your editorials you said not long ago: "Wake up American parents, you are becoming afraid of your own children." That is where the fault lies. Everywhere one sees that American parents are waiving their own standards in order to accommodate themselves to the whims of youth, whims brought in from the outside. After it is too late, American parents hold up their hands in holy horror and say: "We can't do anything with Jimmie or Maggie. We have to let them have their own way or they will leave home."

No nation can sustain the burden of idleness and luxury which is now saddled on the United States. The work of the world has to be done. And it is the work of the world which carries the whole tremendous burden. If we withdraw a large element from industrious life and put it into costly idleness, we are thereby doubling the weight upon the remaining moiety.

The cure for most of our economic ills, for many of our moral troubles and for some of our physical ailments, is work—old-fashioned work. No nation can long live without it.—The Christian Statesman.

International Sunday School Lesson for October 21

ISRAEL IN THE MIDST OF THE NATIONS

Lesson: Joshua 1:1-4; Isaiah 2:2-4 19:23-25; Ezekiel 5:5

Golden Text: Isaiah 45:22

Introductory

The time of this lesson is forty years later than the preceding one. Joshua, successor to Moses, is with Israel on the far side of the Jordan. Under his leadership the conquest of the Promised Land began.

The Lesson

The death of Moses was not a signal for halting in the progress of the nation; rather was it a call for action. Through the call of Jehovah Joshua was appointed to take the place of Moses: "Moses my servant is dead; now therefore, arise, go over this Jordan, thou and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, to you have I given it, as I spake unto Moses." But only a small part of the territory was conquered, for this was a promise with conditions and the faithlessness of Israel prevented its complete fulfilment.

The supremacy of the religion of Israel is dealt with in the next portion of the lesson text: "The mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established on the top of the mountains . . . and all nations shall flow unto it. . . . Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

With enemies to the right of them and enemies to the left of them Isaiah's vision for Israel is nevertheless of a time when these Assyrians and Egyptians shall join Israel in the worship of Jehovah.

The position of Jerusalem is a strategic one for reaching the peoples of the world—"I have set her in the midst of the nations," near the highway between Assyria and Egypt.

Leading Thoughts

1. If there is no vision the people will perish. 2. Can a man be a Christian and give no thought to his neighbors on the right and on the left of him? 3. We see in Israel the beginnings of God's leading of his people. Says Emerson: "Our whole American history appears like a last effort of divine Providence in behalf of the human race."

What Is Christian Citizenship?

CITIZENSHIP DAY
Isaiah 62:1-7

By Francis C. Stiffler

It happened in Chicago.

I glanced out of my office window. Over on one of the leading hotels, someone was raising a flag. Or rather, two flags, for as they unfolded in the breeze, there was the American Standard, and above it the flag of Japan! Plainly someone had blundered.

In a few minutes, down they came, to reappear promptly, with the stars and stripes above. Again someone had his misgivings that something was wrong. Soon came the manifest compromise; each flag flown by itself on a separate mast.

The story came out that evening. The Japanese ambassador had arrived in town—was staying at that hotel. An enterprising janitor, blessed with instinctive courtesy, but not with a technical knowledge of the use of flags in diplomacy, was doing his best! And today that janitor knows what you and I know—that no flag is ever allowed to fly above Old Glory. No flag—excepting one. The white pennant with the blue cross—the church flag—is the only ensign which, by the army and navy regulations, is flown above the national banner.

The nation recognizes that greater, broader, more universal than nationality itself, is the message of the Church.

Our nation does not expect its Christian citizens to put its claims above the the claims of Christ. It expects its Christian citizens to make the claims of the nation conform to those of Christ. Every since the great war, men of vision have been saying that there is nothing that can save the nations today, except the practice of the Christian gospel. This was the burden of a little two-page letter appearing in a recent issue of the Atlantic Monthly from the pen of ex-President Wilson. This was behind Mr. Harding's conviction that our nation should enter some form of world court. This is the highest form of citizenship which any government can know.

It makes the imagination stagger to think what would result if every earnest Christian citizen of the United States should do as Isaiah says in these verses—should refuse to keep quiet till American righteousness should become its great characteristic and it should serve all the nations. America has the wealth and intelligence and the power to befriend all the nations. For less than the cost of one battleship, she could institute and endow a complete public-school system in Mexico whose government it has recently recognized. Of course, there is no precedent for doing this sort of thing. No, and there was no precedent for all of the great acts of Jesus when he appeared as the Saviour in Galilee. He turned the world upside down, by doing everything in a new way.

Christian citizenship means loyalty to one's country which is bound up in the higher loyalty to Christ, against intrenched selfishness which now controls so much of our government. This means a battle royal; it means that some Christian men must get into politics, some more must get into journalism and all must be intelligent and unfailing voters. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, Oh, Jerusalem; they shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that are Jehovah's remembrancers, take ye no rest.....till he make Jerusalem a praise in all the earth." Christian citizenship for the young American might be paraphrased in words like these, "I have sent voters to thy polls, Oh America; they shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that are Christ's followers, take ye no rest till America prove herself the Christian friend among all nations."

Indiana Convention

Indiana state B. Y. P. U. held its first convention at the close of the assembly at Franklin College, Aug. 18-19. At the first session, which was opened with a praise service followed by a devotional period, a constitution was presented and accepted. The president, Mr. G. Ford Porter, then addressed the organization and appealed for full cooperation in the state B. Y. P. U. work. The evening address was given by Dr. Cromwell Kirby of Elkhart.

The Sunday afternoon session opened with an echo meeting of the Boston convention which was followed by an inspiring message by Rev. F. A. Hayward. The B. Y. P. U. of Connersville conducted a model B. Y. P. U. meeting which was helpful. The evening address was given by Rev. F. Singiser, former missionary to Burma. After the benediction the young people parted with the hope that they would meet next year in Lebanon.

Seattle Baptists should be proud of their Chinese B. Y. P. U. At the last rally they were awarded both the attendance and efficiency banners, an achievement which has been accomplished only a few times in the history of the Seattle district.

From Time to Time the writer has heard criticisms from some of the elect brothers and sisters regarding the activities of the young people who are members of the Life Service League of the Baptist Young People's Union of America. As usual, a great deal of the criticisms were just talk and were not based upon facts. We give below some items from the lives of the volunteers of Northern California and Nevada which speak for themselves.

Eva Fuller Berry, Sunnyvale, teaches a class of junior girls, who meet during the week and dress dolls for missions next Christmas. She is church and Sunday-school pianist and treasurer of B. Y. P. U.

Ethel Smith, Selma, is greatly enjoying teaching a class of four-year old boys.

T. Moore Atkinson made his decision for life service at the New York Summer Assembly in 1920. He is a student at the Divinity School in Berkeley. We also welcome Everett J. Dickson, Roy D. King, Paul Offenhiser, Sidney B. Cooper, M. S. McKericher, and Martin Leuchner, all of whom are preparing for their life work at this school. Our good friends from Southern California, Florence and Gladys Skevington, are also at Berkeley.

Ruth Cutler is quiet half-hour superintendent in the Berkeley, First, C. E. Her musical talent is used as C. E. pianist and in two orchestras playing at different services.

Baron McLean has retired from the presidency of the San Joaquin B. Y. P. U., his expectation being that he will take up college work again in the fall. Baron has been licensed to preach by his church. He is very active in local church work.

Lois Wilcox has recently been elected president of the Central Associational B. Y. P. U. Congratulations, Lois.

Earl Raisner, associational representative from Sacramento River the past year, is also active in church work. He hopes to enter college next fall.

Cora Lasher is serving in varied capacities, as follows: Sunday-school teacher, superintendent junior B. Y. P. U. and C. W. C., B. Y. P. U. group captain and stewardship committee, prayer meeting pianist. She studied at the summer assembly and put her knowledge to practical use in teaching classes in missions and personal work in her church.

Ruth Robertson, San Jose, First, teaches a Sunday-school class, sings in the choir, is a member of the evangelistic committee and assists in services conducted by the B. Y. P. U. in different places.

Gwen Thomas Bowen teaches an intermediate class and is superintendent of the cradle roll in the Santa Rosa Church.

Myrtie Jane Colburn is taking her first year of university work in the Modesto Junior College. Aside from several activities in her own church, Turlock, First, she is head of a story hour for some Assyrian children on Sunday afternoons. Real missionary work, this.

Inga Jensen is Junior B. Y. P. U. superintendent, a group captain, and member of the devotional committee.

The Home of the Brave

Chapter V. Courting Trouble

NO sooner had Richard Brave sat down opposite Veronica than he arose and pushed a button in the wall—twice. Hawkins appeared promptly.

"Tea, please, Hawkins."

"Yes, sir."

Very laughed.

"You're delicious," she said, "there aren't two men in all America who would think of anything as frivolous as tea. Oh, artists and musicians, possibly. But you're quite unique, aren't you? I might as well tell you that father is as much upset over the Battle of the Bathtubs as Patricia herself. He uses a much more uncomplimentary term than Pat used, however, Ricky!"

He laughed. "Let him! The point is, how do you feel yourself about all these five unused tubs in a neighborhood which needs them and wants them?"

Very made a little face at him: "I think you're being quite ridiculous. Fancy having every Tom, Dick and Harry trooping in to muss things up!"

Tea had arrived and they occupied themselves with details for a few moments, then, as Hawkins left the room, Richard Brave said: "My dear, suppose that when you had arrived this afternoon you had asked Hawkins if you could have a bath. He might have been somewhat surprised, but not dismayed. The tubs would all have been at your disposal, one of them, or two, or four, or five, exactly as your fancy suggested. Because presumably you have five just as good tubs in your own home. Yet for the tubless to come seeking tubs is ridiculous and unpardonable. But is it? I ask you—who is the ridiculous person in this house? People who need tubs and want tubs ought to have them."

The girl laughed. "Oh, Ricky, if you could see your own face! Tubs, tubs, tubs! You look so belligerent when you say it—as if it were a battle-cry."

"It is!" he said, taking another lump of sugar.

"And I suppose it isn't only tubs?"

He nodded. "No, the yard is the latest. It would be such a nice playground, Very. There's an apple-tree and a swing and a funny old rustic table that's been there since I was a boy. Not another yard is left anywhere; but ours is here. By rights, it ought to be used for something besides drying sheets."

"What does Pat say to the yard proposition?"

"I haven't broached it yet. It was the Madonna of the Kitten who really suggested it to my mind."

"The who?" she gasped.

He told her the story.

Veronica put down her tea-cup when he had finished and laid her hand on his knee: "Ricky, you used to do things like that for me when I was a little girl. I adored you for it! I used to swear I'd marry you when I grew up."

"Well, I wish you would," he smiled. "Is it too late now?"

She laughed. "Polite man! I suppose you'd take on a wife as sacrificially as you would tubless neighbors and dollless maidens. However, I've got a select group to pick from already, and you're quite safe! Although if you care to know it, I would utterly detest any Mrs. Brave, I've always known I would! And I feel it coming on more intensely than ever. The hateful critter would never understand you, Ricky. She might pretend about the tubs and the back-yard just to catch you, you big soft-hearted simpleton! But after the honeymoon—ugh! You just wait!"

"I intend to," he said calmly. "That is, unless you'll change your mind and take me as I am. Your insight into my peculiarities is so instinctive, that—"

"Let's talk sense," Very said. "I want to know what other parts of the house you think it wrong to hang on to for the purely Brave enjoyment."

"The parlors!" he cried. "Front, back, and inbetween. I have a nice little scheme for them, but I wouldn't dare to broach it yet to Pat. She'd faint."

"I have a strong pulse and a normal heart," Very assured him with mock seriousness, "I beg of you to tell me the new horror in store for this poor old house and its three parlors. What could you use them for, Ricky?"

He hesitated. A curious flush spread over his cheeks. "Courting parlors!" he answered quietly.

Veronica Antisdale stared at him. Her utter surprise showed in her face. "Did you—did you—intend to do the courting yourself, Ricky?"

"No!" he smiled. "Hardly that, my dear. I don't propose to you in one breath and arrange for further love-making in the next! But Very, you ought to take a walk with me after dark some evening. Just to the post-box and back would be sufficient. You'd be surprised to see the number of couples sauntering by with no place to go, no place to sit. I've been in their homes, just a couple of rooms for the largest of families, with no possible hope of privacy for the cultivation of friendships. And when winter comes on the streets will be too cold. They've got to go somewhere, Very. I don't know where. I don't like to think. It's a pretty significant term they use, those couples: 'Sophie is standing out with Josef,' they say. Standing out! They've no place to sit, and court as a girl deserves to be courted. In the very house where I used to court Beatrice Covington there are ten families living, and the sacred front parlor is now a home for a whole lively family of youngsters. No courting there! Well, I've got parlors and to spare. They could court decently and pleasantly in those parlors. I don't use them. Pat doesn't use them. We sit upstairs in the library almost altogether."

Very gasped. "Ricky, it's an adorable plan!"

"Of course it is! You don't have any trouble seeing your beaux alone, it's what a girl deserves: the right to be won in the open, with life going on around her. You see, I'd like to have a lot of coming and going here, with games and music and parties. I'm perfectly wild to try it out. Do you think it would work?"

"They'd be awkward and ill at ease at first, of course," Very said. "I suppose maybe they wouldn't want to come in. The men would hate the idea. Probably the girls rather like the other sort of thing."

"Like it? How can they?"

"Well, it would be all sort of mysterious and romantic, outdoors. Supervision wouldn't be so much fun. There wouldn't be any glamor, Ricky."

"Glamor isn't normal, my dear. They deserve something sane and sensible. They could grow to like it just as well."

"Yes, I think maybe they would. I'd love to see it tried out. I'd love to help do it. But of course Pat would faint, as you say. She wouldn't think it mattered about 'persons of that sort.'"

"Yes," sighed Pat's brother sadly, "that's her tone, and her words. I wonder sometimes what being a Christian involves. 'Thou shalt love they neighbor as thyself' is easier on the boulevard than for Patricia down here. And yet—"

Very put on her fur scarf and picked up her gloves. "I tell you what I think, Ricky, I think you're right. I haven't a particle of sympathy for Pat. She insists on coming into this neighborhood, she knows it's all tenements and factories and second-hand stores. But she thinks her pride of family will be sufficient to make her neighbor non-existent. It's absurd. It's snobbish. Nobody's too good for anybody else. Talk about being brave, who's really Brave in name and in fact: Pat, or one of those women you told me about living in one room, doing everything under the sun to earn money and make a home for her brave? Just think of the drudgery of it, the ugliness of it, day in and day out, with no shining light anywhere. I think it would be perfectly lovely to make this house a hostess house for them, a real little 'Home of the Brave—'"

"In the 'Land of the Free,'" he supplied. And then, he kissed her. "Very," he added, "you're adorable. You've got an understanding heart. How about staying for supper and tackling the lady of this house?"

Very shivered: "Never! Face Pat? You've got to do your own thrashing out, Ricky. She's so dyed in correctitude and decorum, she wouldn't welcome any hint from such a child as I appear in her eyes. But I think it's her duty to let you try your schemes. Indeed I do!" She backed to the door, and, turning, stood face to face with Patricia Brave. "You here?" she stammered.

"I've been rooted to this spot for ten minutes, you wicked girl!" the outraged lady of the house said. "I wish I knew how much of it is flirting with Ricky and how much is real belief in his absurdities. I couldn't believe my ears!"

Very smiled calmly. More calmly than she had dared hope. "As a matter of fact, Pat, you know perfectly well that I've adored Ricky since I was a mere baby, but I wouldn't trouble to agree with him about anything whatever if I didn't want to, because he's seen me in all states of mind from the day I was born. So I'm quite sincere in saying I think he has the most beautiful and the most Christian idea for the use of this house that I ever heard of. You know as well as I do, Patricia Brave, that if Ricky lived on the boulevard he'd be thinking up difficult things to help us all, he did it in France until that whole village turned out at the station to wave him goodbye. Flowers and everything. And you couldn't praise him enough, Pat. You filled your letters with it. Yet here he is just living out his nature, the same he's always had, being neighborly to 'persons of that sort' and you're scandalized. You make me—sick!" And suddenly, like a streak, the girl darted down the hall; they heard the front door slam and stood facing each other. Richard Brave! Patricia Brave!

The Heroine Who Ate Some Berries

THE berries were red. And doubtless you are thinking to yourself that she was not much of a heroine merely to eat a handful or so of berries; but when you hear why she ate them, and when, and where (oh, especially where!) then surely you will agree with me that everybody everywhere ought to know this story and honor the name of Kapiolani.

Kapiolani was the high chieftainess of a large province in the island of Hawaii. It was the year 1824, and if you could have heard the angry Hawaiian priests scolding the people you would have understood that something strange had evidently happened. It had! For the people had all become Christians, but were still such very new Christians that they trembled to hear the name of the goddess Pélé who lived up in mountains in the boiling crater of a fiery volcano. The priests, poor fellows, did not like having the people turn Christian and they thundered the most dreadful threats: "Pélé, the all-terrible, the fire goddess, will hurl her thunder and her stones to slay you! You used to give her hundreds of hogs, but now that you are Christians you give her nothing—Beware! Beware!"

And the people trembled. For all their lives they had known about Pélé, and how, when she was angry, she would pour red-hot rivers of melted stone down into the valleys burning trees, houses and people as the lava ran hissing and spluttering into the Pacific Ocean. The smoke of the volcano could be seen day and night—oh, Pélé was so very near! They had heard her rumble! They had seen the horrible destruction she could send! And they debated—should they or shouldn't they offer her hogs as in other years? For the Lord God seemed much further away than Pélé: they were frankly terrified.

But there stepped forth a brown-faced woman with strong fearless eyes. Those eyes looked with scorn at the threatening priests of Pélé! And that was surprisingly brave of her, for only four years earlier she had been a worshipper of Pélé, herself. She had bowed down to idols and believed every word that the priests said to her. But something a missionary had told her about the Lord Jesus had attracted her and won her over completely, until at the time of this story you could have found her almost any day in the huts of her humble followers as she—Kapiolani, their chieftainess—told them of the Saviour.

It was she, therefore, who now declared: "What is this Pélé that you should worship her? I will go to this mountain of fire where the smoke and the fire are forever belching forth, but Pélé will not touch me. The Lord God made that mountain and the fire inside it. You shall see how he will protect me."

The news spread quickly that the brave Kapiolain was actually going to defy the awful goddess, and her subjects implored her not to go. But her mind was made up and she set forth, with eighty of her loyal people traveling with her. Up and up they climbed, through lovely forests to the rocky lava beds which cut their feet cruelly.

"Oh, Kapiolani, go back home! Do not dare do this awful thing!"

"If I am destroyed you may believe in Pélé; if I live you must all believe in the true God, Jehovah.

And then she drew near enough to the volcano to feel its awful fires, and hear the rumbling roar and the terrible hiss of its spitting flames! She saw some low bushes with red berries as large as currants, and she broke off a branch and began to eat them, but the scandalized priests cried: "Stop! Stop! Those berries are sacred to Pélé. She will destroy you if you touch them. Stop! Stop! She will breathe her fire upon you."

But she was brave enough to eat more berries! The rest she carried with her up, up, up until she reached the place where the full horrors of that terrible boiling crater met her eyes. Three miles of fiery lava forever rolling and tossing its flaming waves against precipices of rock! Three miles of bright red surging lava, red hot and smoking, sizzling, hissing, roaring, with columns of smoke belching up from those endless fires which never died down and never were still!

It was enough to startle anybody, and even Kapiolani's bravery was severely tested. But she did not flinch, although the lava must have burned her feet and cracked beneath her weight.

She came to the very edge of the crater, the place beyond which no one dared go without offering hogs or fish to the terrible Pélé. But Kapiolani not only offered neither hogs nor fish, but she walked straight to the brink of the crater, eating more sacred Pélé berries tossing the others into the lake of brimstone. It was a terrible insult to Pélé! She pulled a New Testament out of her garments and read aloud some verses and then, brave woman that she was, she climbed down over the edge of the crater and let herself down, down, down toward that roaring eternal fire that swished and swirled so angrily.

Oh, surely never was woman so sure of the Lord Jesus! For she stood down in that awful place and prayed aloud to her Saviour praising him for his wonderful kindness to her, and acknowledging him as the maker of the volcano. Opening her eyes she flung stone after stone into the roaring fires,—a most frightful insult to Pélé, of course, yet in perfect safety Kapiolani climbed to the edge of the crater and returned unharmed to her trembling subjects.

"Jehovah is the Lord God, the maker of heaven and earth!" she cried.

"Indeed he is!" the people answered, awed, impressed, convinced.

And then and there, they sang a Christian hymn, the first which had ever sounded across that seething, boiling, angry crater.

Annual Meeting of the Central Conference of German Baptist Churches

By Charles F. Zummach

This years' conference met Aug. 28-Sept. 2, with the Burns Avenue Church, Detroit, Mich. It will go down in the annals of the conference as the largest in attendance in its history. There were over 300 registered delegates present from the various churches outside of Detroit.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. O. R. Schroeder, pastor of the Second German Baptist Church, Cleveland. His topic was: "The greater need of a better knowledge of God."

The reports from the churches reported progress. The amount of church building done during the past year was notable. The church at St. Joe, Mich., built an entirely new edifice at a cost of $50,000. The churches at Oak Park and Kankakee, Ill., each remodeled and enlarged their places of worship at a cost of $20,000. The Second Church, Cleveland, is undertaking extensive alterations to cost $15,000. The church at Nottingham, Ohio, has outgrown its present facilities and is erecting a larger and more modern building. Others are planning to build or remodel in the near future. Two churches have become self-supporting: the Immanuel Church in Chicago and the church at Nottingham, Ohio. One new church was received into the conference: the Immanuel Church, Bay City, Mich.

A total of 260 baptisms were reported, fifty-nine more than last year. The present membership of the conference is 5,767 a net increase of 191 over last year. Contributions from these members totaled $239,017 for the year, or $41.44 per member. Of this sum $53,125 was given for missions.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Moderator, Rev. Benj. Graf, Detroit; secy., Rev. Chas. F. Zummach, Kankakee, Ill.; treas., Mr. C. Coth, Cleveland; secy., for missions, Rev. J. Herman, Benton Harbor, Mich.

The report of our seminary given by Professor Ramaker showed that there are at present fifty-six students preparing for the work of the Christian ministry. Mr. H. P. Donner, who presented the work of the Publication Society showed that our new publication, the Baptist Herald is meeting with marked success. Our orphanage now houses thirty orphans, (St. Joe, Mich.) while thirty-eight widows with 130 children receive a monthly allowance. Lack of funds is hampering the work of our institutions. This includes the Old People's Home in Chicago, the report of which was presented by the Superintendent, C. A. Daniel. Rev. Wm. Kuhn, the general secretary, made an appeal for an increased contribution to the denominational budget.

A new organization for young people for more efficient service was effected. The president is Mr. W. L. Grosser, sec., Rev. A. Runtz, Trenton, Ill. Professor Ramaker gave an inspiring address on the subject, "Some Spiritual Verities from our Fathers." An advisory board composed of outstanding members, laymen and women from our churches, was appointed to devise ways and means for raising the necessary funds to meet the share of the conference of the denominational budget. Nov. 11 was designated as denominational day. We are sure that our churches will rally to the cause when the need is presented to them.

We left Detroit for our respective fields of labor with a new vision of the greatness of our common cause, a new inspiration for our respective tasks, a new faith in the final triumph of the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ and a new consecration to him, whose we are and whom we serve. God willing, we meet again next year at Benton Harbor, Mich.

Fighting Lawlessness and Crime

Detroit, like every large city, especially those upon the border, is going through the throes of increased law defiance in liquor selling, banditry, and murder, so much so that the law enforcing officers have openly acknowledged their inability to cope with the situation. There has been much publicity along these lines but our Protestant pastors have come back at the impotent officials with great vigor and effectiveness. Public sentiment is stiffening up. Ringing resolutions and addresses are demanding that the laws be enforced with greater faithfulness and determination.

Our great cities are indeed the serious problems of our national life. Our American Sunday has given away to the continental Sunday which is a hilarious holiday, not a holy day. The foreign-speaking elements are so overwhelming in numbers—in Detroit over 67 per cent.

The underworld segregates in the larger cities because their prey is there and their chief support in the political gangsters. These elements on election day are always out at the polls 100 per cent, while the so-called respectable people find it distasteful and inconvenient to vote, only about 25 per cent on the average, registering their will.

Detroit has had some outstanding political battles in the past along the lines of civic righteousness. Our Baptist brethren have ever been in the forefront in these contests, but too many have thought the prohibition battle was won when the laws were safely enacted upon the statute books. Laws do not enforce themselves especially those that attack the liquor traffic with all its merciless greed and corruption. Only public sentiment, strong, outspoken, ever alert, can win the day.

The Christian pulpit, the Christian church must everlastingly be on the job of fighting the battles against sin and lawlessness and corruption. Detroit again is arming for the fray. The laws can and must be obeyed. The large majority are decent, honorable folk, but valiant leadership is needful and this we have in Detroit.

Returns from His European Trip

Rev. H. C. Gleiss, general superintendent of the Detroit Baptist Union, has returned from his attendance at the World Alliance at Stockholm, and his later trip to Poland, Roumania, Hungary, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, and Germany. In these countries he visited our Baptist brethren, traveling third and fourth class that he might get close to the common people, and instead of living in high-priced hotels, became a guest in homes. He met many whom he had worked with in Pittsburgh and Detroit and spoke almost every day, sometimes four times a day, forging chains of fellowship and cheering the hearts of the persecuted in their struggle for freedom in the gospel. Upon his return, he spoke before the Roumanian Conference, held this year in Detroit, Sept. 1-4, bringing to the brethren first-hand information from their kindred and neighbors in the home-land. They were deeply interested. Since then, he is in constant demand to tell bits of his wonderful story. His visit to distracted Europe is already an asset in his leadership of our foreign-speaking Baptists in Detroit and Michigan. Our work among these elements is prospering splendidly, a work among the Ukranian group having been added this present year.

The D. B. U. Messenger for September has been distributed among the churches. This little publication will be issued every month hereafter. Its purpose is the unification of our work in the metropolitan area.

Our Detroit Baptist churches are faithfully endeavoring to minister to all who come to the city. We know we are not doing all that might be done if pastors and churches, from which the thousands who have come to Detroit have departed, would at once advise the Detroit Baptist Union, giving names, present street address and also something of their former church relationship. These names could then be distributed to the nearest church for a follow-up. The best interests of the individual and of the kingdom would thus be conserved. Holding on the members by the home church is a mistaken idea.

Rev. F. M. Dunk, state evangelist for the Illinois Convention, was chosen to lead the campaign of out-of-doors evangelism, conducted by the Detroit Council of Churches, the past summer. It was a trying experience in many ways as there were hidden forces of opposition to open air evangelistic preaching in the downtown congested centers and parks, but Mr. Dunk made good and won the love and appreciation of all the Protestant ministry. He was also a supply one Sunday in August at the First Church.

Some Fall and Winter Problems

The fall and winter work in the Detroit churches is opening with vigor and consecration. Each one has its own program of advance and several are already planning for physical enlargements. I have already mentioned that at the First Church, Highland Park, under the leadership of Rev. W. G. Coltman, is studying ways and means for meeting the demands for more room for preaching services and Bible school. The church own a small vacant lot adjoining its present site, but even that appears too small. Woodward Avenue is crowded to the doors since Doctor Hoag returned from his vacation. Strangers are thronging every Baptist church as quite 100,000 additional people have come to Detroit during the past year. The problem of properly housing our Baptist negro congregations is indeed a serious problem. The present year migration from the South has brought tens of thousands. Several new negro churches have been organized and all of the older churches are overcrowded. The old mother church, the Second Church, where Rev. R. L. Bradby ministers, has purchased adjoining property for enlargement purposes. The difficulties of the Hartford Avenue Church are being adjusted and its new building will be under roof soon.

Prayer and Consecration

It has become a custom for Baptists in the Detroit metropolitan area to open their fall and winter program with an all-day consecration conference. On Monday morning is held the Baptist Ministers' Conference each week during the working year. The consecration conference incorporates the ministers' meeting which has the morning hours. Then luncheon, followed by a session devoted to the women and their work and the Bible school. At 1 o'clock comes the laymen's program about the dinner tables, concluding with a mass meeting in the evening.

This year the morning hours were given up to a devotional meeting. Then Doctor Gleiss told of his recent visit to the Baptists of Central Europe. The fact that he visited Poland, Roumania, Hungary, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, and Germany, traveling third and fourth class on the railroads and living with the common people in their homes, gave him an opportunity that few travelers have of sensing the heart throbs of the suffering millions of the continent. In Detroit Baptists are working among these people with large success. The morning program was concluded with an address by Rev. J. J. Ross, of Boston, on "Convicting Power of the Holy Spirit."

After the praise service, Mrs. A. A. Altobello, wife of the pastor of the Italian Baptist Church, spoke effectively on "Our Brothers from Italy." She was followed by Mrs. W. H. Dorrance, on a heart-searching talk on "The Imperfect Vision." Then followed an address on "Our Sunday Schools and Young People's Work" by Ben T. Leonard. This was followed by 'The Stewardship of Training," by Wilson A. Holmes, director of religious education for the Ohio Convention.

After the dinner, W. P. Lovett, acting as chairman, introduced Judge Pliny W. Marsh, who responded to "Some Helpful Suggestions to Laymen." He was followed by Allen B. Crow, the efficient superintendent of the First Church school who told how the First Church was endeavoring to interest the laymen. Charles T. Kingston, superintendent of the Temple Church school, discussed the relations between pastor and laymen. Three gripping addresses.

Doctor Gleiss presided at the evening mass meeting. There were addresses, the first by Doctor Holmes on "Kingdom Stewardship" with special reference to the opportunity and privileges the Bible school afforded, followed by Dr. J. J. Ross who, taking Rom. 12:1 as his text, wrought out an address on the great theme of consecration of life. It was a great day and every one of the large audience went away with new ideals and purposes for the new church year.

Oldest Baptist Dead

Miss Bashua Cornwall, who had passed her one hundred and third birthday, recently died in West Allis. For ninety-two years she was a member of the Baptist church, having been converted when she was but eleven years of age. The family came from New York state in 1837 and soon afterward the father built a house for himself, but so constructed it that the little Baptist church organized in 1836, could use it for a meeting place. She was one of the members of this early church, the first one organized in Milwaukee. Six years ago at the meeting of the state convention in Milwaukee, she attended one of the sessions and was presented to the delegates. Miss Cornwall was an unusual woman, and had witnessed more human and material progress in her lifetime than had come to the surface in the ten previous centuries. She was the last of her family.

Some Resignations.

Rev. E. R. MacKinney, who has been pastor of the First Church at Eau Claire for more than five years, recently tendered his resignation. His leadership with this church has been of an exceptionally high order, and the church has been strengthened and unified in many ways. His plans for the future are not fully developed, though he expects to reenter the pastorate.

Rev. R. G. Pierson, who has been at Janesville as pastor of the First Church, is resigning to take effect the first of November. He has accepted a pastorate near Pittsburgh, Pa. One of the oustanding features of the pastorate of Mr. Pierson has been his use of the moving picture on Sunday evenings. He was one of the first in this state to take this up and has succeeded with it. Each year of his pastorate has witnessed a goodly number of additions, both by baptism and letter.

Rev. C. A. Boyd, who has been director of religious education and young people's work in the state for the past three years, has resigned to take effect the middle of October. He has accepted a position with the Temple Church of Detroit, as director of religious education and business manager. Mr. Boyd has developed the art of pageantry and dramatics in the Wisconsin churches to a high place.

All three of these brethren will be missed in Wisconsin.

State Convention

Rev. J. F. Ingram is doing field work in the state at present for the General Board of Promotion looking toward an enlarged attendance at the state convention at LaCrosse, Oct. 15-18. At this gathering Wisconsin will hold a Bible and missionary conference with a team headed by Dr. Peter Wright. The usual attendance at the state convention is about 400, but Doctor Ingram insists that we must have four times that number this year. No doubt it will be a worth-while convention.

Dedication

The Eureka Center Church dedicated its new building Sept. 16. It was a great day for the little band of people who have worked so heroically for their new building. Those present and taking part were Dr. N. L. Christenson, and Superintendent A. LeGrand. During the day more than $7,600 was pledged and paid to take care of the building expenses.

Other Notes

Rev. J. H. Williams has accepted the pastorate of the Calvary Church of Milwaukee.

Rev. S. W. Phelps is passing through the deep waters in the serious illness of Mrs. Phelps, who is ill with a fatal disease. The Grace Church has granted Mr. Phelps a leave of absence, and Rev. E. W. Foster is supplying the pulpit during his absence. The sympathy of the brethren go out to Brother Phelps.

New York Letter

By Our Occasional New York Correspondent

The Japanese Disaster

New York has taken a deep interest in the calamity which has overwhelmed Japan. Always quick to respond to calls for relief, the metropolis speedily rolled up a fund for the Red Cross exceeding four millions, and that is not the end. Now the Salvation Army, which was not content to join the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and all the other religious and philanthropic organizations in giving through the single channel of the Red Cross, named properly in President Coolidge's appeal as a governmental agency, has been conducting its street campaign, with five millions as its goal. Of course individuals with a chronic objection to earning a living by honest means have taken advantage of the generous spirit by attempting to solicit "funds for stricken Japan," but the police have been rather keen in stopping these frauds. The one thing evident on all sides is that the unparalleled catastrophe, with its inconceivable loss of life and property, has created a sympathetic feeling that will make it much more difficult for the anti-Japanese papers and politicians to foment trouble between the nations. The Japanese are said never to forget a benefit or kindness, and in this case the blessing of giving will react in full measure upon our people.

Our Baptist foreign mission boards and secretaries have been keeping close watch for opportunities to aid. With the other foreign boards they have joined in urging liberal giving to the relief fund, and have made no separate appeals. Until the general relief fund has been raised there will be no attempt to divert gifts to denominational needs. Meanwhile, the board will undoubtedly see to it that immediate necessities are provided for, in the case of our missionaries who have lost everything practically except the clothing on their backs. Details are eagerly awaited. The first and best news was that the missionaries were alive and uninjured, and that has been confirmed. But when it was made known that Yokohama was simply wiped out, such wreckage in a moment could hardly be imagined. There was a hope that the famous Bluff might have escaped; but the stunning news came that the Bluff, on which the homes of many of the missionaries and other foreigners were located, had slipped down out of existence. It was on the Bluff that the lamented Dearing lived, in the home that was the haven of so many visitors from America and other lands. Then it seemed to some that surely the high plateau on which our Mabie Memorial Boys' School had such a wonderful site was beyond the reach of the fire; but earthquake and fire between them spared not such a shining mark and only ruins tell the story of one of our latest and finest missionary enterprises, while who shall find out what has become of the nearly five hundred boys that made up the classes. And what of the faculty? What, too, of the other splendid school, the Mary Colby School for Girls, a pride of the Woman's Foreign Society? But one cannot go on in the list, with its destroyed churches and homes of missionaries and native preachers and workers, and the unknown loss of life among the members of the churches. Equally difficult is it to realize that our Tokyo Tabernacle, workshop and life-laboratory of the genial and indefatigable Axling and his wife and other coadjutors, has been temporarily snuffed out and its beneficent activities suddenly stopped; while this is only one of the total number destroyed. First the missionaries and native workers must be relieved, then the question of reconstruction will come. New York Baptists will join as readily with all others of our constituency in this giving, when the time comes, as they have in response to the immediate relief call.

In this connection, I had an interesting interview the other day with Soichi Saito, the Japanese General Secretary of the National Committee of the Y. M. C. A. in Japan. I should say that he represents the best type of native Christian leadership. Sturdy of build, rather short of stature, with head firmly set on broad shoulders, a face expressing resolution and firmness, eyes bright with intelligence, and an enveloping smile, he was good to see and exemplified the character that is the hope of the new Japan. He said he was on the steamship between Southampton and New York when the ship's barber, who had heard the radio message, sought him out and with face full of sympathy told him what had happened. The kindness and delicacy of it deeply touched Mr. Saito. Everywhere, he said, he found it the same. The passengers could not do enough to show their sympathy, and when they knew that his family was in Tokyo they tried to comfort him in his distress. In New York he had been in an atmosphere of brotherhood from the moment of arrival. It was more than ten days before he received a message that his family was saved. The strain was evident, and he could not adequately express his gratitude, he said, to the circle of friends he had found.

The Japanese ambassador at Washington, Masanoa Hanihara, received Mr. Saito and Mr. G. S. Phelps, General Secretary for Japan of the International Committee of the "Y," as representatives of an organization whose worth is fully recognized by the leaders in Japan, and wished them every success as they went back to rebuild and restore the broken work. Two points he emphasized—that the greatest need of Japan in this period is strong upright character, and he was much concerned for the young men and women in this regard; and second, he most earnestly desired that Mr. Saito should carry back to the Japanese people the message of the kindness and sympathy and good-will of the American people.

Mr. Saito said further that the ambassador was deeply impressed with the account of what happened when Doctor Mott, who had hurried home from Canada when the news of the disaster came, met the two secretaries who bear the heaviest responsibilities in the stricken empire. As Mr. Saito tells it, the first words of Doctor Mott after greeting them, were an invitation to a Bible study and not to a discussion of relief measures. Giving his Bible to one of the party, Doctor Mott asked him to read the ninetieth Psalm, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. . . Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us." Then he asked another to read of the meeting of Jehovah and Elijah, of the mighty wind and earthquake, and after the earthquake a fire, but Jehovah was in none of these, but in the still, small voice. Thus they began at the divine source of strength and comfort and assurance. Mr. Saito felt profoundly that turning to the sacred word, but he did not know how characteristic it was of the Christian leader.

The two secretaries have started for Japan to give aid as they may in relief, and then to carry the cheer and courage and faith that shall do more than anything else to restore the broken morale and awaken hope in the native constituency. Of course the immediate needs of the American and native workers will be met, and clothing is on the way. Then with customary promptness and carefulness in planning, the association will undertake the rebuilding of its seven or more destroyed structures in the two cities. Such men as these will help to cheer our missionaries also, and I discovered that both of them happen to be Baptists and members of Doctor Axling's Tabernacle, hence co-workers with him and eager to see his work reestablished.

The "American Translation"

The secular papers have taken to printing prayers and Bible verses, and may soon print the Bible. For instance, I note that the Editor and Publisher, house organ of a large publishing service, contains a page advertisement stating that it has exclusive newspaper rights to the "American Translation" of the New Testament by Prof. Edgar J. Goodspeed, and offers this translation for serial publication in such newspapers as wish to subscribe for the right. The editor urges the papers to do this, as a means of getting the New Testament read by thousands who otherwise could not be induced to read it. One could wish that the publicity announcements were of a different stamp, and I feel sure that Professor Goodspeed would wish so more earnestly than anyone else. By and by we shall have a "business man's translation," and a "workingman's version," and of course a "woman's translation," and so on ad infinitum, since there is no law against it. But all these will have their little day, as phases of a restless period, while the New Testament and the Old—the Bible—in the King James' Version or the Revised, will serenely hold its place in the minds and hearts of our people.

MAINE

A COUNCIL CALLED BY THE CENTRAL SQUARE Church, Portland, gathered Sept. 17 to consider the advisability of setting apart to the gospel ministry, Mr. Milton M. McGorrill, a member of the Central Square Church. This church is peculiarly fortunate in that several of its young men have given themselves to the Christian ministry. The candidate of this council has been called to the Normal Park Church, Chicago. Mr. McGorrill served successfully as director of the young people's work under the Publication Society, and also as pastor's assistant in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was recommended unanimously by the examining board. J. Harrison Thompson of Portland was moderator and Clerk McGorrill of the Central Square Church was scribe. Having listened to Mr. McGorrill's statement, the council voted unanimously to advise the church to proceed with his ordination, which was done the evening of the same day. Pastor Lorimer preached the sermon.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE BAPTIST CHURCH AT EDGARTOWN, on the tip end of Martha's Vineyard, Mass., has been celebrating its one hundredth anniversary with services of unusual interest. The pastor, Rev. E. A. Royal, read a history of the church written fifty-five years ago, which he had continued to date. He gave the first section in the morning, and the second in the evening. It will interest old-time Baptists to hear that Rev. Dr. T. Edwin Brown, formerly pastor at Brooklyn, Rochester, Providence, Philadelphia, and New Britain, Conn., preached the dedication sermon with all of his wonted intellectual vigor and eloquence, though eighty-two years of age. Former and neighboring pastors cordially joined in the festival, and made it a noteworthy event for the church and community.

REV. W. L. ATHERTON, after a pastorate of twenty-one years at West Springfield, accepts the call of the church at Marblehead. That interesting old town has a good church, ready to appreciate the ripe experience which the new pastor will bring, and to cooperate with him in building up Baptist interests there.

THE FIRST NUMBER of the Massachusetts Baptist Bulletin has appeared. It is a thoroughly up-to-date resume of state enterprises, giving all the necessary facts that do not get into the larger Baptist journals. Under present leadership there is a good deal going on that all ought to hear about. This invaluable monthly record, at 25 cents a year, ought to get into every household. It would be good for churches to put it into their budgets, and place it in every family

Why not, in this time of scientific publicity?

Dr. W. E. Waterbury, state director of the work of the convention for new Americans, is in the Baptist Hospital for treatment. Too long has he clung to heavy duty while bearing distressing family sorrows. But at last a sturdy physique gave way. There will be fervent prayer for his recovery, and a wealth of sympathy.

Echoes from Stockholm, were heard at the Boston Ministers' Conference on the twenty-fourth. Dr. Everett C. Herrick of Fall River, and Rev. Herman Litorin, pastor of the First Swedish Church in Boston, were the speakers. Both addresses were of gripping interest. Doctor Herrick seemed not to be impressed with the Christian modesty and self-forgetfulness of some American Baptist politicians at the Congress, by comparison with the admirable self-restraint, and passion for the great world cause, manifest in the European brethren. The speaker is always so sweet and so just that his impression was the more arresting. Pastor Litorin had made his first visit to Sweden, his native country, in twenty-eight years, and his new impressions of his old country and countrymen were fascinating. Both speakers agreed that Sweden could teach Americans much that they need to learn, especially in urban cleanliness and efficiency.

In spite of the Eastern States' Exposition, which was in full swing, the Westfield Association had the largest attendance in years, the enrolment being over 300. There was a spirit of devotion and optimism which has been seldom equaled in the association. Although there were only 194 baptisms, which was considerably under the usual number, the reports on the whole showed that the churches were in splendid working condition and face a bright future. Rev. G. Pitt Beers, president of the Westfield Association for the past year, was the presiding officer at all sessions. Judge John Hildreth of Holyoke was elected as president and Rev. L. T. Mallory of Springfield as clerk for the ensuing year.

William A. Grove was ordained Sept. 18 at the East Somerville Church. Nathan R. Wood preached the sermon. H. L. Hanson, James T. Rider, G. A. Lawson took part in the service.

CONNECTICUT

Work at the Bozrah Church is moving forward under the ministry of the pastor, William B. Oakley. On Sept. 2, four candidates were baptized.

Rev. L. B. Grice, a student in Yale Divinity School, has assumed pastoral charge of the work at Niantic. He began his ministry Sept. 16. Mr. Grice is a Southerner and has had sixteen years experience as a preacher.

The First Church, Willimantic, has begun extended repairs on its edifice. The church is holding its services for the present at the Y. M. C. A.

The one hundred and fifty-first anniversary of the New London Association ws held with the Lebanon Church on Sept. 19, with the moderator, David A. Pitt, presiding. There was a large attendance throughout the day and at the evening session. The reports of the various committees indicated growth of interest in the work of the denomination throughout the entire association. The "Pop-Corn Program" which means that the young people of the Association attended Ocean Park, reported their experiences and stimulated considerable interest. The speaker of the evening was Rev. F. F. Foshay, Willimantic, who spoke on "A Complete Salvation." The annual sermon of the association was preached by Rev. John Hunter Stearns, of Montville, who placed emphasis upon personal evangelism.

The woman's hour was under the charge of Miss Alice Dean. An interesting program was presented, in which Miss Alif Stevens discussed the organization of the woman's work. Mrs. J. H. Morsehead, director of the Continuation Campaign, outlined plans for the coming year. An interesting address "On our Work in the Philippines" was delivered by Miss Florence Dowell. Mrs. Charles A. Hagberg spoke on the overseas White Cross work, and Miss Mary A. Anderson on the overland White Cross work. Mrs. C. C. Gildersleeve, associational director, discussed the various activities of the association and the method of reporting back to her of the work in the various churches. Mrs. C. E. Gardner spoke on literature.

Rev. Harry E. Olcott represented the Anti-Saloon League. The ministers who attended the conference on evangelism in Boston, reported as to what most impressed them at that conference. Rev. Chester H. Howe spoke on the "Present Denominational Outlook" and urged the churches to worth-while effort in concluding the New World Movement program. Rev. H. B. Sloat conducted a conference on the enlistment of every member in every church to assure the success of the promotional program during the current year.

New London Association is considering seriously the proposition of having a one-day meeting in the spring and a one-day meeting in the autumn, in the interests of the associational work. The autumn meeting next year will be held in the Huntington Street Church, New London, and the preacher will be Rev. G. W. Borden.

Officers elected for the new year: Moderator, Rev. H. J. Chase, New London; clerk and treasurer, Rev. Edward E. Nield, Lebanon.

Woman's Continuation Campaign: Word comes from the publicity editor of the woman's organization, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Carter, that plans for the woman's work are being carried forward promptly in all parts of the state. Key women, prayer circles and publicity women are being appointed in all the churches. It is expected there will be a large attendance of the women at the Loyalty Luncheon in New Haven, Nov. 14. It is hoped there will be a large attendance at the Loyalty Luncheon rallies that will be held in various parts of the state following the New Haven meeting.

Brown University

Brown University played the host to 225 Chinese students at the nineteenth annual conference of the Eastern section of the Chinese Students' Alliance, which met Sept. 7-17.

The conference was notable, not only for the number in attendance, but also for its comprehensive and interesting program. President Faunce welcomed the delegates at their first meeting. Platform addresses were also delivered by Alfred S. K. Sze, Chinese minister to the United States, Pres. Thomas F. I. McDonnell of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, Gov. William S. Flynn of Rhode Island, Pres. Kenyon L. Butterfield of Massachusetts Agricultural College, Rev. William H. Faulkles, Mr. John R. Freeman, chief consulting engineer of the Grand Canal Conservatory in China, J. A. L. Waddell, advisor to the Chinese Ministry of Communications, Prof. Paul Monroe of Columbia, Prof. W. H. Kenerson of Brown, and Dr. P. W. Kuo, president of the Southeastern University in China.

The delegates were divided into five groups for the professional sessions of the conference—social science, economic, political science, educational, and science and engineering group. These groups met separately. Open forums, with student papers on economic, political, educational, moral, religious, and science and engineering topics, were held and gave opportunity for free discussion. Oratorical contests were in both Chinese and English.

The serious work of the conference was relieved by a varied program of athletics, social events and sightseeing tours. A daily paper was published during the entire ten days. The conference formally closed with a banquet on Saturday, Sept. 15.

Mr. Tsao-Chien Li is president of the Chinese Eastern Alliance, Mr. Henry C. Chou is chairman of the Eastern section, and Mr. Ko Chi Chang was chairman of the conference.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

At the call of the First Church, Hughesville, delegates from the churches of the Northumberland Association met to consider setting apart to the ministry, Richard Fortran. The council voted unanimously in favor of the church proceeding to ordain the brother. The moderator was Rev. T. C. Hanna, and the clerk, Rev. H. H. Hemming.

Bucknell University

Bucknell University opened its doors Sept. 19 to a freshman class of over 300 young men and women. Because of the lack of dormitory facilities, over 100 young women could not be admitted.

Dr. Romeyn H. Rivenburg, a graduate of the university and for many years assistant headmaster at Peddie Institute, Hightstown, N. J., entered upon his duties as dean of the college of arts.

Because of the increased attendance at the college, the board of trustees created new professorships in religious education and sociology. For the chair of religious education, Rev. Dr. L. Foster Wood has been secured. Doctor Wood is a graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary. He served one term as missionary to the Congo. Dr. Stanley P. Davies, formerly executive secretary of the State Charities Aid Association, New York City, will head the new department of sociology. He received his training at Bucknell and Columbia univresities.

Four other additions to the faculty were made. Mr. James P. Whyte, former president of the Polytechnic Institute of Billings, Mont., becomes professor of public speech. The English department will be headed by Dr. Harry W. Robbins, a graduate of Brown University. Ralph F. Hartz, who has studied voice in this country and in Italy, has been added to the faculty of the school of music.

NEW YORK

The one hundred and sixth meeting of the Steuben Association was held Sept. 19-20 with the South Side Church of Hornell, Rev. S. S. Vose pastor. Thirty-four of the thirty-eight churches of the association reported by letter. Pastoral work has been done in practically every one of the churches with the result that pastors are settled in several of the abandoned fields. The meeting throughout was encouraging. The association meets next year with the Addison Church Sept. 18-19 in compliance with the dates suggested by the state convention. Officers for the year are: Moderator, Howard Dexter, Corning; clerk, Rev. W. H. Brown, Bath; treas., Forest Loper, Jasper; corr. secy., Russel De Long, Woodhull.

REV. AND MRS. FLOYD TALMADGE HOLLAND, of the Fillmor Avenue Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., have returned from a motor vacation of 2500 miles during which they visited New York City, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Norfolk and Suffolk, Va. Pastor Holland supplied the Bethany, Anacostia and Kendall churches in Washington, and assisted by his wife, held special meetings at the Western Branch Church in Isle of Wight County, Va., his boyhood home. Conversions and decisions for definite Christian service on the part of the young people resulted. He also conducted street meetings under the auspices of the Central Union Mission each Sunday evening in August in Washington and addressed the prisoners of the District of Columbia Reformatory, Occoquan, Va.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

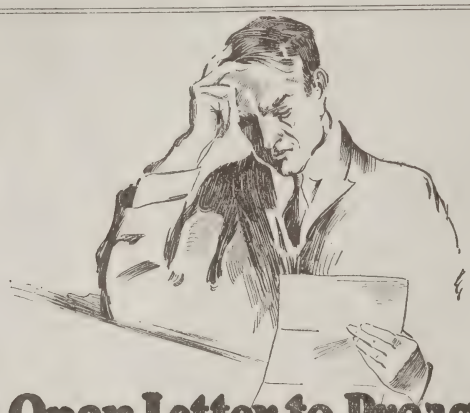
REV. HENRY ALLEN TUPPER, for nearly five years pastor of the First Church and prominent as a lecturer, writer and traveler, announced his resignation as pastor Sept. 27. Doctor Tupper has decided the coming years to work on the revision of several books he has written, and collect data for a new work which will necessitate extensive travel in foreign countries. Doctor Tupper emphasized that his resignation was not suggested in any way by lack of harmony or sympathy in the work and progress of the church. Following the announcement the advisory board adopted a resolution expressing its profound regret and asking that he remain as pastor as long as his plans would permit. Before coming to Washington, Doctor Tupper had been pastor of the Broadway Church, Louisville, Ky.; the Seventh Church, Baltimore, Md.; and the Calvary Church of Brooklyn, N. Y. In Brooklyn he served as president of the ministerial association of New York City, president of the New York Foreign Mission, and president of the Sanitarium Hospital of Brooklyn. He is the author of ten books on religious, educational and philosophical subjects, and has been prominent in the study and development of interest in Mexican affairs.



MOST ALL THE MINISTERS are now back from their summer wanderings. Doctors W. S. Abernethy, G. G. Johnson, and H. W. O. Millington and Rev. H. T. Stevenson were abroad in attendance upon the World Alliance at Stockholm. Rev. J. J. Muir spent the summer in England and Scotland and supplied two Sundays at the Paddington Congregational Church in London. His sermons were referred to in a complimentary manner in the British Weekly for Aug. 9 and Doctor Muir himself was described as a man with "a handsome head and a benignant expression." Rev. F. W. Johnson spent the summer at Ocean Grove as usual. Doctor Briggs kept busy in meeting supply engagements at the Madison Avenue Church in New York where Mrs. Briggs was baptized twenty-one years ago by Dr. George C. Loriner. He also preached at Durham, North Carolina and Richmond, Va. Rev. J. Compton Ball spent the summer among the Pocono Hills in Pennsylvania and reports an especially good time.

THE PETWORTH CHURCH is about to dedicate its building. More will be said of this later. The pastor, Rev. F. Paul Langhorne, was given a happy surprise recently when $1,000 was put into his hands with which to purchase an automobile. The donor's name is not known. If the donor sees Mr. Langhorne's face these days, he will be amply repaid for having given his pastor this surprise.

THE CONTRACT HAS BEEN LET for the completion of the main building of the National Memorial Church. When finished this will be a credit to the denomination and to the pastor, Rev. Gove Griffith Johnson.

RESIGNATIONS SEEM TO BE THE ORDER of the day just now. Rev. J. J. Muir, resigned the pastorate of the Temple Church the Sunday before leaving for England. The church is urging him to withdraw his resignation. His decision in this matter will be announced soon. Rev. Walter Scott resigned the pastorate of the Kendall Church during the summer and is already engaged on his new field in Virginia. The Anacostia Church has also become vacant during the summer.

THE CORNER STONE OF THE SUNDAY-school House of the Italian Mission was laid during the summer and the building is rapidly nearing completion. On Sunday, Sept. 9 the corner stone of the new church at Takoma Park was laid with imposing ceremonies. Addresses were made by Mr. E. Hilton Jackson, moderator of the Columbia Association and by Doctor Clarence A. Barbour.

An Open Letter to Preachers on Moving Pictures—

YOU'VE heard of many churches which have successfully used moving pictures. You've probably considered them for your own church, but if you're like thousands of others, you foresaw difficulties which have thus far prevented your taking action.

We realize your position. We know it is not a simple matter to install a moving picture projector, and thereby immediately solve all your problems. It takes careful study and conscientious effort to rightly use moving pictures in the church. But when properly applied, the results achieved far outweigh the effort required.

MAKE YOUR CHURCH FULFILL ITS MISSION

Now here's our proposition. Your job is to make your church fulfill its mission. Ours—stripped to its bare commercial side—is to sell projectors. You can't achieve real success unless you use every known means for advancing the Cause. We can't achieve real success unless we place our projectors so carefully that they will make their owners real boosters. Therefore, our aim and yours have one common point—to find, if possible, how moving pictures can profitably be used in your church. You know more about your particular problem than we or any outsider can ever know. But for years, we have been cooperating with churches in the use of pictures, and we have come in contact with many scores of cases in which widely varying problems have been solved. We freely offer you this store of experience.

YOU ASSUME NO OBLIGATION

You assume no obligation whatever in allowing us the privilege of consulting with you. All you do is sign the coupon, and mail it. We do the rest, and do it in a spirit of helpful co-operation. We can't afford to sell you a projector unless you're convinced that you can use it advantageously. We know that its special features, such as the combination of stereopticon and moving picture projector, and the gold glass shutter making possible stopping on a film, and showing a "still" at any point, particularly fit it for church use. But we want you to know even more than that before you buy. We want you to know where you can get film, how you can make the pictures promote the general program of the church, and how you can pay for such equipment. Our time payment plan will interest you, and our knowledge of the experience of other churches will shed light on your problems of application.

May we serve you? Now is the time to act—when you're looking forward to a winter of renewed activity. Mail the coupon now.

not changeable. They have "no variableness nor shadow of turning." In the application of these laws there were many rules. That men need to worship God is a law. History and individual experience both show that worship in some formal and social way is a great contributor to men's welfare. To secure that worship in its most effective way it was made a rule that men should go to Jerusalem three times a year to worship and when there they were to perform certain ceremonies. But those ceremonies were not permanent. John 4:21-24 tells us that Jesus disregarded the rule but kept the law. Paul, in Romans 14: 6, says that the keeping or the nonkeeping of days is variable, but the doing either "as unto the Lord" is constant. In Hebrews 8: 13, it is written that some rules of the past were become "old and ready to vanish away." But the law of faith was made more imperative.

It was a law of Jesus that his disciples should observe the Supper "until he come." But it was not a rule; for if it had been, we ought to observe it once a year at Jerusalem in the night and with unleavened bread. We keep the law but we ignore the rule. It is a law to "be baptized." If it were a rule we ought to go to the Jordan or the brook Kedron for it. It was a law for godly people to be circumcized. If we regard that as a rule we ought to follow it. It is a law that Christian people should be temperate in all things. If we are to take the whole Bible as a rule we ought to follow it and "take a little wine for the stomach's sake."

We all make the distinction easily between the law of right and the rules of living. We do not silence women in the churches because the circumstances have so changed that it does not bring popular reproach on the church for her to speak. This distinction is one that we ought to make in our thinking and speaking. Not to do so is liable to arouse unfounded suspicions against good men. One of our professors made the statement in a ministers' conference that the Bible is not a rule. He was at once accused by the unthoughtful newspaper men and some of the less thoughtful ministers of denying the authority of the Bible. The Northern Baptist Convention adopted a statement in which it left out the word rule and spoke of the Bible as the ground of their faith. Some shallow-minded people have said that this was an attempt to deny with weasel words the authority of the Bible. But this was not true; it was an attempt to state the facts with accurate language. The Bible is not a rule but it is a guide. Upon its laws our hope is founded, and by them we trust we are seeking to be guided.

mond and Rev. E. A. Schulls. Prof. Milton B. Lindberg is instructor in collegiate subjects. Milwaukee Hall will be completed in a few weeks and will help to care for this large and rapidly growing student body. The crying need is for an apartment building for married students. The new dormitory cares for seventy-eight single students (men only) but almost no provision is made for the large body of married students who comprise quite a large percentage of the students. The public is invited to attend the Friday lectures which occur each week during the school year at 10:30 a. m.

Aurora Association

The forty-sixth anniversary of the Aurora Association was held at the First Church, Joliet, Sept. 17-19. With a few minor exceptions, the published program was carried out in detail, and was unusually interesting. The first speaker was J. W. Hoyt of the Belden Avenue Church, Chicago. The presentation of the work of the Baptist Old People's Home was given by Mrs. J. W. Hoyt. The next speaker was D. H. McGillivray who told about the Central Children's Home in Maywood. Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger gave a prohibition address on "America's Noon Hour." On Tuesday evening E. A. Gilmore of De Kalb, who succeeded J. C. Dent as state missionary for the Northern District, delivered an address. Carey R. Moser of Joliet gave a doctrinal sermon.

Plainfield was selected as the next place of meeting. Henry Clay Miller of the Marion Avenue Church, Aurora, was chosen moderator for the ensuing year.

Officers of the Women's Missionary Union of the association are: Pres., Mrs. Emma Frydendall, Big Rock; vice-pres., Miss Ruby Bartram, Plano; secy.-treas., Miss Elizabeth Hyland, Plainfield.

Officers of the B. Y. P. U. of the association are: Pres., Jack Maitland, Joliet; vice-pres., Miss Nora Carrnaday, Morris; Esabelle McCurry, Joliet; secy-treas., Earl Horton, Aurora; chairman lookout committee, Merl Sterns, Aurora.

A resolution was adopted discontinuing the missionary committee and substituting in its place a board of promotion of the association to be composed of a chairman and four members chosen annually, for the purpose of carrying out such programs as shall assist the churches in attaining the highest efficiency in all departments of church work. Raymond S. Carman, pastor of the First Church, Joliet, was elected chairman, and a member of the executive committee.

Women's Sessions of the State Convention

Baptist women from all over the state are going to attend the state convention that meets in the First Church, Oak Park, Oct. 15-18. The Women's Mission Union of the Chicago Association has planned a reception for the women and real sight-seeing tour of Baptist institutions located in Chicago. Every delegate to the convention from churches outside of Chicago is invited by the union to be at the First Church, Oak Park, at one o'clock, Monday afternoon, Oct. 15. Autos will leave the church at 1:30 and guests will have the opportunity of visiting the Central Orphanage and Old People's Home in Maywood, Aiken Institute, Northern Theological Seminary, Raymond Institute, Olivet and Immanuel churches, closing with a social hour at the Missionary Training School. At five o'clock will be an acquaintance hour followed by supper served in the church to all delegates. At 7:00 p. m., in the auditorium, the first regular session of the Women's Mission Society of Illinois opens. Every seat should be filled at that hour for the conference period with state leaders. At 8:30 Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, president of Women's Foreign Mission Society, will appear before the joint meeting of the Women's Society and Pastor's Union.

Second session: Women's meeting at 9:00 a. m., Tuesday morning, in First Congregational Church house, Oak Park. No Baptist woman can afford to miss this meeting. At 12:30 comes the women's luncheon and at five o'clock the "Loyalty" banquet, served by the women of the Austin Church. The latter is for women and World Wide Guild girls. Two missionaries and Baptist leaders in state and educational work will respond to toasts. Miss Clara D. Pinkham, president of the Baptist Missionary Training School, will be one of the speakers.

Wednesday at 8:30 a. m. and 1:15 p. m. the senior and junior foreign mission study books will be presented.

Thursday at the same hours will be presented the home mission study books. Thursday evening Mrs. C. D. Eulette, who attended the World Alliance meeting in Stockholm this past summer, will tell us "World Baptists as I Saw Them." How can the 1923 state convention be made to prove a help and inspiration

Southwestern Section

This part of the world is not in as prosperous a condition as would be liked. A total failure of the wheat, together with the deflated prices of farm commodities, has seriously affected the work.

The Southwest Association held its thirty-sixth annual meeting with the Elkhart Church, Aug. 29-30. All but one of the churches reported additions by baptism, some of them many more than previous years. All together they reported twice the number of baptisms as during the previous year. One church sounded the note of retrenchment, which called for some pertinent remarks regarding such actions. It was stated by the moderator "that the most expensive experiment a church can make is to retrench, to close up shop during a financial crisis."

Pastor A. C. Downing of the Meade Church has tendered his resignation, to become effective Dec. 1. He is open for another pastorate.

Reports are at hand that Pastor C. W. Safford has resigned at Elkhart and has accepted the work at Wilmore and will take up the work there shortly.

Pastor Malcom has resigned the work at Plains and returned to New Mexico.

Field worker Rev. J. J. Griffin and his singer recently closed a two weeks' meeting at Golden Plains, a country church in Northern Seward County. The church was revived and will secure a pastor in the near future.

The Liberal Church has continued on the upgrade for the past two or three years. Under the leadership of John R. Pennington good work is being done. It has a good plant, and a good grip on the situation.

G. C. Faulkner is doing the work at Satanta. There is no house of worship, but the auditorium of a rural high school is being used.

Plans are well under way, whereby, the Southwest and West Central Associations together will employ an associational evangelist. John R. Pennington of Liberal is president, Ralph Kemper of Amy, clerk, Ralph Heath, Liberal, treasurer. This presents one of the largest mission fields in the entire southwest, only twenty-five churches in sixteen counties.

Northeast District

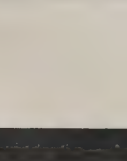
A number of changes have taken place recently among the pastors in this section of the state. J. V. Wright has removed from Swaledale and taken the pastorate of the church at Sheffield. The vacancy at Swaledale has been filled by F. W. Weniger, recently of Cresco. When T. J. Gibson accepted the call of the church at Harlan, two fields were left pastorless in the Cedar Valley Association. These places have been supplied. Edward Bodenham, who now lives at Riceville, is to preach at the David Church, and Bernard Guy, of the Moody Bible Institute, is located at Little Cedar. The latter is a new recruit in the state. J. G. Barnett, who has been at Riceville and McIntire since the beginning of the year, has already secured a place in the hearts of his people.

C. S. Carroll has resigned at Fredericksburg after a fruitful pastorate of nearly six years. F. W. Ford has resigned at Central City on account of ill health. In spite of this serious handicap he has done good work there. He has not yet decided on future plans. P. H. Peterson has resigned at Cascade and gone to the Kansas City Seminary to complete his theological course. M. O. Keller, formerly pastor at Nora Springs, has removed to Detroit, Mich. The Northwest district stole F. W. Madson of Eldora, who becomes pastor of the church at Spencer.

The church at Charles City after being pastorless for over a year, has called C. R. Watrous of Seymour. He accepted and began service there Sept. 23.



W. B. Hutchinson, the field worker, attended the Davenport Association at Camanche, the Cedar Valley Association at Dunkerton, and the Cedar Rapids Association at the Jordan's Grove Church—all good meetings and well attended. The meeting of the Dubuque Association at Manchester on Oct. 1 completed the list.

The First Church, Waterloo, will dedicate its new building in December. The total cost of the structure will be $150,000. Of this amount, $120,000 will have been used since April of this year. The pastor, Rev. R. E. Williamson, recently announced the gift of a new memorial pipe-organ.

district, or the pastor in your church will draft your services as one of the five-minute speakers who will help get the country spiritually ready for the conferences before they begin. Possibly you will be asked to serve on one of the committees so necessary to organize plans for conferences. It may be that your part will consist simply in registering yourself as one supremely interested in the Bible and missions. It is certain that you will be needed for prayer. Large prayer committees are being appointed in each of the various conference centers, and this is a fact spelling inevitable success. But no mere committees, no matter how large, no matter how earnest, are sufficient. The prayer of every Northern Baptist in the entire convention field is needed today for the success of these conferences.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS, 85 W. 8th ST., WATERLOO, IOWA

Mrs. Elinor Childs of Waterloo is the donor. The organ is being built by the Moller Pipe Organ Company of Maryland, and will cost $10,000. It is a three manual, electro-pneumatic, and equipped with complete echo organ and Deagan chimes. It will be dedicated with appropriate ceremony during the week of the dedication of the building. Mr. Williamson graduated from Rochester Theological Seminary in 1922. He is also a graduate of Shurtleff College and served as a chaplain overseas during the world war. He went to the First Church, Waterloo, in July, 1922. Forty-four members have been received during the first year of his pastorate. Two six-weeks' schools of religion have been held with classes in Bible, teacher training and missions. The Sunday school will be thoroughly reorganized before moving into the new building, which will provide for the most modern church-school work.

ARIZONA

THE SECOND ANNUAL SESSION of the summer assembly held at Carr's Ranch near Roosevelt, July 27-Aug. 5, was a success in every way. The attendance was good. There were fifty-eight who paid enrolment fees of $1.00 and carried the course of study, and there were besides a goodly number of visitors who profited from the addresses given and the fellowship which prevailed in the camp. The class work and addresses were of a high order. Those who directed the class work were C. T. Garnett, Bible study; W. B. Percival, church history; Mrs. W. B. Percival, mission study book; L. M. Darnell and W. C. Driver, evangelism; L. F. Taylor, and Tallie Williams, studies in Old Testament; Mrs. Tallie Williams, religious education, and Secretary Morton, missions and denominational program. C. L. Kau was director of athletics and sports and with Jimmie Mullens helped many to enjoy the camp life. Addresses were given by W. Warner Watkins, Mr. Garnett, Mr. Percival, Mr. Taylor and others; while V. A. Vanderhoof and Doctor Rider delivered sermons. This session of the assembly in many ways was superior to that of last year. All present this year are united in saying that the assembly must be a permanent institution in the state. It is hoped that a more central and accessible location may be found for next year and that the churches may lay their plans early for a large enrolment.

MRS. TALLIE WILLIAMS of Globe has become the director of children's work under the department of religious education of the Publication Society. Mrs. Williams has had training for work of this kind and will be able to help the Sunday schools and churches of the state in their work with the children.

THE BUCKEYE CHURCH called to its pastorate Rev. A. J. Beaty of Alpine, Tex. Brother Beaty is a graduate of Howard Payne College.

DOCTOR AND MRS. DRIVER of the Chapel Car "Glad Tidings" assisted Pastor Taylor of Glendale in meetings during the early part of September. The car came out of the shops the fifteenth when Doctor and Mrs. Driver went to Casa Grande for their first car meeting for the year.

THE HOPI CHURCHES of the first and second mesas are the first in the state to take action approving the completion of payment in full on their pledges to the New World Movement and to vote approving the program of the denomination following the New World Movement. The Hopi churches lead. Can the rest of us follow them?

REV. T. E. ELGIN, OF WINSLOW reports that the Sunday school has more than doubled in attendance and that congregations have increased since they entered their new church building. The church is happy in its work and the outlook is bright. Special meetings are planned in October with Pastor Darnell assisting.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION has generously offered the services of Miss Anna Dahlgren of the Philippine Islands, at home in Phoenix on furlough, for deputation work in the state. She began her work Sept. 16. Many will remember having met her in Douglas during the convention.

DR. L. H. THAYER, convention treasurer, has returned from Chicago where he took a course of lectures in the Children's Memorial Hospital. This hospital receives 24,000 patients each year. Doctor Thayer reports a profitable and pleasant visit to the East and to his old home in Lima, Ohio.

REV. ALONZO M. PETTY, of Portland, Ore., general representative of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, recently paid the state a visit. He held several conferences and preached in Phoenix and Mesa.

THE SECOND CHURCH, PHOENIX, called Rev. E. E. Burkhalter, of Nacogdoches, Tex., to become its pastor. He accepted and is on the field.

REV. J. LAWRENCE BELL accepted the call of the Miami Church and is busy at work on the field. The church is paying the salary of Brother Bell in full, thus attaining self-support.

REV. A. S. WAHL OF BEVERLY, N. J., has accepted the call of the Glad Tidings Church, Chandler, and the First Church, Casa Grande, and is on the field.

THE MESA, GLENDALE AND GLOBE churches conducted successful daily vacation Bible schools this summer.

THE FIRST CHURCH, NOGALES, called Rev. Wm. MacIntosh of East Alton, Ill., to its pastorate. Brother MacIntosh accepted. He graduated from Shurtleff College in June.

DR. EDWIN W. LOUNSBURY

Throughout his long and useful pastoral career, Doctor Lounsbury delighted to preach the glorious gospel in its purity and simplicity, and the people of all classes and ages delighted to hear him. He made the message so simple, clear and plain that even children could understand the plan of salvation and many were won to Christ through his efforts and developed into stalwart Christians.

He was a many-sided man, gifted in many ways, but was preeminently an evangelistic pastor, who sought above everything else the salvation of men. Every pastorate he held from the very beginning as a student pastor was fruitful in the conversion of souls.

At Canton, Ohio, he gave the hand of fellowship to 165 persons at one time. At Dayton, his next pastorate, 150 were received in the church at one time; in both cases, as the result of meetings in which he was his own evangelist and did all of the preaching. In one meeting, he preached every night except Saturday for thirteen consecutive weeks.

The funeral service was held at the Park Place Church, Aurora, Ill., the scene of his last labors, Monday, Sept. 17, at eight o'clock p. m. The service was conducted by his friend for twenty-six years, Dr. M. P. Boynton of Woodlawn Church, Chicago, assisted by Rev. W. B. Hindman of the First Presbyterian Church of Aurora. There was a large attendance, filling the church and gallery. The Ministerial Alliance of Aurora was present in a body. The text chosen was very appropriate, 1 Timothy 4:6, "A good minister of Jesus Christ." The speaker said that in all his experience of more than thirty years in the ministry, he knew of no one to whom the words of the text applied as well as to his friend who had passed on to his reward.

Dear Sirs:-

Your Mr. Little has spent several days working faithfully upon our "Edwin Nelson Memorial Chimes" and the results are most pleasing to all of us. Mrs. Nelson and I are most enthusiastic. Our musical director, who is conductor of the strongest male chorus in the entire south, in addition to his work with us, and who was chime ringer for one of the best sets of bells in the middle west for many years, says that he has never heard such beautiful quality of tone in any other chimes, bells or tubes, as is now produced on our set. During the testing yesterday a number of musical people stopped their cars to listen and to give most hearty expression to their commendation of the music produced by them.

We wish to thank you sincerely for what you have done to give us the best chimes in the entire south, and many say, the best toned in the entire country.

Very truly yours,

W. H. Neill

DEAGAN Tower Chimes have revolutionized Chime building. They are electrically played—no tugging at ropes. Your organist plays rich melody on them and blends chime music into the services.

Daily use of chimes brings a spiritual awakening that means much to the prosperity of your church. They are truly a Memorial Sublime which lives through generations to come and for all time perpetuates the memory of both the donor and the loved one in whose memory and honor they are placed.

Deagan Chimes are superbly musical, stately, dignified, perfectly tuned and flawless in pitch. They are a blessing on the entire community.

Our new Community Memorial Plan will enable you to secure Deagan Tower Chimes for your church. Fill out and mail the coupon for particulars.

The Great Adventure

ONLY those are fit to live who do not fear to die; and none are fit to die who have shrunk from the joy of life and the duty of life. Both life and death are parts of the same Great Adventure. Never yet was worthy adventure worthily carried through by the man who put his personal safety first. Never yet was a country worth living in unless its sons and daughters were of that stern stuff which bade them die for it at need; and never yet was a country worth dying for unless its sons and daughters thought of life not as something concerned only with the selfish evanescence of the individual, but as a link in the great chain of creation and causation, so that each person is seen in his true relations as an essential part of the whole, whose life must be made to serve the larger and continuing life of the whole. . . . .

With all my heart I believe in the joy of living; but those who achieve it do not seek it as an end in itself, but as a seized and prized incident of hard work well done and of risk and danger never wantonly courted, but never shirked when duty commands that they be faced. And those who have earned joy, but are rewarded only with sorrow, must learn the stern comfort dear to great souls, the comfort that springs from the knowledge taught in times of iron that the law of worthy living is not fulfilled by pleasure, but by service, and by sacrifice when only thereby can service be rendered. . . . .

In America today all our people are summoned to service and sacrifice. Pride is the portion only of those who know bitter sorrow or the foreboding of bitter sorrow. But all of us who give service, and stand ready for sacrifice are the torch-bearers. We run with the torches until we fall, content if we can then pass them to the hands of other runners.

"—Theodore Roosevelt in "The Great Adventure"

Fresh from the Field

Rev. Charles L. Rhoades has resigned at Fredonia, N. Y., after a pastorate of five years. His future plans are not announced.

According to press reports, Rev. Elmer W. Powell of the First Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., has declined the call recently extended to him by the Delaware Avenue Church, Wilmington, Del.

The work of the First Church, Wellsville, N. Y., is opening up well under the new pastor, Rev. John Gerald York. Mr. York until recently was pastor at Grand Forks, N. D.

Rev. R. E. Seitner will close his work as pastor of the church at Morris, Ill., and become pastor of the church at Monmouth on Oct. 1. Mr. Lee L. Wilson is chairman of the pulpit committee at Morris.

At the September meeting of the executive committee of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board, forty-three applications for beneficiary grants were approved. The total number on the beneficiary list is now 1453. At the same meeting seventy-one new applications were approved for membership in the retiring pension fund.

Mr. Harry V. Meyer, for many years with the Publication Society, but who resigned two years ago to accept a position in New York City, has been invited to return to the society for the period of the hundredth anniversary. Mr. Meyer accepted the invitation and began his work Oct. 1. Mr. Meyer's special work will be to assist the centennial committee in putting into operation its many plans for the observation of this anniversary, and he will also promote institutes, summer assemblies and kindred work of the religious education department formerly conducted by Rev. Thomas B. Frizelle who left the society for his present pastorate in Fresno, Cal. Mr. Meyer is a well-known layman, and in frequent demand as a speaker in the churches.

The movement to preserve the sacred places in the Holy Land which is being directed in this country by a committee under the joint chairmanship of Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of New York, was notably advanced by the recent visit to this country of Lt. Col. J. B. Barron, chairman of the Commission of Liquidation and Control of the Orthodox Patriarchate of Jerusalem under the British Mandatory Government of Palestine. Colonel Barron's visit was made at the invitation of the American committee on preservation of the sacred places in the Holy Land and the purpose of his coming was to inform the committee as to the exact situation which prevails at the present time in Palestine insofar as it affects the Orthodox patriarchate and the sacred shrines under its care. During his stay here, Colonel Barron was in conference with Doctor Mcfarland, Bishop Manning and other members of the committee and he brought much information which, it is said, will be invaluable in carrying on the effort to aid the patriarch.

The church at Oskaloosa, Iowa, Rev. T. A. Searcy, pastor, is planning for a series of special meetings in the near future. Evangelist Frank M. Wells will assist the church.

At the Chicago ministers' conference, Oct. 8, Rev. Samuel E. J. Watson, pastor of the Pilgrim Church, Chicago, will speak of the "Black Belt of Chicago." Negro spirituals will also be a feature of the meeting.

The French and Spanish governments are planning a railroad from Paris, via Tangier, to Dakar on the west coast of Africa. This will give easier transportation between these governments and South America, as Dakar is but one week's journey to the eastern coast of Brazil. It will put Paris and Madrid nearer to Rio De Janeiro in time than New York is.

It is reported that among other changes resulting from the activities of Christian missionaries and the police in San Francisco, against the Chinese tongs, many young slave girls have been sent by their owners into the smaller towns adjacent and that Chinese tailors who thrived by making dainty clothing for the slave girls are appealing to the Y. W. C. A. secretaries to put them in touch with Christian families who want clothes, their former trade having diminished to the negligible point.

American Education Week will be observed Nov. 18-24. The American Legion, the National Education Association and other organizations have sponsored the movement. Sunday, Nov. 18, is styled "For God and Country Day," and ministers in all pulpits are invited to preach at least one sermon on education. Monday is "American Constitution Day," set aside for stressing obedience to the law, man's struggles for liberty, the duties of citizenship and education and the ballot. Tuesday is "Patriotism Day"; Wednesday, "School and Teacher Day"; Thursday, "Illiteracy Day," for devising ways and means for the eradication of illiteracy. Friday, "Community Day," is given over to consideration of equal opportunity in education for every boy and girl, the needs of the community as to public libraries and community center. Saturday, "Physical Education Day," is a day for the study of the value of exercise, correct posture and health habits.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Park Harding sailed from San Francisco on the S. S. "President Pierce," Thursday, Oct. 4, bound for Manila by way of Hawaii, Japan and China. Mr. Harding goes to develop boys' work in the Young Men's Christian Associations of the Islands. He has had seven years' experience in Y. M. C. A. boys' work, first at White Plains, N. Y., then in the Central Branch, Brooklyn, said to be the largest in the world, and following that in Providence, R. I. From there he was called to the colors in the world war. At the close of the war he entered the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A., Cambridge, Mass., and after four years there has been called to do this important pioneer work in the Philippines. Mr. Harding is the only son of Rev. Samuel T. Harding, pastor of one of our churches in Norwich, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Harding are graduates of Rochester University, Rochester, N. Y. Mrs. Harding was born in Madras, India, during the missionary service of her parents, Rev. and Mrs. Herbert F. Laflamme.

No Danger Here

Mr. Henry J. Smith of the Chicago Daily News, speaking before the Medill School of Journalism said: "There is a point where the passion for writing may become a deformity and a disaster, for there are writers who have developed the capacity to utter a thought so completely that they can't think any more, and there are literary persons who know so much about life that they have forgotten how to live—and none can live with them, either."

It is safe to say that the editor of THE BAPTIST and his correspondents are in little danger of the fate here pointed out.

Get the Scout Habit

A Boy Scout does a good turn daily. We most earnestly hope that every Baptist forms, if he has not already done so, the scout habit. There is plenty of room for the good turn. The opportunity greets every man every day. It is only a question of disposition and thoughtfulness. There are many homes—Baptist homes—which would be helped by the visits of THE BAPTIST and Missions. Be a good Baptist scout and introduce these journals in these homes.

After Hearing the Editor's Story

Last night as I lay on my pillow,
Last night as I lay on my bed,
Last night as I lay on my pillow,
I dreamed of the church that was dead.

There were deacons and elders and preachers,
Lay leaders, and others who led;
There were stewards, superintendents and teachers,
And millions of members—all dead!

There were buildings of marble and splendor,
And preaching far over my head;
There was music I never could render,
But the organist even was dead.

There were fields that were vast as creation,
For the heart-hungry world must be fed;
All was ripe for the birth of a nation,
For the pessimist also was dead.

I asked, then, of one who was living,
Why all was thus seemingly dead.
He answered with little misgiving,
"CHURCH PAPERS—UNMENTIONED, UNREAD."

in Southern Christian Advocate.

Pleased Stockholders

"As a stockholder in the corporation, I am delighted with the success of the past year under your leadership and direction."—Dr. H. B. Sloat of the Connecticut Baptist Convention. Another short but eloquent letter reads: "My dear Killam: THE BAPTIST is improving all the time."—Robert A. Ashworth. At first such wholehearted commendation filled us with fear —"Delighted"—"Improving all the time." Brethren, there is a limit and that's perfection. Having achieved such a measure of success may we not pat ourselves on the back and rest a while? Another and truer idea soon overtakes us. These kind words are the words of friends who know how far we have still to travel before we reach the ideal and they are cheering us on our road. We are glad there are so many such folks in the world.

The church at Springfield, Ohio, has called as pastor, Rev. J. S. Braker of the First Church, McKeesport, Pa. He will begin his work at Springfield about Oct. 10.

The church at Goshen, Ind., has called Rev. J. C. Rhoades of Texas as pastor. Mr. Rhoades was a former Indiana man but has spent the past ten years in the South. He is already on the field.

Mrs. M. H. Pettit, wife of Rev. M. H. Pettit, well known as a successful pastor in Michigan, died at her home in Cassopolis, Sept. 12, after a long illness. Mrs. Pettit served in many capacities outside the duties in connection with the work of the local church.

The last week of September Baptists of Bloomfield, Ind., dedicated a new house of worship. A year ago, early in January their building burned and was a total loss, as the church was without insurance. The new building is of Bedford stone and pressed brick construction.

The "Christian Register" announces a return to the subscription price of $3 per year. A far-reaching campaign for increased circulation has been planned. It is clear that a denominational newspaper must be sold at a reasonable price and have back of it the hearty cooperation of its readers in subscription getting if it is to fill a large place in the life of a denomination. The Christian Register has back of its plans many of the outstanding laymen of the denomination.

Two hundred and seventy-one men who sell real estate, manufacture corrugated iron, probate wills, diagnose diseases, preach sermons, buy and sell securities, conduct funerals, and correct examination papers, says the Christian Register, 271 men engaged in widely differing businesses of life went to New Haven to tackle a few problems in promoting the chief business of life. They were delegates from 181 chapters of the Unitarian Laymen's League to the third annual chapter convention at New Haven, Sept. 14-16.

Dr. A. W. Beaven and family of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., reached Montreal this week. He has large plans for the work of the coming year. In a letter to his church he gives a hint as to the way the summer was spent. "This letter comes from me when in one of the most interesting cities I have visited. London has captured us all. Of course, its streets and buildings have been familiar by story, rhyme and conversation since childhood—the Strand, Picadilly, Charing Cross, Westminster Abbey, London Bridge, the Bells of St. Clemens, Old Curiosity Shop, etc. Everywhere we turn some name that we have known greets us. To look at the monuments in Westminster Abbey and read the names is like calling the roll of the men we have read or heard of all our lives—Dickens, Shakespeare, Darwin, Tennyson, Doctor Johnson and hundreds of others. Places sacred to my father and therefore to me are here too—the place of his baptism, Spurgeon's tabernacle, and the spot where his mother lies buried. We shall sail from the same port in England and land at the same port in Canada as he did a lone boy fifty-five years ago when he came to America."

The Y. M. C. A. in Jerusalem has been given a seven-acre site. A building will be erected which will become the center of the association's activities in the Near East.

First News From the Japan Devastated Area

THE following letter from Mrs. Charles B. Tenny is the first communication by mail which has reached the headquarters of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society from the devastated area in Japan:

"Mr. Tenny was called to Tokyo and though the railroad was still forbidding any travel that way except for those whose families were known to be there, we have heard nothing, so presume that from his position as a missionary he was allowed through. He carried food and water for several days' supply. Almost no word reaches us yet from the devastated region but soldiers are all around gathering food and they say refugees are pouring out of Tokyo as fast as possible, but food is still sadly needed. Holtom and Patterson have returned and report the seminary and residence still standing, as also Axling's and Benninghoff's, Miss Ryders, Yotsuya and Immanuel churches and a little of the Tabernacle, also a little of the Mabie School. It is definitely known that Fishers, Gressitts, Holtoms, Toppings, Covells and Misses Carpenter, Russell, Jenkins, Kludt, W. Acock, and Newbury have lost everything. Also many of our Baptist teachers and preachers and scores of our Christians have nothing and no prospect of ever having anything again as banks and post-office records and papers of credit, etc., are also gone. And yet through it all you hear no complaint, and see no tears, but a stolid endurance on the part of non-Christians and a beautiful resignation and trust on the part of the Christians (both native and foreign). The business people are taking advantage of the ships sent to take them home but we missionaries are staying by and doing what little we can. The present plan for the Fisher, Gressitt and Holtom families is to stay in Sendai for the winter and those who were in Karuizwa to stay there for the present.

"Conditions in Tokyo are so awful that we are told women and children are forbidden to come in even if their homes are standing. Miss Carpenter was in her home at the time of the earthquake and was hurled back and forth across the room a number of times. Soon after, seeing flames on most sides of her, she made her escape with several Japanese and spent two nights in a park with scores dying about her. One missionary reports after being in it all for four whole days among the flames, the dying, and the frenzy, that he heard never a complaint, saw never a tear and heard no swearing except that of an American tourist who had lost little, but was cursing the management around him! We learn that Mr. Gressitt is doing wonderful work in Yokohama for the refugees on the American and British ships as he can interpret and adjust things because of his knowledge of affairs and people. Mr. Holtom is leaving again for Tokyo and you are perhaps getting word from there by now. At any rate we know your prayer is for Japan at this crisis and for the many broken hearts. It is a miracle that as a mission we suffered no loss of life."

Rev. W. G. Carey of Altamont, Kans., has accepted the call of the church at Galena and is now on the field. The church is now on a self-supporting basis.

Dr. Frank M. Goodchild of the Central Church, New York, has so far recovered from his recent serious illness that he will soon sail for southern France with Mrs. Goodchild where it is hoped that his recovery will be complete.

Rev. A. W. Mayer, of Jamestown, N. Y., has accepted the call of the First Church, Williamsport, Pa. In Jamestown Mr. Mayer has served as the director of religious education and associate pastor.

The international ice patrol has successfully used T N T to keep shipping channels free from dangerous icebergs. This work was begun after the Titantic disaster. The ice patrol board recently held a meeting to make plans for next spring.

The daily press of Madison, Wis., announces the coming of Rev. Norman B. Henderson to the pastorate of the First Church, Nov. 1. He has been pastor of the University Church, Minneapolis, since 1919. He was before that time pastor of the Irving Park Church, Chicago.

Dr. Adolf Hoel of Christiania University, who for the past seventeen summers has been engaged in scientific exploration off Spitsbergen, recently returned after a successful and profitable voyage. He succeeded in surveying the whole coast from South Cape to Cross Bay. Doctor Hoel described the past summer in the Arctic region as perfect and one which greatly facilitated his work.

The first week of October saw three big rallies at the Temple Church, Los Angeles. The first Sunday was church membership rally and registration. Every member attending the morning and evening services was registered and an effort made to account for all those not in attendance upon these meetings. The mid-week meeting was a church night program and prayer meeting rally. On Friday night there was held a rally social in Burdette Hall. It is clear that Pastors Brougher and Hudson are planning for an end of vacation so far as church duties are concerned.

A great religious awakening came to Wyoming, writes Rev. C. M. Thompson, during the month of September. "Big Jim" Kramer was with the First Church, Casper, in a meeting. Before he had been there three days the building was inadequate. A huge tent was pitched on a prominent corner. It was packed every good night we had. Sundays hundreds stood outside the tent. Casper has thought religiously for an entire month. The chief news item on the front page of the local dailies was of the meetings. The weather was unfavorable from the start. High winds, almost gales, blew the tent down, and the terrific cloudbursts and disasters of September came during the meeting, but even these did not stop the movings of God. All the churches of the city were revived and reaped rich harvests. Practically all those who came by baptism were adults many of them strong men. About 100 will be received into the church within the next three weeks as a result of the meeting.

Unity and Uniformity

DEFINITION is a great peacemaker; and the hasty, indiscriminate use of words scatters abroad the microbes of controversy. Ambiguity is the fruitful mother of individual quarrels and the parent of public wars and rumors of wars. Consider some examples:

There are the words unity and uniformity. Both signify oneness, yet unity means only a fundamental oneness in purpose, or a harmonious working toward a common end. Unity may characterize the working together of parts of an organism or organization or machine quite different from each other yet harmonious and not antagonistic. Uniformity, however, requires that all parts of an organism or organization or machine be alike, work alike, think alike, and not simply that they work in harmony toward a common end.

The ideal of some great religious bodies and of some smaller bodies and individuals is the securing of an absolute uniformity of belief and action in the Christian church, though the stress is usually upon outward uniformity. Said the royal wise fool James, "They must conform or I will drive them out of England." There are likewise two uses of the word unity in a religious sense. The will-o'-the-wisp idea of the Roman Catholic and many less powerful bodies and individuals is an outward unity which shall be comprehensive of all Christendom, though of vastly varying shades of belief, but which can be wielded as one body and which must bow to one human authority. After having achieved such an outward unity at the cost of multitudes of martyr lives, and after the dragging of the church through the mire of sensualism, cruelty and corruption and civilization itself into poverty and ignorance, the fatal coils of this unity were broken and cvilization was saved. It is not strange, perhaps, that the church of Rome longs for a revival of its vast though sinister power, but it is inexplicable that many who owe their civil freedom and religious liberty to Protestantism should be clamorous for some sort of return to that false unity which had well-nigh strangled the church of Christ and civilization with it.

THE unity which the New Testament inculcates distinctly repudiates the necessity of uniformity. It is a spiritual unity or unison which Christ so pathetically and with such tender solicitude urges upon his disciples in the last hours before his supreme sacrifice. The apostle Paul sounds the same note of urgency and with the same ideal of spirituality when he begs the Roman saints to be of one mind or disposition even when they cannot be of one opinion; and he exhorts the Philippians, most dearly loved of all his churches though prone to fall out with each other, to be "of the same mind," "of one mind," and to have "the mind which was in Christ," which he then explains, in the most sublime passage of all his writings, the one in which he interprets the incarnation, to be the mind or disposition of utter self-abnegation for the sake of the redemption of men.

But when this spiritual unity is emphasized, there is an insistence upon the right of certain diversities within the church. For example, there are allowable diversities of function among the church members even as there are among the members of a unitary human body. There are also permissible diversities of belief, diversities quite as marked as those between the various evangelical denominations today and in some cases more so, such for example as the difference between the Judaic and the cosmopolitan types of Christianity in the apostolic church. And there are recognized in the New Testament diversities of practice also, as set forth, for example, in the fourteenth chapter of Romans in the matter of eating meats or herbs only and in the custom of observing all days as sacred or that of the nascent observance of the Lord's Day as the one sacred day.

These variations are all within fairly well-defined limits, of course. Together with the insistence on charity for certain diversities of view among equally conscientious brethren, quite as sharp reprobation is given those who cause divisions needlessly in the church by the teaching of strange doctrines, and whenever either doctrinal opinions or personal practice goes beyond the boundary lines of Christian truth or duty, summary discipline or the withdrawing of fellowship are advised. We are non-conformists when a human conformity is thrust upon us, but we must beware of causing deformity in the church of Christ by the mutilation of its body either in faith or practice.

It seems to us that the Baptist denomination in the vast majority of its churches and members is characterized by a fundamental unity of faith and practice and its diversities are almost all of them within allowable New Testament limits. Love toward each other and loyalty to Christ should accomplish our complete unification.

An Element of Democracy

THE local Baptist church is a Christian democracy. if it is true to the ideals of its Founder and Lord. Such a democracy must have wise and successful methods for developing its membership so that all will share in its accomplishments as well as in its opportunities and responsibilities. We are given to understand that half the membership of the average local church does not participate in the affairs of the church or in its wider enterprises. Participation by every member is an essential element in a Christian democracy. Of course the measure of participation and its type will differ according to the conditions in the lives of the membership, but a measure of actual worship, service, giving and witnessing must be produced by every member who does not need or receive vital support from the church.

Non-participants are a sign of autocracy and are therefore un-Christian and dangerous. Those who continuously fail to meet the simple demands of their Lord and his church are living examples of the whited sepulchers about which the Lord spoke so vigorously. Outwardly these non-participants are church members and part of a spiritual democracy, and by right of free will they have chosen the Lord and Saviour to be theirs. Inwardly they decline to walk along the path of a Christian and church member and with the consent of other like-minded non-participants they thwart the will of the whole and do as they please. They have assumed an obligation but refuse to fulfill it. That is a dangerous form of autocracy because it is aimed at an eternal principle of Christian service and interdependence. We must no longer allow it to rule our local churches and destroy the integrity and the authority of a divine institution, and thereby fail in our world enterprise. The world of today needs the elements of democracy that are contained in the divinely planned institution called the local church, but we can no longer indulge the hope that the people of the world outside the church will allow the people in the institution to tell them to do what they themselves are not doing in any thorough way. Without Christian democracy the world will be given up increasingly to chaos. Such a democracy with its voluntaryism and interdependence is the hope of the world. We must preserve every element of it in the church of Jesus Christ because if any phase of it is lost there it will be lost elsewhere. We plead therefore for a new sense of discipline in order that the Christian democracy called the local church may produce every member a participant and thus lead the world away from every element of autocracy towards the Christian interdependence that willingly gives up and serves, in order that others may have and may be well served in the name of Christ.

Magicians of the Soil

A MODERN triumph of agricultural science has been the turning of barren into richly productive soils. The agricultural chemists are magicians, for they succeed in turning sour soil into sweet; light soil to rich; and by supplying some lacking element, or the antidote to some unfavorable element, or by the quantitative process of overcoming the excess or deficiency of some element, they turn worthless into valuable and highly productive soil. More mysterious are these chemical processes than the purely mechanical ones of drainage, the clearing off of timber or stones, and the irrigation of lands lacking in moisture. Different, too, are these chemical processes which deal with the soil from the biological processes of Burbank which deal with the life forces in the plant itself.

Some years ago a friend bought in a mid-western city a spacious property and erected upon it a splendid mansion. The grounds contained magnificent trees but little grass. Our friend desired a great velvety lawn, but his neighbors who had passed the property for years laughed at his optimism. Nothing daunted he sent a sample of the soil to a noted agricultural chemist for analysis. In due time the chemist reported that all the necessary elements were present in the soil but that some of them needed to be set free. Said the chemist, "Use a ton of ground bone and nitrate of soda upon it the first year and half the quantity after that. The first year you will see little effect; the second year you will begin to see some results; the third year you will have a very fair lawn; the fourth year you will have the finest lawn in the city." We had the pleasure throughout the four ensuing years of watching the gradual but sure fulfilment of the prediction.

A human life is the most precious soil ever sown. We are beginning to discover that it is cultivable to an indefinite—almost to an infinite—extent. Refractory soils and refractory souls alike may be made to respond to the magician who patiently, devoutly and with the total power of mind and heart applied to the problem, under divine guidance sets out to analyze the soil, to discover its elements and quality, to find what of them exist in excess or defect, most of all to learn the secret of setting free the nutriment already existing in the soil of a human soul. Results may be obtained which are almost magical. To change the figure, we may watch the process of a mute soul gradually becoming articulate.

When the potentialities of intellect, heart, character and social culture in a most unpromising life are realized, the work of one who has the task of farming the field of human life is seen to be not merely the most significant and worth-while job but the most fascinating. It is the highest and most delicate form of scholarly research. The one who undertakes it is a super-specialist, for he specializes in the most fundamental of values—humanity. The parent, the teacher, the pastor are specialists in souls. If they can but keep the drudgery and nerve-strain of the process from wearing them to a frazzle, as Roosevelt used to put it, these super-specialists should be the most enthusiastic and eager of all the world's toilers. Indeed, this enthusiasm more than anything else will be likely to keep one from being knocked down and dragged out by the sheer assault and battery inflicted on him by his strenuous job. The pastor who will make individual souls and his congregation and community the subject of analysis, of constant study, of the application of the precise elements which will set free the nutriment in the soil which he cultivates will have the most absorbing interest and richest rewards here and hereafter.

How can any parent be careless?

How can any teacher be mercenary?

How can any pastor fumble his job?

The American Peace Award of Edward Bok

HOW may America cooperate to bring about the peace of the world? All Christians feel intensely their obligation to further this hope of the ages.

Edward W. Bok offers $100,000 to the author of the best practicable plan by which the United States may cooperate with other nations to achieve and preserve the peace of the world.

There can be no permanent peace without justice. We know that the ideal is wonderfully expressed in the Bible. The hope is in the heart of all Christians. Mr. Bok desires to bring the great ideal which we grasp in the spirit, down into the realm of the achievable through a practicable plan. The plan should be submitted in a paper not to exceed 5,000 words, exclusive of a summary of not over 500 and must consist not only of the exposition of the plan but the argument for it.

Why should not some of our Baptist people compete for this great award? There are four subsidiary rewards of $5,000 each.

All manuscripts must be received by 12 o'clock, midnight, November 15, at the office of the American Peace Award, 342 Madison Ave., New York City.

Let our Baptist people pray that this vision of the dawn of world peace may be advanced by means of Mr. Bok's unusual offer and earnest purpose.

Churches and the Red Cross

GENIUS is ofttimes, among other things, a great faith. It is not infrequently the imperishable flower which springs from the dark soil of sorrow and misfortune. Of the latter Balzac says, "It makes of certain souls a vast desert through which rings the voice of God."

As we study the circumstances out of which have sprung our greatest hymns, together with so many of the masterpieces of art, music and literature, we believe that this is true. Such hymns as "Abide with me," "Lead Kindly Light," and "O Love that will not let me go," are deathless, and they have come to us out of the very depths of human suffering.

The Red Cross, national and international, has come to us "out of the very depths of human suffering." Its history and program are too well known to the churches to need much comment, for it is in the religious bodies of America that the American Red Cross has found the high per cent of its best leadership in the furtherance of a work which perhaps more than any other, effectively demonstrates to the world at large the ideal of the brotherhood of man. The seventh annual roll-call date is Nov. 11-29, and that date is approached by the American Red Cross with full confidence so far as the churches are concerned.

The human heart is the greatest thing in the world, and the power to reach the human heart is the greatest form of genius of which we know. Music may fail, art may fail, science may fail, but genius of the kindly spirit never fails. It flourishes in the summer sunshine; it makes the cold of winter time less bleak; it gilds our happiest hours with the touch of a magic wand, and it eases our defeats with its ready song of cheer. It is the friend of little children, the guiding star of youth and the blessing of the aged. It is the priceless jewel of the time in which we live and a gem of ever-brightening luster for all of time to come. Whatever life may hold of sunshine and success, or of shadows and defeat, genius of the kindly spirit is the one great deathless trophy of this life.

"Candidating"

IN a Sunday church notice in a New York state paper appears the following: "Rev. Mr. ——— will occupy the pulpit tomorrow at both services. He is the third candidate for the pastorate of the church. . . . All members of the church are expected to hear him and express their opinions of him to some member of the pastorate committee."

This is certainly hard on the "candidate." He may not be at his best. He may have made an unfortunate choice of sermons. His strongest point, in fact, may not be preaching but pastoral work, tactful management, business sense or something entirely outside his pulpit work. But the decision regarding him is apparently to be made, so far as the congregation is concerned, on the way in which he acquits himself at two services in a single day. Probably the committee will take other factors into consideration, and probably, also, the congregation's judgment, even on so slight information is worth something. But "candidating" has its barbarous aspects nevertheless. Sometimes it does the minister an injustice, and sometimes it works an injury to the church.

What Are You?

RING LARDNER has invented a new and beautiful figure of speech. He refers to certain newspaper reporters as "typographical errors."

His phrase greatly facilitates expression and enriches our poverty of speech. Who has not wanted to say something of the sort about futile efforts of nature and art to produce men, and been unable to find the word that would exactly fit the case? But now it becomes so easy that it fairly slides off the tongue.

The farmer who refuses to learn scientific methods and insists on following the ways of his fathers puzzles us. We tried calling him a mossback; but so many classes of people invite that cognomen that it has no distinguishing significance in his case. Now, however, we have it pat as a pancake: he is an agricultural anachronism.

Many a lawyer, for further example, is manifestly a legal error. Many a preacher is a clerical blunder. Some teachers are educational vacations. The fellow who will not stick to any job but works only occasionally at odd jobs is a vocational episode.

And hosts of people without regard to their industrial calling may well be regarded as merely mistakes that happen in the best of families.

The Major Tasks of Modern Christianity

By James Gordon Gilkey

> Gallio said, If it were a matter of open wrong, I should indeed bear with you, but if these are questions about words and names, look to them yourselves! I am not minded to be a judge of such matters. Acts 18:14, 15.

MOST of us are beginning to realize that the modern church is finding it hard to recruit able men for the ministry. Some months ago a prominent Episcopalian editor decided to ask the college students of the country directly the reason for their attitude. He sent a letter of inquiry broadcast, and the replies that came to him ought to give us all food for thought.

One young man wrote: "A red-blooded young American likes a fight. He agrees with Roosevelt that fighting for the right is the best sport the world affords. We went into the war by the million on such a program. In France I regarded the American Red Cross as the most thoroughly Christian organization I had ever known.

Christian Cross and Red Cross

Why doesn't the Christian cross mean as much as the Red Cross? Why doesn't the church flag inspire the same love and loyalty as the American flag? I think the reason is this: Many of us feel that the average church is engaged in a useless round of drill and ceremony, polishing innumerable brass buttons. Its chief business seems to be recruiting more members instead of leading its present company into real action. The average church seems content to read creeds that are misunderstood, repress its worthwhile convictions for fear of division, and sing 'Onward, Christian Soldiers!' while its army gets no farther than the length of the church aisle. The average church seems to have no objective. It does not want to be led into battle. Why aspire to be the leader of such an army when there are so many secular organizations actually seeking leadership?"

Those brutally frank and possibly mistaken words suggest a scene in the Book of Acts. A dozen Jewish ecclesiastics are trying to interest a practical Roman official in one of their disputes, but try as they will they cannot arouse him from his apathy. At last, in evident impatience, Gallio tells his attendants to lead the wranglers away. "Gallio said, If it were a matter of open wrong, I should indeed bear with you, but if these are questions about words and names, look to them yourselves! I am not minded to be a judge of such matters."

The spirit of Gallio is rife in the modern world, particularly among the rising generation. The average American cares little about speculative theology. He cares little about denominational differences and questions of ecclesiastical preferment. He will respond to the challenge of a great moral need, but the side-issues of religion leave him cold. People today crave reality in religion, and you and I can hardly blame them for their attitude.

How are we going to interest such a generation in the church of Christ? It seems to me there is only one way. We must drop our controversies about non-essentials. We must face frankly the major tasks of Christianity, and then with all the strength and intelligence at our command we must grapple with them.

Suppose we consider this morning three of these major tasks of modern Christianity.

Christian Character

You will agree that one of them is this: We must reestablish Christian character in a day of moral and spiritual reaction.

Two hundred years ago a boy named Nathaniel Mather was writing his diary in Boston. One of the entries was this:

"When very young I went astray from God, and my mind was wholly taken up with vanities and foibles. Of the manifold sins that I was then guilty of, none so sticks upon me as this: Being very young, I was whittling on the Sabbath day, and for fear of being discovered I did it behind the door. A great reproach to God; a specimen of that atheism which I brought into the world with me!"

Puritanism of that kind could not last forever. It put too heavy a strain on human nature. There was bound to be a reaction, and for many years we have seen signs of this reaction multiplying about us. We are living in an era that holds the Puritan up to scorn and dubs his doctrine of rigid self-control a stupid blunder.

For instance, a great many teachers today say frankly they do not propose to make their pupils study subjects which they find uninteresting. "No; let the boys and girls follow their own bent, no matter where they may go in their wanderings and no matter how many fine and well-traveled paths they miss on the way!"

Grim Stories

A great many parents tell us that they do not propose to make their children do anything. "No let the boys and girls have perfect self-expression!" Then these parents tell us grim stories of the results of parental discipline in their youth, and add that they do not propose to give their children memories of enforced religion and frustrated desire.

Novelists by the score hold up to our admiration characters that have defied the moral principles of an earlier day, who indulge in one quaint matrimonial venture after another, and at last achieve "a glorious self-realization."

And the drama? The most popular play in New York this last winter had a scene that very clearly suggests the trend of our time. An American trader living on an island in the South Seas is talking with a doctor about the reform measures now being taken in America. The trader bites the end off his cigar savagely, spits it on the floor and says:

"Reform! That's a word that makes me spit! Do you know what these reformers are up to? They are trying to take away from other people the thing they would like to have themselves and can't get. I saw this reform business coming twenty years ago. That is why I left America and came out here."

Then the audience applauds loudly. This is an age of moral and spiritual reaction.

In such an age older people may be able to keep their footing amid the swirling tide. These older people were grounded in the moral traditions of an earlier day, and life has taught them wisdom. Life has taught them the supreme importance of self-control and self-discipline. But there is grave question what is going to happen to the younger people.

A situation like this puts great responsibility on the church of Jesus Christ. Somehow or other at these crossroads of destiny in the history of the world we must reestablish Christian character, notably the old virtue of self-control through the power of Christ.

How are we going to do it? Let the pulpit drop its discussion of non-essentials! Let it drop its preaching of debatable points that only divide Christian believers! Let the pulpit preach instead an unmistakable gospel of self-mastery, self-realization through self-control! Let us make sure that that old power to beat under the body and keep it in subjection does not disappear from the life of the new generation!

As a matter of fact, every fine thing we have can be traced to some one's self-control. We have what money we have, why? Because some people saved it when it would have been easier to spend. We have what knowledge we have, why? Because some people made themselves think when it would have been a deal easier and safer to accept without question the dictates of an earlier day. We have what moral standards we have, why? Because some people have kept themselves pure when God knows it would have been easier to let instinct have its way. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, acceptable, perfect will of God!"

That is reality. That is a task for the church. When the pulpit proclaims that kind of a gospel a busy world will stop and listen.

A Christian World

A second great task of modern Christianity is this: We must reorganize the life of the new world along more truly Christian lines.

Any one who looks below the surface of things in a modern city will speedily discover situations wholly at variance with the mind and heart of Jesus Christ. Do you think, for instance, that Jesus would approve of the conditions of child life that he would find in the tenements of your city or of mine? Little boys and girls told that they must grow up strong and physically fit, and then asked to spend their first twenty years of life in a slum! Little children told that they must keep morally straight and spiritually clean, and then forced to spend their adolescent years in a tenement! The Americans of the future told that they must be wise enough and intelligent enough to guide the destiny of the great republic, and then those same children taken out of school at eight, ten, twelve, fourteen, and put to work in cotton mills and beet fields! "Suffer the little children to come unto me!" How much chance do these tenement children have?

One of our younger poets has published a little verse called "Paper Roses." He is describing a little girl in the tenements of New York who was making paper roses. A visitor enters, and begins to talk with the child:

"Where did you get your roses, child?"
"I made them in this little room."
"Your window happy with the dawn?"
"No, sir; in fearful gloom!"

"What gave your roses color, then?"
"My blood, sir, as I bent my head."
"Your cheek is cold and lifeless now?"
"No, sir; 'twas my heart that bled."

"One white rose in the basket, child?"
"Yes, sir; it crowns the whole."
"What is it, fragile, soft and white?"
"I think it is my soul!"

What can the church do to change this situation? Let us begin by making sure that all the tenement children around our own church get a chance at life, liberty, intelligence, happiness! Let us federate our churches as soon as may be and use the money now wasted in needless sectarian competition to further the efforts for child welfare already being made among us! Then let the church of Christ stand as a unit behind the effort now being made to prohibit child labor in the United States by an amendment to the federal constitution. Here is reality. A church with such a message and such a program will get a hearing.

Do you know General William Booth's indictment of the English churches of a generation ago? He said:

"It is no better than ghastly mockery to call by the name of Christ those churches which in the midst of lost multitudes either sleep in apathy or display a fitful interest in minor rituals. Why all this apparatus of churches and meeting-houses to save men from a future perdition when never a helping hand is stretched out to save them from the inferno of their present life? Is it not time for the churches to drop their wrangling about the infinitely little and the infinitely obscure, and unite all their energies in a great effort to break the perpetuity of poverty and rescue at least a few of those little ones they say their Founder came to save?"

God knows that applies to plenty of American churches today!

Or consider, if you will, the international situation. What a corner of life into which to bring more of the spirit of Jesus Christ!

War's Cost in Human Life

Do you know how many young men gave their lives in the last war? Suppose we could gather them all again from the graveyards of a thousand battlefields of Europe. Suppose they could march by the door of this auditorium. Suppose they could begin tomorrow morning, twenty at a time, marching all day long without a break in the line. First, the dead of Britain. There they go, twenty at a time, dawn to sunset, not a break in the line, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday—ten days for the British dead to pass in review! Then the dead of France. Twenty at a time, dawn to sunset, not a break in the line—eleven days for them to pass that door! Then the dead of Russia. Great, strapping fellows from the plains of Siberia and eastern Europe, twenty at a time, dawn to sunset, not a break in the line—thirty-five days for the Russian dead to pass! And then the dead of Germany. Those men loved life as much as you or I. They were sick of the war; they wanted to get home. There they go now, twenty at a time, dawn to sunset, not a break in the line—forty-two days for the German dead to pass! If that parade of spirits began tomorrow morning, the sixteenth of July, it would take more than four months for it to pass that door! These trees, so glorious now with the green of summer and the singing of the birds, would be gaunt and bare, and the snows of mid-November would be sifting through the empty branches! That is the war's cost in human life. What a time to bring the spirit of Jesus Christ into international relationship!

In any discussion of world peace many well-meaning people miss the main point at issue. The main point is not theoretical pacificism. Most of us are inclined to think that there are times when men must fight: otherwise the will toward evil would have its unhindered way. Neither is the main point at issue immediate and complete disarmament. Most of us are inclined to think that in a world like ours, including bad men as well as good, we cannot safely dispense with all our weapons yet. But these are not the main points at issue.

What is the main point at issue? It is this: All of us know that in the next thirty years the life of the world is going to be reorganized along some line. Suppose it is reorganized along the old line, with racial bitterness, carefully fomented commercial rivalry, racial suspicion, and a pile of armament growing higher behind every frontier. You know what will happen in 1950: A little incident in some Sarajevo of the future, then a rush into war, and then with those deadly weapons of destruction given out by science, and the end of our vaunted civilization!

That is one road. Is there another? There is. It is a new road. In all these centuries of bloodshed no nation has ever explored its deep valleys and its precipitous heights. It is the road of deliberate, intelligent, carefully cultivated friendship. It is the road that may, please God, lead us and the boys who will have to die in the next war, if there is one, into lasting peace.

In such a situation has the church of Christ no responsibility? Let us do everything we can to make the world try the road of peace! Yes, let us strengthen as never before the agencies of international goodwill, notably foreign missions! Let us, above all things, train a generation that will think in terms of cooperation, not hatred: peace—not war!

Do you know Vachel Lindsay's poem, "Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight"?

It is portentous, and a thing of state,
That here at midnight, in our little town,
A mourning figure walks, and will not rest,
Near the old courthouse pacing up and down.
A bronzed, lank man! His suit of ancient black,
A famous high top-hat and plain worn shawl
Make him the quaint great figure that men love,
The prairie-lawyer, master of us all.
His head is bowed. He thinks of men and kings.
Yea, when the sick world cries, how can he sleep?
Too many peasants fight, they know not why;
Too many homesteads in black terror weep!
It breaks his heart that things must murder still,
That all his hours of travail here for men
Seem yet in vain. Oh, who will bring white peace,
That he may sleep upon his hill again?

What a challenge to the church of Christ!

Faith in a Living God

Here is a third great task that we are facing. It is not enough to improve character. It is not enough to change social relationship. Somehow or other we must give this new generation faith in a living God.

Just now two new attacks on our faith in God are being made by critical young people.

Some of them say to us: "Granted there is an idea of God in the world. There used to be an idea of ghosts. The idea of ghosts produced enormous effects; the idea of God does the same thing. But there were not any real ghosts, and there isn't any real God."

Other critics say to us: "The term 'God' is a convenient way of summing up all the human efforts toward the good. 'Santa Claus' is a familiar term for the Christmas spirit found all over the world. 'Uncle Sam' is a convenient way of talking about the patriotism of a hundred million Americans. But of course there isn't any Uncle Sam, there isn't any Santa Claus, there isn't any God."

This is what many young people are saying today. What are you going to reply? How are you going to meet those two new attacks on faith in God?

Suppose we say to these critical young people: "All right! We will suppose that you have found the truth at last, that the Christians of the past, Jesus included, have all been mistaken. Do you know how the world will look if there is no God? Over a century ago, Jean Paul Richter described a world without God. He wrote: 'I have traversed the worlds, I have risen to the sun, I have passed athwart the great, waste places of the deep: there is no God. Yes, I have looked into the abyss, where the shadow cast by being dies out and ends. I have cried, Father, where art thou? But no answer came but the sound of the storm that raged on uncontrolled. There is no God. We are orphans, you and I. Every soul in this vast corpse-trench of the universe is utterly alone."

"Utterly alone"! Can you learn to control yourself on that theory? Can you try to build a new world on that theory? Can you face life bravely, face death unafraid, on that theory?

"Utterly alone!" That is a theory that will not work. We must find a way to live bravely and with unwavering hope. This theory makes it impossible to do that; makes it impossible to do what we must do. That is why many of us feel this theory must be wrong. The last argument against doubt is that it makes life unlivable. The last proof of Christian faith is that it makes life glorious.

What is our theory? It is this: "Lord thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations! Before the mountains were brought forth or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God!"

This is our theory. Why do we think it is true? Because it works. It makes it possible to live the kind of life we must live. With the courage men call faith, we reach out our hands in the dark, sure that some time, somewhere, we will clasp hands with him.

"To trust the soul's invincible surmise,"—that is the faith of Jesus Christ!

—Record of Christian Work.

They Hunger for the Gospel

IN Esthonia two Swedish missionaries began work at Eistrapa in 1874. Juren, a teacher from Sweden, was converted and gathered about him a number of believers. After a study of his New Testament he decided that he should be baptized. But by whom? These believers finally did as other Baptists have done—baptized one another. Fearful persecution followed. They were placed in chains and banished. By taking the Baptist way they put themselves beyond legal rights in that country. Early Baptist history is a history of martyrs. Since 1918 Baptists have enjoyed peace and liberty as never before. They now have an open Bible, about 5,000 members and thirty-eight churches. There were 800 baptisms last year. Baptists of the Northern Baptist Convention and Canada cooperate in the support of two seminaries at Kegel and also support three traveling missionaries. These Esthonia missionaries are heroes. They go on foot, distribute tracts, hold meetings, often without proper clothing, especially boots. They secure the major part of their living by working on farms during the three summer months.

The "Cradle of Liberty"

The country is 200 miles long. Professor Cummings preached in the cities, towns and open country. Everywhere he met with the most enthusiastic reception by great crowds. Decisions for Christ were made in every meeting. He visited in the woods the old church where hundreds had been converted and 150 baptized. This old building is known as the "Cradle of Liberty." It is a very crude building and is shown in the accompanying photograph.

Mr. Podin, with whom Professor Cummings traveled, was given authority to visit the prisons. They held services in four different penitentiaries in which were hundreds of men and women. These prisoners gave undivided attention to the message; finally a number of them broke into weeping, and as these messengers passed through the crowds many kissed their hands. One woman prisoner asked the governor of the prison if he would permit Professor Cummings to write his name in her New Testament. Upon inquiry it was found that she was under a twenty-four year sentence for murder. The head of the prison himself was greatly moved. He came to the Baptist services that night and personally requested that Professor Cummings should write to him further about the matters of the Christian faith.

PROF. SELDON W. CUMMINGS of Redlands University was sent by the Foreign Society earlier in the year on a special mission to Esthonia and Latvia. He sailed from New York in May and arrived at Reval, the capital of Esthonia, on June 14 in time to attend the session of the annual Baptist convention of Esthonia. Professor Cummings had a double commission, for the trustees of the University of Redlands authorized him to confer the doctor's degree upon Rev. John A. Frey, director of the Latvian Baptist Seminary in Riga. It was a great event participated in by the minister of the University of Latvia, the department of education and the city officials.

The city of Tartu is the university city of Esthonia. In this city Professor Cummings was invited to take lunch with a delightful, cultured family. The wife was a Christian; the husband was not. Conversation in the home led to attendance upon the service, and the first to take a stand for Christ was the head of this family. The next day upon calling again, the professor was met with the holy kiss of Christian fellowship, and there was overflowing joy.

Esthonian Baptists are uniformly poor and their church buildings are very inadequate, but the devotion and loyalty of the members is most marked. Religion is the most real thing they know. They give up drinking and smoking and other habits to which they are accustomed without any requirement being placed upon them. Their religious meetings will last three or four hours, and several different speakers will preach the same night. Adam Podin is a great leader among them; he is president of the convention for the coming year. He will make good use of the new Ford car brought to him through Mr. W. T. Shepherd, of Lowell, Mass.

During his stay in Latvia, Professor Cummings was attended by Dr. John A. Frey who is well known not only in Europe, but in America as well. He was one of the speakers at the Des Moines Convention. Twenty-seven meetings were held in the nineteen days, everywhere with great crowds in city, town and country. There were more than 25,000 in attendance at the meetings during these few days, at least three-fourths of whom were not Baptists. In addition to speaking in the Baptist churches, he was given the use of two large Lutheran churches and a Greek Orthodox church. At the cathedral in Libau, where Mr. Lipphard had previously announced the coming of the "Ship of Fellowship," 5,000 people packed the building. The minister of the church publicly thanked Doctors Frey and Cummings for coming to them, and fervently prayed that God would prosper them in their work in behalf of the gospel in that land.

Mayor and Pastor

Libau is a city of 100,000 people and a great center of Baptist influence. The mayor of the city is a Baptist and a pastor of a Baptist church. He is a man of great influence and by his means a public day school has been established for the education of Baptist children under Christian teachers. This school is supported by the city. The teachers asked for a conference, although it was vacation time, and eagerly asked questions about the school systems of America. After the conference they presented Professor Cummings with an amber necklace accompanied by this letter: "A little present from Amberland, Latvia, to Doctor and Mrs. Cummings, Redlands. To the wife who was ready to stay alone for Christ's sake while her husband brought the Gospel in a foreign land far from home. Presented by the pastor and day-school teachers of the Baptist church of Libau, Latvia, July 30, 1923."

Wherever he preached, the invitation was given and hundreds signified their purpose to live the Christian life. Perhaps the most striking reception of all was in the country districts. Literally by hundreds, men left their farms in the midst of haying and came with their whole families to services which were held at noon, in the afternoon and in the evening. The churches could not hold the crowds and the windows were taken out so that those outside might hear. In a great many sections, Professor Cummings was the first American who had ever visited there, and the communities showed unbounded admiration for America and its friendship and help. The services were brightened by the music of excellent choirs. Doctor Cummings said that he had never heard such singing, and if the Latvian choir at Stockholm was a fair sample, many will agree with him. During his visits in the rural districts, he had the privilege of living in the country homes and coming into contact with the purest type of hospitable country folks. The country has been desolated by war and these people now courageously face the great task of building a new country. Riga is a sample of the loss brought about by the war. In 1914 it was a city of 600,000 and there is now a scant 200,000. It is demolished and broken and there is nothing for the refugees to come home for. Remember Esthonia and Latvia as they struggle to build new nations, and our Baptist brethren as they endeavor to establish righteousness by which these nations shall be exalted.

A Modern New Testament Deacon

By C. A. Ehrhardt

THE little village of Leslie, Mich., is a place of about 1,200 population, situated half-way between Lansing on the north and Jackson on the south.

The casual visitor to this town, no matter by what road he approaches, is struck by the unusual appearance of religious mottoes and scriptural quotations painted along the wayside in conspicuous places.

These are largely the work of a man past middle age, John Stitt, who has had a remarkable experience. Converted from a life of saloon enjoyment at the age of thirty-eight, he, like the converts of early New Testament times, set about seeking the conversion of his fellowmen. By occupation he is a garageman. As a deacon in the Baptist church of Leslie, he resembles the early efforts of D. L. Moody in his direct approach and personal appeal to everyone with whom he comes in contact. Modest, unassuming, lacking the graces of a liberal education, he seeks to make up for his deficiencies along this line by his tremendous vigor and the earnestness of his effort.

His unconventional methods naturally have aroused criticism and opposition, though no one doubts his sincerity and motives. The large mottoes carried on his auto have aroused ridicule and sneers.

The placards on his home have been disfigured and distorted by vandal hands, but he goes on serenely doing what he believes is his God-given work, in his own way, trying to be just his own natural self in his work and methods.

Mr. Stitt has had many evidences of divine approval, in contrast to this opposition and hostility. Many have been led into the Christian life by the novel appeal to their hearts. A number have come to his home to inquire about religion because of the placards which are simply his attempt to give expression to his personal faith in the Bible as the word of God and to reach the human heart.

Like deacons Philip and Stephen of the Book of Acts, he loves to go out into the byways and places unfrequented by the regular ministry, to seek out the lonely individual for personal conversation about God. He is the willing and consistent supporter of the pastor of his church.

The following is his own personal account of his life and work: "I was born in Leslie township July 19, 1857, and have always lived here except five years spent in Breckinridge, Gratiot county. Many times God had spoken to me as a young man, but always I would put off the Holy Spirit by promising to act on the matter later on.

"In February, 1895, I was urged by my wife to attend a revival meeting held in the M. E. Church and conducted by Harold F. Sayles of Chicago, where God again spoke definitely to me. On February 28, 1895, I made up my mind that I would settle the matter of eternity on the next day, but a voice spoke to me three times, 'Tonight or never; tonight, or never.' This was the first time I was ever awake to my real condition. After I said 'yes' to God, I was the happiest man in Leslie. It was the greatest surprise of my life, for I always supposed that religion was something that people endured, instead of enjoyed. It seemed to me if anyone knew what joy it was to have Jesus in the heart everyone would want to know him as his personal Saviour. That night I tried to tell a friend of my new found joy and he said I was just a little excited, it would soon wear off.

"The next August there was to be a two-day farmers' picnic at Pleasant Lake. While threshing for a neighbor I had a great desire to be able to warn those attending the picnic about their future destiny and was wondering how I could speak to them about their souls' welfare, when the Holy Spirit told me I could have some cards printed and put them up on all the roads that led to the lake. After finishing threshing at 5 o'clock that afternoon, I started for the village print shop, but the devil said, 'You cannot get any cards printed tonight, it is too late.' Reaching the shop at 5:30, the printer had just completed the day's work and promised to print the cards immediately. I worked until two o'clock the next morning to put up the cards on all the roads leading to the lake. Later, I learned that two men were brought under conviction by one of those cards. One of them was converted within a month of that time and went home to glory in four weeks after he was saved. The other man told me his experience on reading those cards and was saved soon after.

"After these experiences, the Holy Spirit said, 'You can also print the message on stone bridges and fences.' Many evidences of God's approval and blessing have come to me. One man, who lives four miles from Mason, said he did not have any fear about his soul's welfare when he went to church, but when he read the message on stone it took weeks to get over the conviction.

"I next painted the message on my wagon box. After getting a car, I placed them on the car and then on my house. About a year ago, my wife asked if I had any evidence that God was using the mottoes on our house inasmuch as they were bringing so much reproach and ridicule. I said I did not know, but we would ask God if he would not make his will clear in the matter by giving us some evidence of using the messages. Two weeks later a lady from Lansing stopped and asked for a drink of water. Then she asked if she might come in and talk about the messages on the house. An hour later she was led to know Jesus as her Saviour. A few weeks later, an ex-soldier canvassing for books, came to our home and was saved. Many people who have seen the message on the house as they rode by on the electric car have later on made a personal call at our home and brought great blessing to us.

"It is my privilege to be the leader of a cottage prayer band which meets every Tuesday evening in private homes. This band by the grace of God has been able to support fourteen native missionaries in the dark fields of Africa. We have a picture of one of these workers, a black, barefooted man, but with a passion for lost souls.

"The greatest regret of my life is that I did not heed the gospel call in youth when I could have been fitted for service for the Master. As it is, I am willing to be used as chinking wherever God can use me, officiating at funerals, supplying churches, leading prayer meetings or just as a chore boy for the blessed Master."

The Baptist Invasion of Europe

What have American Baptists to do with the New Europe? We could not hold our hands if we would

By P. H. T. Lerrigo

EUROPE is recovering. There can be no doubt of it. Leaving out the vexed question of the Ruhr and German reparations, there are indications everywhere that the war troubled countries are reviving. For many miles our train followed the line of the Eastern front through Latvia and Poland. Graphic souvenirs of the war were all about us. Great rolls of tangled and rusted barbed wire lay just as it had been hastily removed from the fields. Mile upon mile of overgrown trench; pitted areas where the ragged craters testified to the blasting impact of high-powered shells, and gutted and broken buildings could be seen on both sides of the railroad. But over all the softening influence of the months has woven the green tracery of leaf and bush. From Dvinsk to Vilna stretched grain fields heavy with a new crop and everywhere were the reapers, women for the most part, unshod and showing woeful evidence of poverty, but busily at work with little ancient sickles gathering the grain. Reval, Riga and Libau are not yet the busy centers that they were before the war, but they have already wrested from the tangled web of their post-war difficulties an ordered government, an industrial revival and a stable currency. There has been no serious fluctuation in exchange in the currency of Latvia and Esthonia during the past two years. Even in Poland business is not at a standstill for in spite of a fluctuating currency, they insist on making all their contracts in terms of some stable foreign currency—the Swiss franc, the British pound or the American dollar.

Vibrant with a New Hope

Czecho-Slovakia is vibrant with new interest and a new hope. With its crown standing at about thirty to the dollar, the country is among the stable European states. There is an intelligent political interest among the masses. The novelty of real self-government has not yet worn off and there is an interest in the national outlook which partakes of the religious. The net result of the war to the Czechs is not sorrow and loss, but a new national consciousness, a new freedom and a new sense of the dignity of life.

What have American Baptists to do with the new Europe? We simply could not hold our hands even if we would. The new political and religious phenomena emerging in Europe are of the very genius and nature of Baptist principles; freedom of conscience, political liberty, spiritual awakening, democracy in government of church and state; these are the new conditions which together with the open Bible and the preaching of the gospel render the acceptance of the Baptist viewpoint by increasing numbers of people inevitable.

The great Baptist demonstration in the Protestant north of Europe was therefore most timely. It is nothing less than a marvel of missionary achievement that the Baptist churches of Sweden should have grown from their first missionary beginnings of seventy-five years ago to such strength at the present day as to be able to entertain with royal generosity the 2,500 delegates coming from all parts of the world to attend the great gathering.

There were high lights in the Stockholm convention. The roll call of the nations which took place at the earliest session is an indelible memory. As man after man of varied speech and coming from areas remote, rose and brought his thrilling message of greeting, one could not but think of the gathering to be, when the new song shall be sung: "Worthy art thou for thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people and nation."

Rev. C. Adorian gaily decked in national costume of white, green and red brought the message of Roumanian Baptists: "The more we have been persecuted the greater we have become."

> "CHRISTIANITY can be to us a completed system, a pool that you can walk all around and measure and define and accept, or it can be that far nobler thing, a river, whose fountains are in the life of Jesus, whose flowing is the spirit of Jesus, an ever growing, enlarging stream. But if we do accept that second of the alternatives we must face the consequences. We cannot be static disciples of an advancing Lord."

The new government of Roumania is an anomaly in self-determination—a new political body still retaining the encysted cancer of ancient intolerance and persecution. The vigor of the new Baptist advance has evoked bitter persecution from the ancient church. To quote Mr. Adorian again: "Men and women have been flung into prison, struck in the face, abused and beaten." There was a sob in his voice with his next statement: "Many of our sisters have been handled in an indescribably barbarous fashion." A moment of stillness followed and then a deep sigh from the audience, "Houses of worship have been broken down and the worshippers forced to pay the expense of removing the debris." But the triumphant note crowns all: "These persecutions have only led to our being better known. We are now 22,000 and over 2,000 were added to us by baptism last year."

Senor Oliveira of Brazil reported for Portugal: "Eight years ago I was sent as a missionary by the Baptist churches of Brazil. For years I was the greatest Baptist preacher in Portugal—for there was no other. Now we are twelve. The churches have 250 members; fifty were baptized last year and two new churches organized" Rev. Th. Gerik of Lithuania had another word to add about persecution. "There are churches and crosses enough in Lithuania today but very few Bibles. They have been taken and burned by the Romanists."

Poland's representative had the deep burning eyes of the religious enthusiast. He spoke of the sixty churches in Eastern Poland without a house of worship among them, of the testimony which passes from heart to heart and makes conquest of new souls daily. "Many of our brothers and sisters are living in holes, but they love God with all their hearts."

From Russia there were four representatives in the high pulpit at once Rev. Paul Pavloff was their spokesman and told of the fire which is spreading from village to village throughout the Russian steppes. Russia's deepest message, however, came to us in the song of the Russian delegates which followed the address. There were deep minor notes of heart-break undergirding the hymn, and suddenly a dominant soprano obligato which soared above the undercurrent of suffering like a paean of victory. This song is the cry of a people sitting in the darkness of the pit, "Oh Lord, oh Lord, out of the depths we cry unto thee." It is a song which has never been reduced to writing. Through the days of Russia's suffering preaching has gone forward on the street corner, in the woods and in caves. The musically untutored leaders made up their hymns as they went along. In the dark days and nights of suffering these songs have crystallized into "the cry out of the depths." It touches the heart with a deep pathos. One cannot hear it without a lump in the throat and tears in the eyes.

Colorful

India's voice was not wanting. Mr. Swamidoss' bright pink turban accentuated his dark complexion. He was received most heartily and captured at once the sympathies of the audience with his ready wit. "Your loud applause only makes me blush. I suppose they asked me to speak to lend color to the occasion." He summed up the cry of India's deeply religious people in the words:

"Lead me from the unreal to the real Lead me from the darkness to the light
Lead me from death to resurrection."

He expressed the conviction that Christ alone can answer India's cry. Chibas' word from Japan carried a similar burden. In these days when the need of Japan is accentuated by sudden catastrophe a deeper meaning is lent to his statement, "Japan has no problem which cannot ultimately be solved in the spirit of Jesus Christ." Similar striking sentences could be cited from other leaders of the forty nations represented. The total impression indicated that throughout the world the battle of the kingdom was going forward with courage to victory.

Another high light of the convention was the ceremony at Riddarholmskyrkan where a floral wreath was placed upon the tomb of Gustavus Adolphus who turned the tide in favor of Protestantism in northern Europe and fell on the field of battle in Germany, early in the seventeenth century. The ceremony at the great national church was an occasion of singular anomalies yet quite logical sequences. Picture if you will the stately, age-old bascilica, gray with the passage of ten or more centuries; about the stone walls and massive pillars the tablets of the barons; the tombs of majesties and highnesses on every side; tattered and soiled banners, the trophies of many wars suspended in the groined arches above; a great picture of Christ on the cross at the front of the church; the stately tomb of the great warrior in an alcove in the side of the church; the massed audience of Baptist believers from all the world, to a man opposed in sentiment to the idea of a state church for which the beautiful ancient edifice stands, yet placing aside for the nonce this viewpoint in recognition of the great blow struck for religious liberty by the long dead monarch.

The ceremony was as simple as a Baptist meeting always is—prayer, singing, a brief address. Some wondered at the introduction of the negro melodies at such a ceremony, but is there not a logical connection between the battle fought by the great Swedish king and the struggle upward of the negro slave? Central to the whole ceremony was the figure of a Baptist layman, logical outcome of the Protestant movement, Mr. C. S. Shank, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, who gave a straightforward ringing message admirably befitting the occasion. One could not help wondering whether the ancient soldier in whose honor the meeting was held could have had any cognizance of what was taking place, and if so whether he would feel moved to thank God for the long train of historical events marked at every turn by new manifestation of Christian heroism until it culminated in the production of this new and higher type of Christian soldier, the American Baptist layman.

The Puritan and the Cavalier

By Ralph M. Jones

THE old Puritan was a well-meaning man enough, but he was a serious man, and he made a grave mistake. Things had been going to the dogs in England. The court was gay, and society, taking its cue from the court, was gay too. So the Puritan, when he had cut off the king's head and disbanded the gay court, dressed himself in a russet garb and went about with a pail of whitewash trying to paint the world white. "If I can only live in a white world," said the Puritan, "I shall be white myself." And so anything which God had made for a good purpose, and which the devil had afterward used for a bad one, was denominated black, and out it had to go. Then Brother Ebenezer Barebones got down his Bible and his prayerbook and was surprised to find himself as bad as ever. He had taken the devil out of the world and locked him up in his own heart. Brother Barebones had never thought of that. He had been so busy cleaning house that he had forgotten to wash and shave himself. Alas!

The Puritan went out in a hurry. And the Cavalier came back in again. He came into the swept and garnished house, and began to put back into it what the Puritan had thrown away. But the names which the Puritan had given things were not forgotten. "These things are bad," said the gay Cavalier, "but I cannot get along without them." And so he took back his old pleasures and his old institutions and his old habits with the distinct understanding that they belonged to Satan, and Satan straightway took them over and made the most of them. Never in his life before had the devil had so good a time in England. God had sold out to him bag and baggage, with the Puritan for auctioneer, and had kept nothing back but his Bible and his prayerbook, and for these the devil had no use. Now had Brother Barebones only treated God's things reverently it would have been a good deal better for my Lord Gadabout. For when a man who professes to be very near to God, and who talks with a religious accent, declares that certain things belong to Satan, the Gentile and the Publican and the Cavalier are apt to take it for granted that the other is right; but they enjoy their forbidden pleasures just the same. Only, mind you, they enjoy them with the definite understanding that they are doing wrong. Said the Puritan: "If you want to have a good time you must scrape an acquaintance with the devil." Said the Cavalier: "Very well then. I bid you good day, Brother Barebones." . . . So Brother Barebones kept God close beside him, while my Lord Gadabout went, perforce, with the devil to the play.

Now the Puritan had read his Bible a great deal, and the Cavalier had read his only a little, but neither one had read it thoroughly enough. Had they done so they could hardly have avoided these words of wisdom from him who spake as never man spake: "There is nothing without a man that can enter him and defile him; but the things that come out of a man are the things that defile him." And again these other words so often misapplied, but so full of divine truth: "To the pure all things are pure." Both the Cavalier and the Puritan were reprehensible, but the Puritan was most to blame in that he had fastened upon the mind of England a definition which neither Christ nor Paul could have endorsed. "To the pure," twanged Brother Barebones, "the great majority of things are bad. There is only one good book, the Bible. There is only one good institution, the church. There is only one good man, the Puritan." Now the Bible teaches purity, and purity is what the Puritan was after. But purity and Puritanism, thank God, have come to mean two different things today.

The Puritan is going out. Please God the Cavalier will go out with him. To the pure all things are pure.

"THE little things are the large things,
Of which our lives are made;
The common things are the rare things,
More precious even than jade.
The simple things are the wondrous things
With beauty rich and strange;
The true things are the new things
That know not age nor change."

A Quick Response to Need

By Howard B. Grose

Following swiftly upon the statement by Dr. John R. Mott, general secretary of the International Y. M. C. A., that the property loss of the association in Japan would probably amount to more than $1,000,000, came the announcement by Doctor Mott of an unsolicited gift of $500,000 by S. P. Fenn of Cleveland, vice-president of the Sherwin-Williams Co., paint manufacturers of Cleveland. The use of the gift is left to the discretion of the international committee, of which Mr. Fenn is a member, the only condition being that $50,000 of it shall apply to the retirement fund of the Y. M. C. A. of North America, and the balance be used for permanent buildings of the association in foreign lands. This is the largest unconditional gift, Doctor Mott says, received by the international committee from a living donor, with the exception of benefactions from estates and foundations. Mr. Fenn's interest in the Y. M. C. A. reaches back more than half a century. He was for twenty-five years president of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A. and a prime mover in the building of its present home, as of its predecessor.

That the gift will be used in good part to repair the destruction of the large central association buildings and seven branch buildings in Tokyo and Yokohama is a natural conjecture, but that will be for the committee to decide, and no statement has been made as yet. Doctor Mott says that these buildings in foreign cities have always been constructed as a result of joint subscriptions of the people of these cities and American donors. All operating funds for such buildings are provided by the nationals of the country concerned. This is one of the main reasons for the great growth of the association in such cities as Shanghai, Calcutta, Peking, Manila, Mexico City, Tokyo and many others.

This benefaction of Mr. Fenn's is considered by internationalists to be of great significance in promoting good will among people of different nations and races.

A story of interest relating to the early days of Mr. Fenn, and revealing the character that has made him a Christian philanthropist and successful business man, is told by Joseph H. Peck, treasurer-secretary of the Cleveland Y. M. C. A. He says that Mr. Fenn started as a clerk in a Cleveland railroad office. The other clerks made it a practice to work Sunday mornings to make up for Saturday afternoons off for baseball. Young Fenn remained at work Saturdays in order to go to church Sunday and, when asked to conform to the routine set by the ball-playing majority, refused and tendered his resignation, although he had no other job in sight. As a member of the Y. M. C. A., he not long afterward fell in with another association man, both on the way to a Y. M. C. A. convention. To him he told his plight. When the other delegate had heard the story through, he said: "I'd like to have you work for me. Come and see me when you get back to Cleveland." The train companion proved to be the late Henry A. Sherwin, then president of the Sherwin-Williams Co. Mr. Fenn took the offer and joined the corporation, rising to his present post. He was long associated with Mr. Sherwin in association projects, and crowns his record for service with this splendid gift.

Methodists and the Amusement Question

"Let us return to Protestantism! Let us return to Wesley! Let us return to Christ!"—Bishop Hughes.

IT was announced recently in Zion's Herald that Dr. George Elliott, editor of the Methodist Review, had requested two writers to prepare articles for the current issue of the Review, one favoring the retention of the present legal paragraph in the Discipline on the subject of amusements, the second favoring the rescinding of the law or its removal to the list of counsels. Doubtless because of the impression made by his speech before the General Conference of 1916 at Saratoga Springs, Rev. Frank Neff, now pastor at Kansas City, Kan., was asked to defend the retention of the paragraph in its present form, while Bishop Edwin H. Hughes of the Boston area was requested to espouse the view which he has held for many years—that the paragraph, as legislation, is a blunder and so should be removed from the list of laws.

The two writers prepared their articles independently, so that the double treatment in the Review, is not technically a debate, but rather a definite defense, by each, of his own convictions. Doctor Neff has been a pastor only; Bishop Hughes has been a pastor, a college president, and a general superintendent of the church, and therefore has seen the effect of the law from several different standpoints. Both men write with strict courtesy—treating an imaginary opponent with consideration, and keeping free from invectives. If the spirit of the two articles shall be maintained in any discussion that they may provoke, whether in editorial columns, annual conferences, preachers' meetings, or general conference debates, the effect is likely to be altogether good. Indeed it would be well if the authors of the two articles would have their treatments of the subject reprinted in pamphlet form for general distribution throughout the church.

The Bishop's Five Contentions

Zion's Herald it takes its position squarely back of Bishop Hughes's views. It agrees with all of his five contentions—that the legislation is unsound; un-Protestant; unscriptural, especially from the New Testament standpoint; unspiritual, and unworkable. It would likewise lay even more stress than he does upon the conviction that the legislation is unconstitutional. It entertains that the paragraph changed the General Rules without being enacted by the regular constitutional process. But Bishop Hughes's discussion relates to the merit or demerit of the paragraph itself rather than to its constitutionality.

He declares it unsound in its psychology because it is dramatic enough to attract the attention of outsiders, so that many of them know little of the Methodist Episcopal Church save that it forbids certain amusements. Thus they think of it not as a church doing "major works" but rather as a church engaged in "minor prohibitions." When it is obliged to tell outside questioners that it has this prohibition in law but that it is never enforced, the beginning with such an outsider is not at all hopeful.

It is pointed out by Bishop Hughes that no other great Protestant church has followed its leadership in dealing with amusements. In the making of such legislation it has remained alone among all the larger churches, for a half-century. Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples, Lutherans, Protestant Episcopalians, show no sign of adopting its methods of proclaiming a law to deal with the doubtful border lines of moral and social conduct. It is urged, also, that the method finds no warrant in the teaching of Christ himself, and that, even in dealing with the Sabbath question, the Master engaged in no specification of things that could not be done on the holy day. The contention is, too, that Mr. Wesley's general rule of "taking only such diversions as can be used in the name of the Lord Jesus" represents a far more spiritual program than does any legal enactment in such a realm. It is interesting to observe that the bishop urges that the paragraph be rescinded in the name of "genuine piety," and that it make its attack on worldliness, not with a bludgeon of law, but rather with the persuasions of spiritual instruction and prayer. He advocates a return to the method of John Wesley, and of Christ himself.

> THE longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see that God governs in all affairs of men. . . . I firmly believe that without his aid we shall succeed in our political building no better than the builders of Babel. We shall be divided in our little local interests; our projects will be confounded, and, what is worse, mankind may hereafter, from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing government by human wisdom, and leave it to chance, war, and conquest.—Benjamin Franklin.

Why Not Expel the Law-Breakers?

Discussing the paragraph as being "unworkable," Bishop Hughes declares that it is not like liquor laws or gambling laws, which, though often broken, are still enforced every day. He asserts that in nearly fifty years of remembered experience in the Methodist Episcopal Church he has never known any member to be dealt with and expelled, as the law most explicitly demands. Then follows a discussion of two current conditions that should give the church pause.

The first relates to the moving picture shows. These did not exist when the legislation was enacted in 1872. The bishop asserts that they are doing far more harm than is the spoken drama. Yet the law in question is being interpreted as having no direct bearing upon moving pictures! If a motion were made at the coming General Conference at Springfield to add moving pictures to the list of prohibited amusements, and only the delegates voted for it who did not go to see the films, how many votes could be secured for the addition? In other words, the law forbids the less harmful, and is being interpreted as not forbidding the more harmful.

Enforcing the Rule

The second current consideration relates to the present spirit of lawlessness. An instance is given where Methodist ministers went to the mayor of a city and protested vigorously against his failure to enforce the laws, reminding him of his oath of office. Knowing the Methodist Discipline, the mayor pointed them to Paragraph 280, dealing with amusements, and told the preachers that he would be glad to see them again when they had enforced the law for which they themselves were responsible! The church is now in the peculiar position of crying out against lawlessness, while still keeping a disciplinary paragraph that is never enforced. This is rightly called a "miserable inconsistency."

A striking part of the article gives the form of the charges that would need to be presented against a member of the church. The person against whom the charges are brought is a fourteen-year-old boy who attends a circus. He quotes this form, and one or two sentences in connection: Charge: Taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Specification: John G., a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, did, after the warnings as provided for in Paragraph 280 had been given, attend on July 12, 1923, between the hours of two and five in the afternoon, a circus.

Bishop Hughes adds: "Let no one say that this suggestion is unfair and trivial. It is precisely what the law calls for; and it is not now, and it never will be, a workable piece of legislation."

Constructive Suggestions

The bishop urges a positive program as follows: that Paragraph 280 be rescinded; that the earlier paragraphs dealing with counsels as to amusements be strengthened and made more constructive and persuasive; that a wholesome recreational program be adopted for the young people; and that the church go into a definite and earnest campaign for increasing the prayer life and service life of the people. He declares that when members "walk in the Spirit," they will not "fulfill the lusts of the flesh."

Zion's Herald confirms Bishop Hughes' statement that this paragraph has caused heavy losses without bringing any compensating spiritual gains. Doubtless Doctor Neff and those who agree with his views are correct in saying that the removal of the paragraph will lead to misunderstanding, and that many people will aver that Methodism has "let down the bars." But this temporary penalty is one that should be cheerfully borne for the sake of the long-run good sure to come from a return to Christian and Wesleyan method of dealing with the amusements of the people.

One of the brainiest and most religious leaders in Methodism writes concerning Bishop Hughes' article as follows: "I wish there were some way of putting this article in the hands of all our preachers and leading laymen. I am very confident that all of them who have the brain to think or a discriminating moral judgment, will regard the argument as absolutely conclusive. I do not think that the case has ever been more strongly or concisely stated."

With this estimate Zion's Herald heartily concurs—as it fully agrees with Bishop Hughes' closing words: "Let us return to Protestantism! Let us return to Wesley! Let us return to Christ!"

The New World Movement

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:19, 20.

Enthusiasm in the Field

FROM every part of the Northern Baptist Convention field come zestful letters from the conference secretaries who are setting up plans for our nation-wide series of Bible and missionary conferences. Without exception these leaders seem to feel that the conferences will be a great evangelistic success. All report enthusiasm on the part of the churches for this big missionary movement of Northern Baptists.

"I can hardly wait for the time to come when I shall actually begin my work," writes the Rev. R. H. Moorman of Cheyenne, Wyo., from Portland, Ore., where he will be stationed during the conferences. "I believe this Bible and missionary conference idea will sweep our churches like wildfire."

"I feel sure Utah will reach its quota of 500 registrations," says Lester T. Randolph, conference secretary in Salt Lake City. "I hope to be able to report 100 per cent registration churches soon."

"We have set our goal on an attendance of from 1,500 to 2,000, which would give us the largest enrolment we have ever had," says Conference Secretary Chester F. Ralston, stationed in Syracuse, N. Y.

"Our registration committee is to be made up of twenty-six district representatives, each responsible for six or seven churches in a locality," writes Conference Secretary Floyd L. Carr, stationed in Philadelphia, who reports an enthusiastic line-up for the conference there.

"It will be some race if we can really get them harnessed up to it, and by the help of God we will," writes Conference Secretary J. Franklin Day, from Los Angeles, concerning the contest which is contemplated between that city and another of much greater size.

These letters are typical of the spirit that everywhere seems to pervade the conference secretaries, the pastors and the members of churches all through our Northern Baptist Convention field. With such a spirit, the Bible and missionary conferences cannot fail to be a great success.

Women and Stewardship

By Mrs. George Caleb Moore

THE Continuation Campaign of the women's societies has emphasized from its very beginning, two outstanding elements in Christian life and experience—stewardship and prayer. Stewardship is a manifestation in the life of a Christian of a recognized and accepted relation to God and a resulting responsibility. It follows, therefore, that the principle of stewardship must be fundamental in all plans and in every effort by which we seek to enlist every woman of every church in the world-wide work of missions.

It is of the utmost importance that in this closing year of the New World Movement, both because of its special obligations and because it is a year of preparation for a new period and new endeavors, we should keep in the forefront of our thoughts and action more strongly than ever, the principle of stewardship.

Two brief sentences from God's word may well be the foundation and also the rallying cry of the Continuation Campaign in its relation to stewardship.

"As good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

"Moreover, it is required of stewards that a man be found faithful."

If, and when, every woman in every church is truly a steward of God's manifold grace, and a faithful steward, then will our treasuries be filled to overflowing and many workers will be sent to the harvest field.

The Continuation Campaign committee pledges itself to work untiringly to this end and is assured that the women of the churches will respond in ever-increasing numbers and with deepening devotion to the call of their Lord and Master.

"There shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her." Matt. 26:13.

Being Constrained

Harriet B. Wharton

THE Bible writers were so exact in their use of words! They chose those with just the right shade of meaning to express what they wished to leave for our understanding.

"The love of Christ constraineth us," wrote Paul, and then, "That they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them."

"Constrained" of love—either compelled to or restrained from—his will dominating ours, urging upon our physical or moral natures to act or to forbear from acting according as is best—not for ourselves but for others.

After the miracle feast in the desert the disciples must have longed above all things to remain with their Master and talk over the wonders of the day, but Jesus, desiring to be alone, "constrained" them to get into a ship and go before him to another place. They were not so much compelled to act contrary to their own will, as, by a strong binding force, they were prevented from acting agreeably to their own desires. They realized and accepted, that his was a need to be met by loving obedience.

Later, as two disciples on the Emmaus road had walked and talked with Christ, when they reached the village where they were to spend the night, "constrained" him to abide with them. He knew their need of his company and for love of them tarried.

To be whatever we are and to do whatever we do because of the Christ love directing us is a wonderful aim for any of us, since, when this attaining has come to pass, we, like the discreet scribe, shall be, "not far from the kingdom of God."

The Open Forum

THE SPOON OF THE INTOLERANT CHURCH

In the brotherhood of Christian ministers of the same faith and order we have what might be termed: "big preachers" and, "little preachers." Without attempting to define either the why or wherefore of the contract, I am willing to admit that my place is among the latter class; but since the lion was rescued from the powerful net by the simple gnawing of an insignificant mouse, I dare to do a little gnawing when I see a net whose meshes seem to be gradually tightening upon the body of the church.

I have on my desk a copy of THE BAPTIST bearing date of Aug. 18, 1923. On page 907 of this number, in the second column, my attention was attracted to a brief extract from the pen of the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, entitled, "A Message to Parents." The first time that I read this little quotation I liked it, and it seemed really palatable; but I read it again and found a bone: the more I read the more bones I found, until I came to the conclusion, that except I be mightily confused and void of understanding of the author's motive (for extending this message to parents) somewhere there is a net.

He says in part, "The worst kind of church that can possibly be offered to the allegiance of the new generation is an intolerant church." He defines the intolerant church just a little farther on, by contrasting the open invitation of the scientist to a young man to come and study, to see what he has seen already, and to look further to see more;—to the invitation of the church that says, "Come and we will feed you opinions from a spoon. No thinking is allowed here except such as brings you to certain specified, predetermined conclusions. These prescribed opinions we will give you in advance of your thinking; now think, but only so as to reach these results."

I have this to venture both in question and assertion: What has the church of Jesus Christ to offer to a dying world that cannot be definitely given out? Do we still have men inspired of God to write holy writings? Any opinion with regard to God's plan of salvation that is worth feeding to hungry, dying souls will be found waiting in the Bible for any one who can use the spoon. My opinion is that we have entirely too much of this cafeteria style of serving divine truth. I believe in the church that is intolerant enough to say, "Here is bread, take and eat." And I believe that the church should be intolerant enough to say, "If you don't eat, you will get no nourishment." The church should be intolerant enough to say, "No teaching is allowed here except such as brings you to, or agrees with certain definite statements of God's Word: (specified, predetermined conclusions.) How can a man employ his power of thinking in such a way as to reach a conclusion that has not been specified already by the Captain of our salvation? How can mortal man soar so high in the realm of divine truth, that he is able to reach a conclusion that was not predetermined before the foundation of the world? What higher results can sinful men aspire to in their thinking, than that of reaching the specified and predetermined conclusions of the Son of the carpenter; the cornerstone of the intolerant church?

What would have been the state of religious affairs today if there had not been a resurrection of the intolerant church in the fifteenth century. What would Martin Luther and John Huss, and a great host of others say, if they could regain life long enough to read an extract from a twentieth century preacher's message that says, "The worst kind of church that can possibly be offered to the allegiance of the new generation is an intolerant church?" Because science so liberally offers her laboratory to those who would search for the monkey is no excuse for the church to become so tolerant as to declare: "Monkey or not, come on in and form your own conclusions."

Our Baptist denomination has always repudiated the intolerance that persecutes or that denies to any man the right to hold any religious views or no religious views without interference from the state. But we have never admitted that it makes no difference what one believes, or that a Baptist church may welcome those who deny the authority of God's Word. If that be intolerance, let us make the most of it.

If I have misconstrued our honored brother in his presentation of this message to parents, I desire pardon; but if he really sees in the scientific world sufficient attraction to lure worthwhile young men from the fixed standards of the everlasting church of Jesus Christ, then I say he ought to live in scientific spheres altogether, and wait until some voice from heaven speaks and commands clearly, "Write these things, for behold all of the old things have become new."

He Hated the Old Phrases

BY ROLLIN H. WALKER

A BRILLIANT young man said the other day, talking about the ancient creeds of Christendom, "I hate the old phrases:"

He said the words with great passion, and he surely did not appreciate the unreasonableness of his remark. No one was insisting that he should be tied down to the old phrases for the expression of his thought. Indeed, on the contrary, the man who was talking with him was a stickler for the necessity of putting new wine into new bottles. But to say that one hates the old phrases is a very different thing.

Because one realizes that Worcester and York and Chester cathedrals are very old and crumbly, and in some respects ill-adapted to modern church work, does not lead him to say regarding these old piles, rich with the associations of centuries and majestic in their hoary antiquity, "I hate Worcester and York and Chester cathedrals:" Because the old Italian masters did not understand some of the secrets of modern technique does not lead any one to say, "I hate the old Italian masters." No one would insist that all our modern art should choose the same type of subjects and treat them in the same way as did these old painters, but while we do not wish to copy the ancient Italian masters, their pictures are truly a precious heritage in the world of art.

Many a martyr has died for the ancient creeds. To say "I hate them," is to show one's self strangely devoid of the historic sense, and of a feeling for the greatness and glory of the past of Christianity. A man ought to take up an old creed of the church with the same feeling that a boy of today takes up the sword which his grandfather carried at Gettysburg or Antietam. He should not insist on using the same sword, but anything that is associated with daring and self-sacrifice is a sacred heritage of the race. There is nothing we Americans need more than a feeling of the sacredness of those inheritances of thought and faith that have been handed down to us by martyrs out of the midst of their fires.

Jesus said, "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill." Jesus was iconoclastic and progressive as no other man had ever been, and he broke away from hard and dry conventionalities, but at the same time no man ever lived who had such a sense of the sacredness of the duty of bringing to fruition all the good beginnings of the ancient prophets and seers.

"THE CALL OF THE CITY"
Matt 25:35-40
CONQUEST MEETING

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Literature

"The Call to You"; "Mobilizing Forces"; "On the Top of the Hill"; "Fellowship House, Omaha, Nebr."; "Christian Centers"; "Strong Place Community House"; "Brooks House"; "Los Angeles Baptist Christian Center"; "Cleveland's Christian Center"; "Davenport House of Christian Fellowship"; "Raymond Institute"; (all free). The above materials may be obtained from the Literature Bureau of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 313 West Third St., Los Angeles.

The Call of the City

The early city grew out of the necessities of defense against unfriendly neighbors. The modern city is a social and economic growth, holding out to the foreigner and rural dweller promises of financial prosperity, of cultural advantages, of opportunities for amusement, the appeal to ambition, the fascination of being where things are happening. As a matter of fact the city keeps all these promises to those who are strong enough and astute enough to win them in the tremendous pressure of competition. The largest fortunes are made in the cities; the world's intellectual leaders, and the outstanding men and women in the professions are the products of the city's educational institutions. Her schools offer opportunities for education to all who will take them.

The Call of the Strangers

1. Workers. Every day brings an influx of young men and women from the towns or country seeking employment in the mercantile establishments, the offices and the shops of the city. Sometimes lack of opportunity along chosen lines of work impelled the worker to leave his home town. More often the lure of more money to be earned drew the worker cityward. There many unexpected obstacles loomed at every turn. The high cost of living, the press of competition, the drive of closely organized business, all demanded new and difficult adjustments.

Frequently the greatest need of the newcomer is companionship of the right sort. Loneliness reaches its apex among city crowds. The fortunate young man or woman soon finds a place in some friendly church and Sunday-school class; but for one who thus makes helpful and wholesome contacts, a score or more seek satisfaction of their social needs among questionable companions and pleasures. Even young people who were churchgoers at home find it easy to let down their standards in the city.

2. Students. The great educational institutions annually attract to the city thousands of students from the ends of the earth. Professional schools of all sorts, art schools, business schools, all are filled with out-of-town students who come to spend from one to four years in more or less intensive work. Only a small proportion of these enjoy the friendly associations of college dormitories and fraternity houses. The vast majority find shelter in rooming houses and food in public restaurants. Christian friendliness may find here a field for service.

3. Foreigners. The earlier immigrants most often passed by the cities and found their opportunity in developing the land. During the past two or three decades the trend has been toward the cities. Here the great trans-Atlantic steamers land a continual stream of newcomers, many of whom, having at last passed through the gateway of America, seek out that portion of the city where many of their fellow countrymen have already established themselves, and settle down to live the old life in the new country. America goes on around them and above them. They are in America, but not of it; they are of Little Italy, or Little Russia, or Little Bohemia. Unfortunately their experiences are those of the exploited, of those who come into contact with laws they do not understand.

Answering the Call

Individual friendliness may do a great deal towards overcoming many difficulties arising among strangers in a large city. It is up to the young Christians to be true friends to strangers in the city, to give them work to do in the church or Sunday school. Make personal calls on any foreigners in the community. help them to know the city where they make their home.

City churches oftentimes adapt their programs to meet the needs of ministering to strangers. Dinners, either in homes or in churches, will help to get young people into the right social atmosphere. Classes in Americanization are held in various city churches for the purpose of helping foreigners.

Social service work of this sort may be done by every young people's society. There is a great field for it. Won't yours answer the call?

International Sunday School Lesson for October 28

SOME MISSIONARY TEACHINGS OF THE PROPHETS

Lesson: Isaiah 60:1-3; Jonah 4:10, 11; Micah 4:1-3; Zephaniah 3:9
Golden Text:

Nations shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.
—Isaiah 60:3.

To understand the quotations used as the text for the day's lesson it is necessary to know what their background is. For this purpose the following is reprinted from "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" (Revell):

The background of Isaiah 60.1-3. "The song looks as if it were a designed counterpart to the magnificent ode in Chapter 47. The one described Babylon's fall; the other glorifies Jerusalem's rising again. It further resembles its lyric predecessor in the looseness of its connection with the prophecies among which it is inserted, and it is not an unreasonable conjecture that both songs originally existed in a separate form.

The background of Jonah 4.10, 11. We have here the closing words of the Book of Jonah, which, as Dr. Joseph Fort Newton declares, "delicately, playfully, profoundly, reveal how a childish, inhuman, selfish hatred blinds the eyes of a man to the divine realities. The surly annoyance of Jonah at the withering of a gourd vine is set over against the infinite travail of the love of God for a great city. It is a blinding flash of light in which we are shown the fathomless pity of God, and his unbounded compassion for all peoples in all lands."

The background of Micah, 4.1-3. The first three chapters of Micah contain denunciations of sin and threatenings of judgment, and are followed in chapters four and five by words of hope and cheer. In our selection we are not now concerned with his prophecy of universal peace, but with his announcement of the coming world-wide supremacy of Jehovah.

The background of Zephaniah 3.9. In the first chapter Zephaniah proclaims the day of judgment for guilty Judah: in the second, Jehovah's impending judgment upon her neighbors, the Philistines, Moabites and Ammonites, upon her allies the Ethiopians, and upon her ancient enemy the Assyrians: and the first thirteen verses of chapter three, the judgment upon the corrupt ruling classes of Jerusalem. Verses nine and ten are an interlude—the surviving remnant will be purified.

It is seen that the missionary message is one of light and leading—"Arise, shine . . . and nations shall come to thy light and kings to thy understanding." Of compassion—"Thou hast had regard for the gourd . . . Should not I have regard for Nineveh?" Of one God for all the nations—"The mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established on the top of the mountains . . . and peoples shall flow unto it. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Of a pure, prayerful people serving God with one consent.

The Spasmodic Member

"Here I am again. Have to come around once in a while to see how the old class is getting on."

He hadn't been there for at least six weeks, probably longer, and yet he walked in with the same kindly grin, knowing by experience that he was assured of a welcome, and settled down in one of the choice seats quite as though he owned the place. Took just as large a part as any one else in the discussion as to the class picnic also, and was quite as ready as usual to express his opinions on the lesson, one of a series, by the way.

You have them and will recognize the type. Every class has—the man or woman who feels free to stray in whenever he or she "feels like it," and still considers himself a regular member and entitled to all the class privileges.

Anywhere else but in church or Sunday school this type of member wouldn't be tolerated for a moment. But since the Sunday School, and particularly the adult class, is a democratic, fraternal, informal, and "free" institution, we allow it and usually welcome the transgressor.

We had three or four members like that in a young men's class I was associated with for some time. And, by reason of local conditions, their "every-once-in-a-while" characteristics were particularly annoying. We were badly located in a small room which was crowded every Sunday, and which made a limit to the class membership absolutely essential. The class was even popular enough to have a "waiting-list," like some of the clubs we know. These chaps were members of long standing, one or two of whom had been regular attendants but had drifted into the irregular method. They were good fellows all round and it scarcely seemed wise to drop them. There was a problem.

THE restless millions wait
The Light whose dawning
Makes all things new:
Christ also waits,
But men are slow and late.
Have we done what we could?
Have I? Have you?

The matter was brought up by the president at a class-executive meeting during the week, and at his suggestion we tried to get at the reason for the objectionable course. Careful analyzation brought the thing down to the simple terms that these fellows were not sufficiently interested in the class to be loyal. As one officer said: "They're like we used to be when we played hookey from school. Don't care enough about it to want to be there."

Probably that is a fact which will stand as self-evident in regard to any of the people of this type. The next thing was to try to find a way through.

One member suggested having a committee to take turns in calling for them each Sunday. That plan might work with a certain type of class-member. It was vetoed in this case, since these were independent, easy-going young men who wouldn't stand being coerced or nursed.

Finally we hit on two things. The first was a debate to which the "sinners" were to be casually invited, and in which two of them were to be asked to take part on the subject, "Resolved that it is worth while to attend the class every Sunday." The two casual attendants were listed one on each side, associated with loyal members. These latter aimed to bring out the fact, in their negative and positive arguments, that we should go to Sunday school just as we go to day-school or college, not for what we got in any one session, but for the course of mental training regular attendance gave us.

The debate did some good, though its results were not permanent. But soon afterward we did hit on a scheme—we fished up jobs for those chaps to do. One was made an official welcomer; another, who played well, was made pianist; and a third was roped into a real executive job. We tried it on the fourth man too, but he wouldn't be lassoed and ultimately dropped out altogether. The other three stuck, and while there were occasional recurrences of their weakness these were not nearly so frequent or so annoying as formerly.

One most successful class of men makes the boast that every member has a job. When they get a new member they create a job, if necessary, for him. Some people in the same school accuse them of being overofficered. Perhaps they are. But they do a lot of things surprisingly well, and, what is even more notable, have an exceedingly high average attendance and a most marked spirit of class loyalty.

Can you work out some scheme like this for your class?—Edward Moore in The Men's Class.

The Home of the Brave

Chapter VI. Cents and Sensibility

THE morning after Veronica's visit, Richard Brave attacked his grapefruit in an exceedingly distracted manner. After three mouthfuls he laid down the spoon and looking apologetically at his sister, said: "Patricia, exactly how much income have you?"

She too laid down her spoon: "Of all things, Ricky!" she exclaimed in mild surprise. But she named the amount.

He nodded thoughtfully. Then he gave her another quizzical glance: "Pat," he said simply, "money and real estate and possessions are the very limit, aren't they? Do you mind telling me how you regard them—as if you were the owner or as if you were—the trustee?"

Deeper surprise dawned in her face: "My dear boy," she ejaculated, "have you gone daft? The money's mine, Ricky, every cent of it. It's mine to give away, give away, squander, and eventually to will exactly as I please. I'm not in any sense a trustee! What in the world makes you ask?"

"I wondered." he replied, and continued his breakfast.

Patricia Brave looked exasperated: "I wish you'd explain further, Ricky. There must be something behind your question?"

"Well, there is. It's this: we're Christians, you and I, we like to know that the Braves have had a pew in the old First Church since the year one. We like to know that Ephriam Brave was a pillar of it and that Nathaniel Brave was a pillar too. But, my dear, Richard Brave isn't much of a pillar, nor Patricia Brave, either."

"Nonsense!" she snorted, amused, "I pay my pew rent every quarter."

"Dear me, as generous as that!" he said with gentle sarcasm. Then: "Pat, did it ever occur to you that you don't actually own a blessed cent of your money or a single inch of real estate. If you trace your inheritance back far enough you'll find that you get it all from God; and our forefathers, darling, were willing enough to acknowledge that it was he who gave them power to get wealth. Last night I was reading old Ezekiel Brave's diary with its daily account book at the end, and it was a mighty stirring thing to note that on the first day of every week old Uncle Zek had taken an exact tenth of the week's earnings and given them to the Lord—for every seventh day, Pat, there was a careful addition, a careful subtraction of a tenth in the margin of that diary. I don't know when anything has stirred me more. Book after book of those painstaking accounts, covering twenty or more years, at the end of each year a little 'Vale'—'God having mercifully blessed me during these past twelve months I now herewith gratefully ackowledge his goodness by the making of a special thankoffering; and there it would be, listed: $10 in the first ledger, from a salary of $1800 a year. Then $25 from his $2200 salary; each year a slight increase with his larger salary. And the year he entered the firm of Brave & Brave Brothers, he wrote: 'Right well I know that of my own wits I can do nothing and have done nothing. I therefore pledge to thee, my Maker, this first fruits of my new earnings. Bless me in thy service, Lord. Help me to remember always, as riches come, that thine is the power and the glory.' There was $1500 in the margin for that gift. In 1887, that was."

"I remember him so well that very year, Ricky, he came to stay with us when Aunt Euphemia died. I was home from boarding school—"

Richard Brave nodded: "And that was the year his notebook said: 'Phemie left a savings account of $804.59. I have sent it to the missionary society in Boston, asking them to use it where there is special stress just now, for all her life Phemie's money has been hands to her soul, and now that she has gone I want her to go on blessing those unsaved persons over whom her spirit yearned. It was she who taught me that money was merely my other self—another voice to speak for me where I could not be, another pair of hands to work for me, another pair of feet to walk into the homes of persons needing me. Money is loaned me in trust by God, the real owner. How I hope little Philip and Joan Brave will remember this about their mother and me.'"

"But they both died," Patricia Brave said softly. "I remember yet how I cried to see them both so little and white and—pure."

"I remember too," Richard nodded. "Uncle Ezekiel's diary said: 'I cannot express to God the thankfulness of my heart for the loan of my two beautiful darlings. My arms are empty indeed now that they are gone. But on the way back from the cemetery we drove through Factory Center and I saw sights I shall never forget. A voice inside me said: 'There are other children.' I must look them up and do what I can at once. And Pat, his ledgers show an amazing thing—he supported orphans in China, in India, in Mexico, in Alaska, in New York, in Oklahoma, in Chinatown. The entries in his ledger are so terse you might not guess it—just: 'To G. C. in China, 'To G. C. in South India,' with a goodly sum opposite. I kept wondering who G. C. might be until I discovered it meant simply: 'God's Children.' Pat, we've got an ancestor to be proud of. It's his money we're living on. I don't know how you spend your money, but you acknowledge that you feel you own it! Pat, it's only a trust to you; it's come straight from God via that grand old man. His very spirit must be hovering in these halls longing unspeakably to arouse us to an adequate devo-

A "Composition" on "Columbus"

By a Little Jewish Boy

NOW you must know that the world was once divided into little chunks, and on one of these little chunks lived the Spinach (Spanish). And of the Spinach there was a Konig, and his name was Ferdinand, but for short they called him Ferdy. And there was a Queenig, and her name was Isabella, but for short they called her Issy. And there was a Subject, and his name was Christopher, but for short they called him Chris.

Well, one day Chris went down by the palace. And he said to the guarg what stands by the door: "I would have speech mit the Konig." The guarg he say "Well, you can't have speech mit the Konig, cause why he's gone walking with Issy."

"Then I go find him," says Chris. So he went down by the city and on the odder side of the road he saw Ferdy and Issy and he began making wavings mit his hands. And Issy she poke Ferdy in the ribs and she say "What for that man make wavings mit his hands?"

And Ferdy he say "I dunno, but I go see." So he went on the odder side of the road and he say: "What for you make wavings mit the hands?"

And Chris he say, "Because I should have discovered America yet once and I ain't did it yet."

So Ferdy he say "Issy, you go back by the palaces; and Chris, we go down by the wharf, and any boat that ain't working you dast have."

So they went down by the wharf, and Chris he say, "I tink I take the pink one." So they fill the boat mit rootbeer and pretzels and cruise and all those tings what you takes when you goes to discover America.

When they was out one, two, three days the sailors come to Chris and say, "Chris, we would have mutinies." And Chris he say, "We ain't got no mutinies, but they is rootbeer and pretzels." So they goes and gets the rootbeer and pretzels. Then four, five, six days more they comes back to Chris and they say, "Chris, we would have mutinies!"

And Chris he say "We ain't got no mutinies, but they is more root beer and pretzels." Well, seven, eight, nine days pass and they comes to Chris and they say "Chris, we would have mutinies!" And Chris he say "We ain't got no mutinies, and what's more we ain't got no more beer and pretzels."

Just then the guy what stands up high—you know that guy?—well, he say "I spy a speck in the spee glass!"

And Chris, he say, "Well, you hang on to it!" For you know, when you spy a speck in the spee glass all you has to do is to hang on to it till you comes up to it.

By and by they comes up the land for you know they is two kinds of land, the kind you comes up to and the kind you runs around on. And when they comes up to the kind of land you comes up to they find a lot of little scavages running around on the kind of land you runs around on. And when these little scavages saw Chris they say "We knows who you is. You is Christopher Columbus and we is—discovered!"

Columbus

By Joaquin Miller

BEHIND him lay the gray Azores,
Behind, the Gates of Hercules;
Before him not the ghost of shores;
Before him only shoreless sea.
The good mate said: "Now must we pray,
For lo! the very stars are gone.
Brave Adm'r'l, speak; what shall I say?"
"Why, say: 'Sail on! sail on! sail on!'"

"My men grow mutinous day by day;
My men grow ghastly wan and weak."
The stout mate thought of home; a spray
Of salt wave washed his swarthy cheek.
"What shall I say, brave Adm'r'l, say,
If we see naught but seas at dawn?"
"Why, you shall say at break of day:
'Sail on! sail on! sail on! sail on!'"

They sailed and sailed, as winds might blow,
Until at last the blanched mate said:
"Why, now not even God would know
Should I and all my men fall dead.
These very winds forget their way,
For God from these dread seas is gone.
Now speak, brave Adm'r'l; speak and say——"
He said: "Sail on! sail on! sail on!"

They sailed. They sailed. Then spake the mate:
"This mad sea shows his teeth tonight.
He curls his lips, he lies in wait,
With lifted teeth, as if to bite!
Brave Adm'r'l, say but one good word:
What shall we do when hope is gone?"
The word leapt like a leaping sword:
"Sail on! sail on! sail on! sail on!"

Then, pale and worn, he kept his deck,
And peered through darkness. Ah, that night
Of all dark nights! And then a speck—
A light! A light! A light! A light!
It grew, a starlit flag unfurled!
It grew to be Time's burst of dawn.
He gained a world; he gave that world
Its grandest lesson: "On! Sail on!"

Sail On!

Dear Young Reserves,

Probably every one of you knows that on the twelfth of October, 1492, Christopher Columbus discovered America. Probably every one of you knows that he alone in all the world believed that the earth was round; he had put two and two together—he knew, for instance, that when his father's wool carts came toward him over the rounded dome of a hill that first he could see the ears of the beasts, then their legs came into view, and then the cart; and in the same way he noticed that when he stood on the wharf at Genoa watching the ships come in, it was the top of their rigging which appeared first above the sea-line, then the sails showed, then the wooden sides. And when he put two and two together he decided that the world was undoubtedly round and somewhat like a hill. It was a great discovery, but nobody believed him!

They laughed at him. They ridiculed him. They turned deaf ears to his plea for ships. He traveled from Italy to Portugal and from Portugal to Spain pleading with people to help him discover the lands which surely, surely, surely lay on the other side of the curving waters. But he had to wait until he was a middle-aged man before three little ships were finally given him—the other stories on this page will tell you in their own way the difficulties he met and overcame in discovering our great continent.

The point I want to make for each of you Young Reserves is this: there are still parts of the world left for you to discover, therefore—sail on!! You needn't get any other ship than Friendship for your voyage, but oh, do sail on in it! Sail clear away world, beginning next week and see if you aren't astonished at some of the things you will discover on this very page about YOUR world. Watch! Look! Listen!

That there are seventy-five students in the Chinese night school operated by the Seattle District B. Y. P. U., and that there are thirty enrolled in the Japanese night school?

That the salaries of the teachers are taken care of by the missionary treasury of the district B. Y. P. U. and that the total expenditures for the year approximate $700?

That at Christmas the district B. Y. P. U. made 150 children from the Japanese church happy by providing tree decorations and presenting gifts, candy, and other treats?

That many of the boys who have come to understand the Word in these schools have united with the church, and one occupies a position of B. Y. P. U. president, and Bible-school teacher of a large class of boys?

The Maritime Baptist Convention

By A. C. Chute

The seventy-eighth annual meeting of this body was recently held in Wolfville, Nova Scotia. About 300 delegates assembled from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. They were entertained at the boarding houses of our Acadia schools, which afforded ample opportunity for fellowship. During last year's gathering President Cutten took leave of us for Colgate; during this, President Patterson was present and led the devotional periods with a series of addresses upon "The Church."

At the last session of the Baptist Institute, which immediately preceded the convention, Prof. W. C. Keirstead, of the University of New Brunswick, spoke upon "The Survival of the Fittest—Who Are the Fit?"

The report on foreign missions was given by Rev. H. E. Stillwell, of Toronto, secretary of the Canadian Foreign Mission Board, who reviewed conditions in India and Bolivia. The most significant event in the latter country was the opening of a school at Oruro, known as Reekie College, named after the pioneer Bolivian missionary. At the evening missionary service addresses were given by Mr. Stillwell, and three returned missionaries from India, Revs. John Hardy and W. S. Tedford, and Miss Lottie Sanford.

The cause of home missions was represented by Rev. E. S. Mason of Wolfville, Rev. E. Bosworth and Dr. M. F. McCutcheon of Montreal. Doctor McCutcheon spoke on behalf of Grande Ligne, raising the question as to whether our missionary activity among Roman Catholics was justifiable, and proving with clarity and force that it was eminently so.

The educational report recalled the special convention at Moncton, N. B., in last April, when the decision was reached against the proposed amalgamation of Maritime College, and for continuance of our work in Wolfville. Appreciative allusion was made to a series of articles running in the Maratime Baptist since the first of last February, and not yet quite completed, upon "The Religious Life of Acadia," recounting manifestations of God's saving grace from time to time among the students. Courses in the theological department have been enlarged and made to fit in the better with existing requirements. Dr. J. H. MacDonald has been taken out of the Wolfville pulpit and has joined the teaching staff in theology. The ruins of the old college building are now being cleared away, and the foundation is being prepared for the erection of a new structure, somewhat similar in appearance to its predecessor, but larger. It will have eight class-rooms, offices for president, bursar, and registrar and an auditorium with a seating capacity of 2000.

An attractive handbook, prepared by a committee appointed some time ago, and published by the American Baptist Publication Society which has now a branch in Toronto, was accepted as the official handbook for the ministers and churches of the Maritime Convention. It meets a need which has long been talked about.

One session was devoted to a memorial service in honor of one of the most useful men we have ever had among us, the late Dr. A. Cohoon, once our superintendent of home missions, but for the past twenty-eight years bursar of our educational institutions. In the community where he resided, in the church and university where he long labored, and in the denomination he loved, and to which he gave the most zealous and efficient service, he was a tower of strength. Addresses dealing with the character and service were delivered by Doctor Cutten of Colgate, Rev. E. S. Mason, and the writer of these notes.

A great pleasure has been enjoyed by myself and family through a visit to Nova Scotia of persons much beloved in Chicago, and among the Baptists of America who are most deeply interested in foreign missionary endeavor—Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Osgood. Associated in former years with Deacon Osgood in the Austin Church, Chicago, and not having seen him for a stretch of years, it was a delight indeed to welcome him to this part of the world, to find him with such physical vigor, and to observe that his zeal for his Sunday school and church, and for the missionary cause to which his father before him was so ardently devoted, was not one whit abated. While together for a few days we seemed to be living over again the old and happy times as we talked of our mutual friends, some of whom still remain, while many have departed. May a goodly number of blissful and fruitful years be yet granted to Mr. and Mrs. Osgood.

Rest a Tonic

TO those who have had a vacation, the work of the autumn will be a joy. The first task now is the personal one of shepherding the scattered flock. The second is program building. Some of the plans made as the year was closing will now look small and unworthy. The third task is one of defense—self-defense. Save time for soul growth. Reading, study, fellowship, recreation—all are essential. Get away from your task often. The world of affairs needs a little of you. Great and good enterprises need you. A "hack" is a man who sticks too close to his own job. Let the breezes blow through your garden. Thrust your church out into the strong currents of world thought and world problems. Don't worry. Don't rush about. Avoid lost motion. The Christian leader should keep a calm spirit. Have faith in God.

Burma

By J. Herbert Cope

The government has been seeking the cause of the increase in crime in the province. A committee of course was appointed and the members have been taking volumes of evidence in various parts of the country. The causes given would make a fair-sized pocket dictionary. Poverty, unemployment, aliens, corruption, underpaid police, drinking, gambling, drugs are some of the causes given, emphasis depending on the part of the country from which the witnesses come. And some have laid the blame to the lack of moral and religious instruction in the schools. This has been the complaint ever since the coming of the white man who takes a neutral position regarding religion. Another proof that there is no neutral position in such matters as religion and morals. One interesting thing suggested is that since, as in all countries prison sentence for petty crime is a failure, the culprits be shamed into obeying the laws. Whether this will take the form of stocks or not is not told. But the legislative council has its work cut out if it is going to legislate for all these suggestions.

There is an American association in Rangoon, made up largely of missionaries. Years ago it tried picnics on the Fourth. But the heavens in July weep more copiously than they smile and the picnics usually ended as they sometimes do at home, in a wetting. So now a dinner is given with speeches and fireworks and all that. A whole column and a half in the papers this year was taken up with the account.

Letters are full of school news. They open here in May and every missionary is worrying more over room for pupils than pupils for room. Education is as popular as at home. Schools which a short time ago were so proud when they passed the 200 mark, are turning away pupils when the 300 mark was reached. But the most encouraging prospect is that of the college. A few years ago there was a question whether we ought to close up and give the government a free hand. Now there is no doubt of the permanency of Judson College. The enrolment this year has passed 250 and some have been turned away. Every available house or hut on the compound has been pressed into service as dormitory space and yet there is not enough room. Unless temporary buildings can be put up during the year there will be a larger number turned away next year. Baptists have as much right to be proud of Judson as they have of Shanghai although there is little comparison in equipment. But some day Judson will have its new college. Plans are being held up by the government.

The wealth of Burma and the high salaries paid, make it a sort of melting-pot for the East. And thus the mission work is polyglot. This month the Chinese church of Mandalay dedicated its new building with appropriate exercises. I saw the building when half completed and it must be one to be proud of. The Karen Christians had a part in the erection by adding a wing for the home of the preacher and his family. The great drawback to the Chinese work in upper Burma is that they are for the most part carpenters and move about from place to place on building operations. It is difficult to conduct self-supporting work among them.

Aiken Institute

By N. Chapman

I recently visited Aiken Institute and was delighted to find that the work goes on with all the vigor and freshness that characterized its earlier years. The children in Aiken Institute are like "Buster Brown" and "Skeezix" in the cartoons—they never grow up. The same little pathetic faces in the kindergarten and day nursery; the same eager group in the daily vacation Bible school; the same type of women bending over the sewing machines trying so hard to learn how to make the garments they have worn all their lives but have never tried to construct for themselves. How proud they look when, under the direction of Miss Morey, the dress or apron is completed. How grateful they are for the interest that is a new form of charity to them. They have been given things before but to be taught how to make them, that is a joy that has never before been theirs. When on family night the little boy or girl is asked to recite a verse of scripture or sing a song or tell the lesson story, these women feel for the first time the pride of parenthood. They have begun to see in the child a person possessed of capabilities that are admired by others. Oh! the joy of bringing to pass this change.

Do you know that while for seven years the work has gone on and the neighborhood has become more and more a manufacturing center, it is still true that there are more children in the daily vacation Bible school at Aiken than in any other such school in the world? Over 1000 registered this past summer, and our first children are men and women now. During all these years there have been going out into the community, lives that have been made over. Perhaps few will know the influence of our work, or recognize the hand of the workers at Aiken who, under God, have brought all this glorious change, but in the book of remembrance kept by the angels, the record will stand and every place where these transformed lives have gone is brighter and better because our work has been done.

I tremble at the thought of the curtailing of effort that threatens the work here among the little ones. The financial stringency has made it necessary to cut off the salary of our nurse in charge of the day nursery. It is not allowable to go out and ask for funds and yet, how can we lessen our effort for the babies? Some one must take care of this salary—$75 a month for a service that begins at seven in the morning and ends at six at night. Twenty-five little ones to wash and feed and care for during all the day; every bed full at nap time and a waiting list asking to be allowed to come in. The mothers love us for the care given the little ones. They learn how to make the best of what they have by seeing the effect of intelligent care. They listen to the gospel message in the mothers' meetings, because their hearts have been won through the children. Last winter the furnaces broke down and the children were not warm enough all of the time. This year we have bought new ones to be paid for by the month. Where is the money to come from? We do not know, but we have faith to believe that the Lord will provide. For every dollar spent in the Aiken Institute since its beginning there is a song of joy in the hearts of God's people. Surely he will not let this work suffer when the land is full of prosperity and plenty.

May God lead us out into a sure place and give us this day our daily bread.

The Passing of Mrs. S. W. Phelps

In the death of Mrs. S. W. Phelps, wife of Rev. S. W. Phelps, pastor of the Grace Church, Milwaukee, the denomination has lost an efficient worker.

Mrs. Phelps died at the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, Sept. 26, following a serious operation.

She was born in Oakland, Ontario, April 3, 1858. Mrs. Phelps possessed unusual executive ability. She was a member of the board of directors of the state of Michigan and field secretary and organizer of the Farther Light societies. In Wisconsin she filled a similar place in the organized work of Baptists. She was a member of the state board of managers, president of the Woman's Mission Society of the state, chairman of the state committee on young people's work, a member of the religious education committee, chairman of the Milwaukee committee on city mission work among the 100,000 Polish people of the city, and for two years she served as president of the Wisconsin Ministers' Wives Association. For many years Mrs. Phelps was a member of the board of the Woman's Missionary Society of the West Chicago District. During the term of her service as secretary of the young women's work in Michigan, she organized over 100 Farther Light societies.

Mrs. Phelps is survived by her husband and six children: Grace, Elmore, Homer, Torrence, Wendell and V. V. Phelps.

Milwaukee Baptists Repeat

Milwaukee Baptists held their fall rally, Monday, Oct. 1, and in every way it was better than the one held a year before. Milwaukee Baptists have a reputation for moving slowly, but when they do move they create some enthusiasm. A year ago when they held their big rally it was freely predicted that it could not be done again, since a great deal of pressure was brought to bear to get results. This year there was not so much pressure needed, but the crowd was larger than a year ago, and the program was of a high order. The program was built about the idea of "An Opportunity for Advance Work." Those taking part were Rev. C. A. Boyd, Miss Leona Chase, R. O. Jasperson of New York City, and Miss Alice Brimson of Chicago. Dr. Peter Wright happened to be passing through the city and was present for a little part in the program.

Since Milwaukee Baptists, because of the New World Movement, have been able to function in a worthwhile city union, they have made remarkable advance in all lines. Advance has been made in the young people's work. All the organizations in the city now are B. Y. P. U. with but one exception. They are now concentrating upon a worthwhile service for the churches, and endeavoring to promote Baptist loyalty among the young people of the churches.

The laymen's department of the union is creating an organization that will undertake large things in this city. It means the enlistment of 100 men in city work.

The young people held their rally on Sept. 25. It was a success in every way. More than 100 were present for the supper, and probably that many more were present for the program. Rev. Rollo C. Speer was the speaker of the evening, taking as his subject, "The Stewardship of Youth." Miss Leona Chase is president of this organization.

Some Other Notes

Word has been received by the First Church of Madison that its new minister, Dr. N. B. Henderson, will begin work with it the first of November.

It is also reported that Rev. Hugh Stewart of Rochester, N. Y., has accepted the work as student pastor at the University at Madison. We have a splendid home for the pastor there, and a large opportunity for service among onr Baptist students.

The sympathy of the brethren will go out to Dr. S. W. Phelps in the loss of his wife. She had been poorly all summer, and died in Chicago, Sept. 25 after a major operation. The funeral services were held in Milwaukee on Friday, Sept. 28, with Rev. F. K. Kamm and Dr. D. W. Hulburt in charge. A large company of friends filled the church. For a number of years Mrs. Phelps filled a large place in the work of the denomination in this state, being a member of the woman's board, a member of the board of managers of the state convention, and connected intimately with the work of the denomination in the city.

The reports coming from the Christian Life Conference which held its third annual session at Eau Claire, indicate a successful meeting. Dr. J. A. Sutherland, of California, was the chief teacher and speaker. Others taking part were Rev. Ralph Barry, Paul MacKinney, Rev. Mr. Andreason, and Dr. and Mrs. Charles Manley of India. It is hoped to continue the meetings each year.

Plans for a large attendance at the state convention at LaCrosse are being put into operation. It is hoped to run a special train from Milwaukee, carrying all the people from the eastern part of the state. The main feature of the convention this year is the Bible and missionary conference. The brethren at LaCrosse are planning to take care of a large number of delegates and visitors.

Roumanian Persecution of Baptists

Recently Doctor Rushbrooke received further evidence of the intolerant attitude of the Roumanian authorities. The most recent examples reported are:

(1) At Kischineff it is said the commandant has instructed the police, in accordance with orders from the government, to keep strict watch over the Baptists, and, as soon as anything suspicious appears, to close their chapel. The Baptists are accused of making the people rebellious; of preaching against the religion of the state; and of spreading propaganda against the worship of ikons.

(2) The pastor of the Baptist preaching station in the town of Hotin is forbidden to hold services, and placed under police supervision at Kischineff, having to report there every Sunday and have his passport viseed. For this reason his stations are not being served, and baptisms and marriages cannot take place. Other preachers, each in his station, have been cross-examined by the authorities, who are everywhere making difficulties.

(3) During the last few weeks Baptists in the little town of Floreschty, District Soroki, have been terribly beaten. They were then sent to Kischineff to be court-martialed, and are kept there in the military prison.

(4) Some Baptists from Kauschan, District Bender, went to visit acquaintances in Mansir in the same district. During supper they sang hymns and read the Scriptures, a number of people being present who wished to see the visitors. On the following day all departed. Soon afterwards the brethren were arrested on false accusations, sent with gendarmes to Kischineff and put into the military prison. After two weeks they were released, but received papers stating that the release was only temporary and they must present themselves to the local police on their return home.

(5) In the village of Fantana-Zahilor the authorities refuse permission for Baptist meetings.

Montgomery Ward Invests $10,000 in a Baptist Hospital

A few days ago an announcement appeared in one of the St. Paul newspapers informing the public that Montgomery Ward & Company, through its northwest branch located in the Twin Cities, has headed a list of "foreign" gifts toward the new Northwest Baptist Hospital with $10,000.

The following letter, addressed to the business men of the Twin Cities who are working for the new hospital, signed by Mr. Charles E. McCoy, head of the Montgomery Ward plant in the Twin

CHARLES E. McCOY

Cities, is both interesting and encouraging. The letter follows:

"The success which has attended the efforts of our Midway Hospital campaigners in their organization work for the Baptist hospital so far convinces me that the people of the Midway district are thoroughly interested in this vital project, and will push it to completion.

"The Midway district has grown fast in a business way and in its residential character. The Baptists of the Northwest have evolved plans to build a hospital so large and fine that it would be the official Baptist hospital for five northern states, including and bordering on Minnesota. They wanted it in the metropolitan center of the area.

"They were shown the advantages of the Midway district, with its 75,000 people, its easy access to the great Northwest cities, its wide streets, beautiful homes and thriving industries, the very center not only of the Twin Cities but of the entire Northwest. And Midway won.

"And now it is entirely up to the Midway district whether or not this great improvement takes place. I believe from the response we have had so far, the hospital is sure to go over.

"Let's all put our shoulder to the wheel and make sure the Midway Hospital is built not only to serve ourselves but generations to come.

Charles E. McCoy."

Doctor Ross Takes Up New Work

Dr. J. J. Ross, late of the Ruggles Street Church, Boston, is on his new field at First Church, Vancouver, B. C., possibly the strongest Baptist church in Canada, returning to his Canadian ministry after a service in the United States of about five years at which time he came from Hamilton, Canada, to be pastor of the Second Church, Chicago.

The event calls for more than a passing notice of a "change of pastorates." Doctor Ross served the Second Church in Chicago with exceptional success for years. He was at the same time a lecturer in the Northern Baptist Seminary and rendered a great service to that institution giving it a new standing before the denomination. He was also much in demand in speeches at state conventions, especially on biblical topics as an expositor and homilist.

Doctor Ross is vice-president of the Publication Society and of the Promotion Board of the Illinois State Convention. When in Chicago he was president of the Ministers' Conference. He has written valuable books and others are forthcoming at the request of his publishers. While the doctor is well known as a man of unswerving and deep convictions on questions that are mooted in the denomination and are stirring Baptist circles, he never has obtruded his views so as to create dissensions and divisions among his brethren. He is eminently irenic—a man of peace as well as of strenuous convictions—never compromising his convictions of truth nor a stirrer of strife. It was greatly regretted in the Middle West that he departed to Boston. It is well settled that his course in Boston has been fair, practical and honorable, however regrettable that he leaves the field. His stay in the United States has been much too short, and a future return will be welcomed with gladness. Not an association or memory connected with his name and work but what are a sweet savor among his brethren here.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY of the Contoocook Church, Rev. H. I. Kemp, pastor, was recently observed with services continuing through the greater part of a week. This church is responding to the work of the pastor.

THE PEOPLE'S CHURCH OF MANCHESTER, Rev. H. R. Whitelock, pastor, has exchanged its church property with the property of the American Legion. It is believed that the new quarters for each organization will be better adapted to its needs. The legion building is a new one and is located but a short distance from the present church property of the church. The new building will be occupied for the first time by the church Oct. 14.

THE TEN ASSOCIATIONS of the state held their annual meetings during the month of September. The attendance was good and the outlook for the year is encouraging in the churches.

A COUNCIL MET with the Pleasant Street Church, Concord, Sept. 28 regarding ordination of its pastor. Services were held Sunday evening, Sept. 30. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the convention, was moderator, and E. J. Abar served as clerk. The sermon was preached by Prof. Woodman Bradbury, of Newton Theological Institution. Mr. Rockwell was in the last graduating class at Newton and began his pastorate with the Pleasant Street Church Aug. 1.

REV. A. W. YOUNG, for ten years pastor at Campton, resigned and accepted a call to the church at Bryant's Pond, Me. Mr. Young concluded his pastorate at Campton the last Sunday in September. Mr. and Mrs. Young have rendered a good service on the field where they worked so long.

REV. F. D. JOHNSON has resigned at South Hampton and will spend the winter at East Westmoreland.

THE WHITE MOUNTAINS ASSOCIATION held its annual session at Berlin, Sept. 26, and had as principal speakers, York A. King, J. W. Scott, D. S. Jenks, and Mrs. Frances Campbell. The moderator, E. M. Fuller, gave the annual sermon. Four reporting churches showed a net increase of thirty-seven in membership and thirty-one baptisms.

CONNECTICUT

THE EIGHTY-FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Fairfield Association was held with the New Hope Church, J. Edward Harris, pastor, in the Second Church building, Danbury, on Wednesday, Sept. 26. The usual routine of the morning sessions, consisting of appointment of committees and reports of standing committees was carried through with despatch. Charles A. Decker, pastor First Bridgeport Church, preached the annual sermon. The address on the New World Movement outlook was given by Ellis Gilbert. This address, together with the annual sermon, constituted a stirring challenge to the churches to do their utmost during this last year of the co-operative movement to meet the associational expectation. After a conference on the promotional work of the state conducted by the director of promotion, the association adopted a provisional plan for the enlisting of every member to complete the success of the New World Movement. The work of the Woman's Missionary Society was presented by Mrs M. C. Burt, Miss Grace Williams, Miss Cynthia Moore and others. At the evening session, D. P. Gaines of the First Church, Waterbury, delivered an address on religious education. An inspirational address by H. B. Sloat, concluded the program of the day. The new officers appointed were: moderator, C. A. Decker; sec'y-treas., Victor Scalise. The 1924 sessions will be held with Second Bridgeport Church, R. D. Trick, pastor.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE ACADIA ALUMNI OF NEW ENGLAND has been collecting funds for the rebuilding of the main building of the college which was destroyed by fire about two years ago. Already about $2,000 has been sent. Dr. A. T. Kempton of Cambridge is chairman of the committee of alumni. The erection of the new building is proceeding. The fact that so many Acadia graduates fill New England pulpits creates a sort of obligation to help in this enterprise.

THE DIALOGUE LECTURE of Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Manley, medical missionaries at Ongole, India, gave the Ministers' Conference, Boston, an unusual privilege Oct. 7. It was an altogether novel presentation of the missionary appeal, with a strong touch of the dramatic. The quiet, natural intensity of their recital, filled as it was with the domestic agony that accompanies Hinduism, made a profound impression.

REV. W. G. HUBER has accepted the call of the First Church, Reading, and begins his pastorate there Oct. 15. Pastor Huber has served the church at North Attleboro three years. He is fortunate in following such a predecessor as Rev. F. M. Holt, and in leading a church so thoroughly organized and trained for work.

REV. FRANK M. HOLT began as pulpit supply at the Ruggles Street Church, Boston, Oct. 7. Dr J. J. Ross closed his pastorate Sept. 30.

DR. CURTIS LEE LAWS held a week of special services at the First Church, Boston, with addresses on the deepening of the spiritual life. Many friends were glad to greet Doctor Laws at the Ministers' Conference, and in the evening at the Social Union meeting. Boston has given the doctor its best brand of October weather, and a hearty and appreciative hearing.

DR. WALTER SCOTT, a long-time Baptist educational leader and preacher, is delighting many friends by a sojourn around Boston. He is thoroughly in touch with world movements, and clearly sees the larger relations of things, discoursing about them with earnest interest.

MR. JAMES P. ROBERTS, a Massachusetts attorney and once secretary of the Boston Baptist Social Union, during the summer has preached at the North Woodstock and Woodstock churches. Mr. Roberts has been asked to remain with these churches for the period of a year. The work of the churches during the period Mr. Roberts supplied was unusually satisfactory.

NEW YORK

ON SUNDAY, SEPT. 9, Rev. Floyd H. Adams tendered his resignation as pastor of the Strong Place Church, Brooklyn, in order to accept the call of the Lincoln Square Church, Worcester, Mass. The resignation will become effective Oct. 31.

THE FIRST CHURCH, BUFFALO, has called Rev. Harry S. Palmeter as assistant pastor to Dr. Samuel Russell. Mr. Palmeter will devote a large part of his time building up the young people's work. For the past four years Mr. Palmeter has been pastor of the Hudson Street Church. During the pastorate of Mr. Russell the mortgage has been reduced from $28,000 to $10,000 and $12,000 was expended on improvements the past two years.

THE WORK OF THE LEFFERTS Park Church Brooklyn, has progressed under the leadership of Hugh Winton. A successful vacation school was conducted with the pastor as principal. A reception was recently tendered Dr. William J. Sly of Linfield College, who was en route for Stockholm. Doctor Sly's father for years was senior deacon of the church. Mr. Emil Hanke, formerly principal of Cook Academy, now Boys' Work Secretary in the New Utrecht Y. M. C. A. of Brooklyn, has charge of religious education.

CARLOS D. FULLER was ordained Sept. 28 at the Central Square. W. S. Warren was moderator, and Joseph Feyrer, clerk. J. C. Rawson preached the sermon. Mr. Fuller is a graduate of Colgate and Union Theological Seminary and is entering two years' post-graduate work at Columbia University.

REV. F. W. BLAKESLEE has returned to his pulpit in his church at Roslindale after a long absence because of illness. He seems vigorous again, is warmly welcomed by his devoted people to his able leadership, and both church and pastor take up their work together with high hopes.

THE TEMPLE ON TEMPLE SQUARE at the junction of Third Avenue and Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, of which Rev. E. Le Roy Dakin is pastor, is busy with numerous committees preparing for the celebration of its one hundredth anniversary. This will begin on Sunday, Oct. 28 and continue until Sunday, Nov. 4. During that week special services will be held each evening, including young people's night, men's meeting, a meeting for the women, and on Friday, Nov. 2, there will be a musical festival under the leadership of H. Aug. Smith of Boston, as a climax to the celebration. In addition to former pastors, Rev. Cortlandt Myers, Rev. George Caleb Moor and J. W. Massee, who have been invited to be present and speak, the Hon. William Travis Jerome, Jr., president of the National Baptist Laymen's Council. Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, Dr. Will S. Abernethy, will be present and deliver addresses. It is also expected that Brooklyn clergymen representing different denominations will take part during the celebration. Among the events to be commemorated will be the wiping out of the indebtedness of the church caused by the rebuilding in 1917 as the result of the fire that occurred that year necessitating an expenditure of nearly $150,000 in its rehabilitation. It is now expected that the total indebtedness which is less than $20,000 will be taken care of, and the church go into the new century free of all indebtedness.

Colgate University

Colgate University opened for its one hundred and fifth year, Sept. 20. The address to the theological seminary was delivered Sept. 25 by Dr. William H. Allison, whose subject was "Is Protestantism Passing?"

There are sixteen men in the entering class in the seminary and a total registration in the seminary of fifty-six. No appointment has been made as yet to fill the office of dean made vacant by the resignation of Dr. John F. Vichert. Dr. John B. Anderson, who has returned from a year's leave of absence, has been appointed the J. J. Joslin professor of Christian theology, the chair formerly held by Doctor Vichert; and Dr. Thomas Wearing, formerly president of Woodstock College, Canada, has been appointed professor of New Testament interpretation, the chair formerly held by Doctor Anderson.

There were more than 500 applicants for admission in the freshman class of the college. Of this number, admission could be granted to 256. The total registration in the college is 711—the largest in the history of the institution.

The new dormitory, made possible by a bequest of the late Richard M. Colgate, and completed this summer at a cost of approximately $190,000, was ready for use at the opening of college. It bears the name of Newton Lloyd Andrews, for more than fifty years a member of the university faculty. This building furnishes housing accommodations for approximately 110 men and eases considerably the housing problem at Colgate.

The convocation address was given by Pres. George Barton Cutten, whose subject was, "The Challenge of the Campus."

Keuka College

It is now two years since Keuka College opened, and the third class recently entered. The results have far exceeded the expectations of the friends of the college.

The registration is as follows: Juniors, thirty; sophomores, thirty-four; freshmen, forty; making a total of 104. There are but three vacant rooms in the dormitory and already twenty-one have registered for those rooms in 1924. The class-rooms are crowded and the laboratory space is not adequate. It is important that a new building be provided before September 1924 if the college is to measure up to the demand.

The trustees are planning a continuation campaign to complete the million dollar fund for Keuka. This fund will provide the new building so much needed and leave an endowment adequate to support the institution.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. W. E. Hatchman, of Jersey City, N. J., has accepted a call to the Beth Eden Church, Pittsburgh.

Library, Rev. E. Paul, Smith, pastor: The one hundred fiftieth anniversary of the organization of this church will be celebrated Oct. 19-21. Mr. Moody prepared a history of the 125 years of the church, twenty-five years ago and copies were widely distributed. No copy, however, was preserved with the church records. The church would appreciate it if someone who has preserved a copy would give one to it.

The new Rankin Christian center was dedicated Sunday, Oct. 7. Rev. A. J. Bonsall conducted the service and the sermon was preached by Rev. C. A. Brooks of New York City.

A Japanese service was held Sept. 23 at the Prospect Hill Church, Moores. Mr. K. Fuji, a student at Crozer Seminary and an alumnus of Waseda University, Toyko, gave an interesting talk. Following this, the pastor, Albert C. Cheetham, delivered an illustrated lecture on life in Japanese cities. A substantial amount was contributed by the church for relief work.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. L. A. Mantle of Obert, Neb., has accepted the call of the Mahomig, Ambrose and Chambersville churches.

Centre Association

The ninety-third annual meeting of the Centre Association was held at Milesburg, Sept. 15. The first day was devoted to the celebration of the forty-third anniversary of the Woman's Missionary Society. Reports and discussions filled the afternoon session. In the evening, Mrs. Moody of the Congo Mission delivered an address.

The first session of the association convened Sept. 26 and was devoted to business. Officers elected for the third consecutive year are: Moderator, S .F. Forgrus; clerk, H. H. MacIlroy; treas., D. W. Brallier. A forceful sermon was preached by J. S. Bromley, Hollidaysburg. The outstanding feature of the afternoon was an address on "An Adequate Conception of Bible School Work" by Professor Van Ormer of Juniata College, Huntington.

The evening session was devoted to addresses. Professors Denaway and Johnston of the State College represented the newly constituted University Church. F. P. Lynch of the Congo Mission spoke a few words. Miss Ella Levy read the history of the Milesburg Church.

Reports of officers and committees and boards were given on Thursday. Doctor Grinnel, Altoona, and W. G. Russell, Philadelphia, both delivered addresses. The young people had charge of the evening program.

Attendance at this meeting of the association exceeded expectations. The next meeting will be held with the Logans Valley Church, Bellwood.

Columbus

The school of missions has closed a profitable session. This school was under the direction of the Women's Federation of Missionary Societies and the Columbus Council of Churches and was the first attempt in the city to present the mission study books to the various denominational missionary societies. Thirty-five churches were represented. The faculty consisted of Mr. Edwin E. White, secretary of education of the Presbyterian Church of America, who taught the foreign book, "Creative Forces in Japan"; and Miss Ruth A. Shipley, one of the vice-presidents of the Woman's Home Mission Society, who presented "The Child and America's Future." Among those who addressed the school were Geo. Platt Knox, dean of men at Denison University and Dr. A. W. Rider of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Work in Columbus is showing a marked advance in many ways. The First Church, Rev. Daniel F. Rittenhouse pastor, has been renovated throughout during the summer months. Since the opening of the work, the middle of September, fifteen have been received into membership. The fall rally and reception to the new members was recently held.

The Hillcrest Church, Rev. E. E. MacFarlane, pastor, is busy with the new building proposition. A large moving picture theater was erected and partially completed last year but went into the hands of a receiver. This property was purchased by the Hillcrest Church and is being refinished suitably for church purposes. The building is admirably situated. This church has been growing rapidly under the leadership of Mr. MacFarlane during the past two years.

A farewell reception was given by the Central Church to Rev. William Pieffer recently. Mr. Pieffer began evangelistic work Oct. 1, leaving this important field without any pastor.

The Tenth Avenue Church, which has been supplied for some time by Dr. H. O. Rowlands, has made progress. This church is awaiting the coming of the right man as pastor to supply the needs in the university district.

Rev. R. M. Jones of Indiana began work with the South High Church the first Sunday in October.

On Oct. 13, the football team of Colgate University plays at the Ohio state stadium. In the evening a reception will be given by the Columbus Baptist Social Union to President Cutten of Colgate and his wife, together with the members of the football team. This affair will be of special interest to Columbus Baptists because President Cutten was at one time pastor of the First Church.

ILLINOIS

The Ministers' Conference of Chicago which met Sept. 17, recorded its deep sense of loss in the recent death of Dr. Lathan A. Crandall, an honored member of the conference, and its appreciation of his service to the denomination. The conference extended to Mrs. Crandall and family its deep sympathy.

The Centralia Church is doing good work. Rev. G. H. Murch, the pastor, spent his vacation in California. Rev. E. P. Brand of Normal supplied the church the first two Sundays in September.

The Hudleson Orphanage, seven miles south of Centralia, is in the best condition in its history. The buildings that were destroyed by the cyclone have all been restored and improved. Doctor and Mrs. Hafer are both well adapted to the work. The orphanage is growing in the esteem of the people in the southern half of the state.

The Alton Association met with the Belleville church, Sept. 26-27. Rev. J. H. Martin has been pastor of the Belleville Church for five years. It has completed repairs on the building costing $4,000. The association was well attended and the reports were encouraging.

The Southern Association met with the Frankfort Heights Church. This association was organized a few years ago with four churches. It expressed a willingness for the Free Baptists to unite with it without rebaptism. The association now has fifty churches with more than 6,000 members.

Benton is a town of less than 10,000 inhabitants. There is no negro population, only one foreign-speaking church which is Catholic. It has six Baptist churches, two Primitive, two Southern and two affiliated with the Northern Convention. Rev. J. B. Little is pastor of the First Church. It is beginning to plaster its meeting house which when completed and furnished with a fine pipe organ, will cost more than $100,000. The church is anxious for the state convention to meet with it in the fall of 1924.

Rev. Chas. Biastock has accepted the pastorate of the Fosterburg and Greenfield churches. He will serve each church for half-time. Mr. Biastock is a student at Shurtleff and has had several years' experience as pastor in Michigan.

Rev. F. C. Ludecke has accepted a call to the Mt. Gilead Church for half-time. It is expected he will also serve the Willisville Church for half-time. Mr. Ludecke is a junior at Shurtleff.

Rev. V. Colbert has resigned at Edgemont, and will close his work in October. Mr. Colbert has done real pioneer missionary work on this growing field.

A three weeks' union meeting was held at Lebanon by Rev. O. L. Martin. Rev. H. H. Smith is in his third year as pastor of the Lebanon church.

The Collinsville Church has called Rev. P. H. Hughes from Portsmouth, Ohio. He accepted the call and began work Oct. 1.

The First Church, East St. Louis, is having a successful revival meeting conducted by Evangelist Charles Taylor. Mr. Taylor's father and brother are assisting him in the meeting. Following the meetings Evangelist J. N. Edmonston will supply the church for a few Sundays. The church hopes to settle a pastor very soon.

Dr. Wilson Mills of Kansas City will assist pastor R. B. Favoright of Jerseyville in a revival meeting Sept. 30-Oct. 14.

Rev. W. W. Marshall of Wales is assisting Rev. J. W. Gillespie of Olney in special meetings. Mr. Marshall recently came from Wales.

Brother P. D. Locke has returned from Michigan where he spent the summer for his health, and has again taken up the work on the Roxana field.

Rev. J. J. Jenkins has resigned at Barrow. Mr. Jenkins has served the church for half-time during the past year. During this pastorate a new church building was erected.

Evangelist L. C. Bauer of White Hall recently held meetings at Eldred and Manchester.

Carleton College

Carleton College has begun its year with a marked emphasis on religious unity. The faculty of the college has been strengthened by the addition of Dr. Herbert P. Houghton as professor of Greek, and Dr. Stewart B. Cole as assistant professor of religious education. Doctor Cole has become pastor of the church formed by the union of the First Congregational and First Baptist. The first Sunday of the academic year, an all-denominational chapel service was held in Skinner Memorial Chapel, the audience numbering more than 1000. The enrolment at Carleton at the end of September was 808, men being in the majority in each of the classes. Seventeen states and seven foreign countries are represented in the registration.

WISCONSIN

Five persons were recently baptized at the First Church, Delavan. J. Winfield Scott, home missionary of the Walworth Association, spoke at the church Sept. 30. Delavan's foreign pastor, Henry Topping, is safe but his home at Yokohama is in ruins. His daughter, Miss Helen Topping recently visited the church.

KANSAS

Rally Day was held Sept. 30 at the First Church, Clay Center, with a large attendance at Sunday school. A special collection was taken for Japan. All classes of the church have held their regular meetings and report progress.

The fall work of the First Church, Coffeyville, has started encouragingly. With other churches of the community it is entering into a union revival meeting under the leadership of Doctor Rayburn of Newton. The young people are cooperating and are supporting the pastor, Earl Riney. At the B. Y. P. U. rally held Sept. 28-29 at Cherryvale, it received the attendance banner. A junior society has been organized.

Ottawa University

Ottawa University had enrolled on Sept. 25 nearly 18 per cent more students than the total at the close of the school year of 1922-23. Some of this gain in numbers is attributed to the summer session, which attracted a small but appreciative group of energetic students. The summer term will become a permanent feature of the work of the university, and a greater enrolment is expected to result from the larger number of courses available next year.

Fourteen colleges are represented in the faculty. They have touched school life as instructors in the high schools and colleges in sixteen states.

The new Tauy Jones Hall, reconstructed from the old Science Hall, will be ready for use by Oct. 25. The department of music will occupy it at that time. The interior has been reconstructed for that especial purpose. Sound-proof walls shut off the practice rooms from the studios and the class rooms. The cost will probably exceed $25,000. The alumni association is raising funds to defray a part or all of the expense.

NEBRASKA

Grand Island College

Grand Island College opened Sept. 10, class work beginning on the twelfth. The number of freshmen enrolled is sixty-four, making an increase of 25 per cent over the enrolment last year, which numbered forty-eight. The increase in the college department this year over last year is 18 per cent.

The college has received a check of $1275.14 from the estate of Nettie N. Forney of Falls City, Neb. This money will be added to the endowment funds, thus making this gift of permanent benefit to this Christian college.

The new faculty members are: Prof. Wells Smith, recently of the University of Colorado, head of the department of education; Prof. F. J. Titt, for sixteen years at Kingfisher College, Kingfisher, Okla., who becomes head of the physics department; Miss Lillian Steckman, assistant in English; Prof. Oscar Autritt, Latin; and Miss Esther Hile, librarian. Miss Hile is a graduate of Grand Island College, class of '23, and well known to the students and faculty. President and Mrs. Wells returned at the opening of school from Long Island, where they spent their summer vacation.

Several new courses have been added to the college curriculum, among them, one in surveying, and a normal course in public school music.

MISSOURI

Stephens College

With an enrolment of more than 650 students representing thirty-four states and one foreign country, Stephens College has embarked on the biggest school year of its history. More than 500 of the students are boarding and live in the college dormitories. The rest are day students who reside at their homes in Columbia.

The rapid increase in enrolment last year forced the erection of South Hall, a new dormitory, for the accommodation of new students, but the present year's enrolment has been so great that all the new dormitory space has been utilized and a number of large residences near the campus have been rented to accommodate the overflow. Each residence provides rooms for about twenty girls and a matron. Funds are needed to provide additional dormitory facilities before the opening of another school year.

Other recent developments at Stephens are the construction of an administration building, additions to the kitchens and dining rooms, and the expansion of the campus by the purchase of two blocks lying northeast of the main campus.

IOWA

Des Moines

Des Moines University opened for registration Sept. 11 and 12. Classes began the thirteenth. To date 620 have registered for the first semester. Eight new members have been welcomed into the faculty and the year's work is starting out the "best ever." Pres. John W. Million, in addition to the regular duties of his office, is much in demand as a speaker at church gatherings, civic clubs and high schools.

Chaplain J. Orrin Gould during his vacation with his family took an auto trip to West Virginia, the home of Mrs. Gould's parents. Iowa needs a hard-surfaced road across the state east and west, adding 300 miles to the national highway system. Tourists become discouraged when driving through Iowa mud which is so plentiful after a rain.

Prof. Harold P. Chaffee is the new superintendent of the University Church school and is much interested in the religious life of the students.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE FIRST CHURCH OF SEATTLE, under the leadership of Rev. Ambrose M Bailey, is going forward with full steam in the fall work. The church voted to raise the Hundred Million Dollar Fund apportionment in full for the year and to have the church building entirely paid for by Jan. 1, 1925. The church recently engaged as pastor's assistant Miss Winifred H. Myers, formerly a member of the First Church of Philadelphia and field secretary for the Y. W. C. A., and more recently pastor's assistant at Topeka, Kan. Baptisms have occurred every Sunday since the first of September.

OREGON

THE FIRST OF SEVERAL CHURCH BUILDINGS to be dedicated this year was the chapel of the Aloha Church, J. E. McGuire, pastor. Two years ago the services were held in a rented hall. The enlarging work made larger quarters necessary in a short time. Lots were given to the state convention which made a gift of $550. G. L. Hall, convention missionary, assisted the pastor in a canvass of the community and the work continued to prosper. On Sept. 9 T. J. Villers preached the dedicatory sermon after Secretary Wright had secured over $900 in cash and pledges. The young people conducted the evening service. Mr. Harley Hallgren of Portland delivered the address. Services were continued throughout the week with sermons and addresses by W. T. Milliken, G. L. Hall, George R. Varney, O. C. Wright, and Owen T. Day. The value of the building and lot is about $7000. This is the only church in the community, and thus it has a splendid opportunity for service.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. S. P. GOTT came to Anaheim from Arizona a little less than a year ago. The church has purchased property with a house adequate for a parsonage and room enough for the church building. In slightly over a year the church has grown to a membership of 125.

THE CHURCH AT LAHABRA has moved to a new location, put in a basement, and has a plant adequate for work and growth for several years. This has been accomplished since A. C. Earley of Minnesota became pastor a year ago. The membership is growing and all departments are making progress.

REV. M. E. BOLLEN has closed his first year of service at Fullerton. The Sunday-school department has been completely remodeled. Money has been pledged for an organ and parsonage. During the year the Sunday-school has grown from twenty-fourth to fifteenth in the convention; the B. Y. P. U. is one of the first six and the W. W. G. has taken seventh place where it was fourteenth. Eighty-three members were received during the year.

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE for this section will be held in Los Angeles, Nov. 14-16. J. Franklin Day of Sacramento will be in Los Angeles for a month previous to the conference to take charge of the preparations and enroll the delegates. Southern California is challenging Chicago to secure 4000 paid registrations.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

OAKLAND FIRST CHURCH: The work of the autumn has opened auspiciously. The pastor is in the midst of a series of sermons on "Observations in Europe." Recently it was necessary to put an ad in the local paper reading as follows: "Capacity houses each Sunday night make it extremely difficult for the corps of seventeen ushers to accommodate those who come at all late. Come early before instructions are given to the door-man to say, 'Standing room only.'" On Sunday evening, Sept. 16, by actual count, there were 1044 persons present. The summer services were under the direction of E. A. Fridell, assistant pastor, who had full charge during the pastor's eight weeks' absence in attendance at the World Alliance at Stockholm. Eight new members have been baptized since the pastor's return and not a single Wednesday night has passed for many weeks without the reception of some new members.

The following is extracted from a letter written to Doctor Rushbrooke by a Baptist evangelist in Lithuania. It aptly illustrates the conditions under which the work is carried on: "In ——— we held a Latvian meeting, well attended. After the Latvian, a Lithuanian meeting had to follow. So many people gathered together that we were not able to hold the meeting in the house and we therefore went into the garden. As I was about to begin, the police arrived and ordered the meeting to be closed. We tried to obtain permission from the superintendent of police but failed to find him at home. After this only a few friends remained in the house with whom we held a Bible lesson while the rest dispersed. The Lithuanian law of March 4th, 1920, point 15 concerning meetings states that religious meetings do not require a special notification. We have always acted according to this and held the meetings free. This was the first disturbance by the police during my work of evangelization in Lithuania. We had, however, taken too little notice of the fact that point 16 of the same law is as follows: 'Meetings in the open air are always public and are subject to the regulations concerning public meetings.' 'We had, however, repeatedly without giving previously twenty-four hours' notice held meetings in the open air which were attended by police officials. I believe we would not have had any disturbance this time either if the Roman Catholic priest had not niterferred. On that day he had at church incited the people against us. In the future, however, we will always satisfy the regulations although this will involve us in various financial expenditures." A lengthy and sympathetic description of the Stockholm Congress, covering near- ly a whole page, appears in a leading Lithuanian political newspaper. It has aroused considerable attention in the land. Various reports from Lithuania agree that in that Roman Catholic country there is a growing interest in the evangelical message. Methodists as well as Baptists are energetically occupied in distributing Bibles and testaments.

Our Book Shelf

A Friend at Court, by Leon and Elizabeth Stern. New York: Macmillan.

A most interesting weaving together of some incidents that face a probation officer in the courts of a big city. Whether viewed from the standpoint of fiction or fact, it is worth-while reading.

Is There a God?, by Ilion I. Jones. New York: Macmillan.

The book contains six chapters that are worthy of a thorough reading because the mind will then be refreshed in its acceptance of the existence of God and of Jesus who reveals him.

The Jesus of Our Fathers, by John W. Good. New York: Macmillan.

A very thorough and wholesome presentation of a great subject. The writer believes in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and presents him in that light in a conclusive manner. The book is well indexed.

The Essentials of Religion, by Rev. J. Wilson Harper. New York: Doran.

The writer believes in freedom of discussion concerning the questions raised by the higher criticism. The book is worth while to any one who will read it with a mind alert to truth.

Confronting Young Men with the Living Christ, by John R. Mott. New York: Doran.

A helpful, forceful presentation designed to keep the leaders of a great Christian organization alert to the dynamic of the Living Christ. The book should be widely read.

True Indian Tales from American History, by James Otis. Boston: Page.

A book that will delight young boys because as the title indicates, the stories have a historical background. It is attractive in form, and has many illustrations. The titles are suggestive of the kind of stories: "An Island Refuge," "Ezra Jordan's Escape," "When Israel Putnam Served the King," "Defending the Island."

Clarion Calls from Capitol Hill, by Hon. Wm. D. Upshaw, Congressman from Fifth District, Georgia. New York: Revell. $1.50.

A selection of addresses delivered in the House by one of the notable orators of the South. The subjects discussed are in part "An All-embracing Americanism," "Flag Day Address on Labor, Liquor and Peace of Humanity," "A Plea for Sober Officials and Sober Citizens," "Tribute to Abraham Lincoln," "Christ Our Only Hope." The addresses are of a popular type, marked by the wit, pathos, crispness and fervor of Southern oratory and radiating the spirit of loyalty, humanness and religion. A speaker seeking inspiration for a public address will find here a most apt enkindling. They must have been a moral tonic where they were much needed.

What is True Religion? by Robert J. MacAlpine. New York: Revell. $1.50.

A volume of addresses and sermons in which the first sermon gives to the volume its title. The author is presented as "minister of the largest church in Buffalo." We can easily believe that the "preaching is attracting crowds." The subjects presented, the style of treatment in freshness and unconventionalness, if associated with popular delivery must make the preaching occasion most interesting and withal profitable to the hearers. We bespeak a welcome reception for the book.

Those desiring to know the orthodox position on the subject of biblical criticism will find it carefully prepared and plainly set forth in Professor Dana's new book. The author has arrayed the leading problems involved and treated each with a purpose of being of help to the average reader. In an endeavor to make the Bible appeal not simply to the sentiments but to the most acute intelligence he submits the problem of authenticity to a three-fold test viz—the test of history; the test of science and the test of experience. Throughout the book runs a fine spirit that convinces the reader that the author is not carrying a chip upon his shoulder, but rather making an earnest effort to set forth the facts so that the busy laymen of the church may be enlightened in a short period of study.

Old Memories; an Autobiography, by Sir Henry Jones. New York: Doran. $1.35.

This charming little book enforces the truth which recently has had emphasis in America in connection with the president's death, namely, that many of the world's greatest moral and spiritual leaders have risen from the simplicity and obscurity of God-fearing homes in

DORAN BOOKS At Your Religious Book Store
GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY
244 Madison Avenue New York

Sir Henry Jones, of Welsh origin, was a favorite pupil of Edward Caird at Glasgow, and finally succeeded his great teacher in the chair of moral philosophy. While teaching at St. Andrews, Professor Jones had a letter from Caird saying: "I have just written accepting an invitation to the Mastership of Balliol College, Oxford. My next letter is to you, to ask if you would care for an old pair of boots. They are not absolutely at my disposal, but I shall have something to say as to their destination." Jones got the boots, and wore them with grace and dignity until his death, of cancer, in 1922. During the last two years of his life, while under the doom of death, he wrote his Gifford Lectures, "A Faith that Enquires," and along with these, the "Old Memories" as a relaxation. His chief motive in writing the latter was "to leave behind, for the encouragement of the youth of Wales and Scotland in particular, the story of his struggle for education." Its faithful portrayal of piety in the home, of high hopes and hard labor and heroic sacrifice on the part of the Welsh lad eager to learn and ambitious to serve, makes the book rich in inspiration and fascinating in interest. It is the sort of book to enrich the faith and quicken the imagination and kindle the thought of preacher and teacher. Sir Henry Jones, friend of Bruce and Dods, successor of Edward Caird, and teacher of a multitude of Scotland's greatest men in his generation, was no common man.

The Mystical Quest of Christ, by Robert F. Horton. New York: Doran. $3.

We fear that the ambiguous title of this notable volume may mislead some who are looking for just this sort of book. It is in fact an evangelical "Imitation of Christ." It supplies a long-standing need in non-Catholic circles of a book dealing with the Christian life and its inner motives and principles, such as abound (such as they are) among sacramentarian devotees. One may infer that Doctor Horton has taken for the text for his book, Paul's passionate rhapsody of Christian mysticism: "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me." (Gal. 2:20). The whole volume is but an elaboration of the cardinal truth of Christian experience there set forth: Life in Christ. It is needless to say that Doctor Horton's views are at some degree of variance with those which define Christianity wholly in terms of human fellowship and human ministry. For him all human fellowships and all service to humanity derive their motive and inspiration and highest justification in the mystical relation between the soul and Christ. This is illustrated in the chapter on "Ethismos"—habituation. He enumerates seven habits which go to make up the Christ-like character: Prayer, worship, service, love, testimony, forgiving, giving. "Now these seven habits form a character, a Christ-like character. These are habits of life which are bound up with Christ as motive and object. Let any one set to work to form one or other of these habits and he will find himself coming to Christ; let any one form them all, and he will find, as Paul did: It is no longer I that live, but Christ that liveth in me."

The book is a consistent whole—not a series of sermons or unarticulated essays—comprehensive, scholarly, devotional and sane. It deserves a prominent place among works on Christian experience and ethics.

"It Is to Laugh"

The next person who interrupts the proceedings will be sent home," declared the irate judge. "Hurrah!" yelled the prisoner.—Upper Iowa Collegian.

The amateur hunter came back to the camp early and began walking around restlessly.

"Shot anything?" inquired the camp cook.

"I don't know," replied the amateur hunter with a worried look. "I'm waiting for the rest of the party to come in so that I can call the roll."

A man who had spent a considerable amount in decorations for his house was visited by a former friend who wore a wooden leg.

The library had been furnished with a beautiful parquet floor and the host was horrified to see the man with the wooden leg stumping over it. All he could say, however, was in the form of a gentle hint: "Hadn't you better come on the carpet, old fellow? I'm so afraid you might slip."

"Oh, no," said the guest, "don't worry about me; it's all right, thanks. There's a nail in the end, you know."

An opinionated woman of limited experience in city shopping went to buy a sealskin coat, feeling that it was a momentous occasion and that to get exactly what she wanted it would perhaps be best to be very hard to please. So, when, after trying many smaller shops, she finally entered one of the larger and more impressive stores, although somewhat awed by the long polished counters, the shining show cases and gleaming mirrors, she held to her determination to be hard to please.

After the clerk had tried at least a score of coats on her, she still shook her head dubiously over the last and glanced about her. Across the showroom stood a woman in a magnificent sealskin coat.

"Now," said the shopper, motioning toward this woman, "if you could give me a coat like the one which that lady over there has on, I'd take it. It's just the kind of coat I've been wanting. Why don't you show me one like that?"

"Madam," was the clerk's patient reply, "that's the reflection of yourself."—Ladies' Home Journal.

OTES ON HYMN REGISTRATION

An organist of some experience called ır attention to the playing of a certain ·ganist of great ability. He played all ıe organ solos with exquisite taste. His ·gistration was most beautiful. He ıd, indeed, a large and well-planned ·gan at his command, but he neither ied to use all the stops of the organ every piece, nor was he ever guilty any commonplace and crude registra-on. We were, however, painfully im-ressed by the way in which he managed s organ in connection with the hymns, ıd it was to this our attention was ılled. Here his taste seemed to desert im. He was guilty of what seemed to s as little less than atrocities. The ırprise at this contrast suggested some ote-taking as to methods of registra-on by other organists with the hope f discovering some points of value to ıe young and inexperienced organist ho often is forced to work very much the dark.

The first suggestion that we would ake is that the organist should bear early in mind that the preliminary laying over of the hymn, if it is con-dered necessary to retain that useless ıstom, should serve as a prelude to the nging of the choir and should be treat-l as such. That might seem to be a uite superfluous observation. But it is point which we assure our readers is equently overlooked. Its observance ill save the organist from a sort of lunder in his registration which we ave heard at the hands of expert rganists.

Playing over the Melody

The point to which we refer espe-ally is the trick of playing over the elody of the hymn tune as a solo upon ome fancy stop, with the accompani-ent upon a soft stop, to be followed y the full choir singing a four-part ıorus. We have found this repeatedly here it was not to have been expected. xamples of this use are in connection ith such hymn tunes as the setting of As pants the hart"; an arrangement om one of Mendelssohn's "Songs with-ut Words," or "Approach, my soul, the ercy seat," arranged from Spohr's ell-known anthem, itself frequently ng to the words "As pants the hart." ut while these are characteristic ex-nples, we have heard the same effect connection with various tunes. The gistration of the prelude should lead to the singing of the choir and not e in violent contrast with it.

A common fault is the great variety the stops used for accompaniment to ıe choir. Some organists seem to de-ght in varying the tone color with very line. There may be some theo-·tical defense of this. The tone color as expressional value and should be sed with that in mind. Of course, that entirely true. But there rarely seems be much attempt to use the varieties tone for purposes of expression, or far as the ordinary listener can dis-over for any earthly reason except love change.

The registration for the accompani-ent of a hymn should be chiefly upon .e Diapasons and more solid stops. But as there are few organs, except those of the largest size, which have more than one open Diapason upon the Great or the Swell, an organist is forced to use other stops in combination merely for increase of force. The old rule used to be to draw both Diapasons upon the Great and increase by using octave and fifteenth. But with the average organ that would generally be unsatisfactory. Still, the organist can easily avoid strange and markedly contrasting registration when he increases the volume of tone. Variety he will use to relieve monotony, but the constant shifting of stops, sometimes almost with every line, he will avoid as being little more than a sort of nervous habit into which organists sometimes fall.

The registration of the hymn tunes does not always follow a definite scheme; it is often neither suitable to accompany the choir or to lead the congregation, though at times it does one or the other fairly well. If the organist is accompanying the choir he is apt to register as if he were playing for a congregation, and vice versa, when he is playing as if to lead the congregation he may suddenly change his registration for some passage that demands a subdued tone, as if he were playing for a choir, and he may even cease playing altogether. If the organist aims to have only the choir sing the hymn, he should play accordingly. He may be sure that the congregation will not join.

It is our opinion that except in very unusual cases the hymns should be sung by the congregation, led by choir and organ. That is merely a matter of ritual or liturgies. If the musical effect alone is considered, then if the choir is to sing the hymn, let the registration be far softer than is customary. Again and again we have been quite unable to hear a word the choir was singing because it was drowned out by the organ, and hardly a soul was singing in the body of the church. And yet there was not quite that uplifting volume of tone which would have brought the voices from the congregation.

Most organ registration in accompaniment is too loud for the choirs. The singers are placed, it will be remembered, in the worst possible place in the church, except the cellar, for musical effect, and their tone is neither directed nor reflected into the body of the church, but is muffled by the vestments of the choristers opposite the singers. The organs are now being better placed though there are some still tucked away in closets, and they are being built so large and with such ample resources, all heard to good advantage, that it is a pity that organists do not realize how overheavy their registration frequently is. But the fault with the hymn registration is not so much merely that it is too heavy, but that it is either not heavy enough for a congregation or too heavy for a choir.—Church Standard.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery will address the Chicago Ministers' Conference, Monday, Oct. 15.

Rev. L. J. Schoeppler has become pastor of the Main Street Church, Meriden, Conn. He was pastor of the South Norwalk Church.

The work of the First Church, Leominster, Mass., will be greatly facilitated by an addition to the building equipment at a cost of $18,000. The new building contains a gymnasium and a number of class rooms.

The revised estimates of the losses to the property of the Methodists in Tokyo and Yokohama is placed at $890,000 as a minimum figure. This is greater than the earlier reports showed. Bishop Welsh says that it will take $1,00,000 to put the equipment back as it was.

The Connecticut Baptist Convention is celebrating its one hundredth anniversary. It is proposed to liquidate the debt of the convention which amounts to about $18,000 by asking every Baptist in the state to give a thank-offering of $1—a cent for each year of the convention's service. This offering will not count on the pledges to the New World Movement.

At the Boston South Association Rev. W. L. Pratt gave a careful report on the state of religion in the churches. He found solid ground for a hopeful statement. The churches have a vital interest in meeting the needs of the communities in which they are doing their work. The financial condition is sound. There is a steady growth in membership. There were 291 baptisms in the churches during the past year and a net gain in membership of 263.

Edith Mary Phelps, wife of Rev. S. W. Phelps, pastor of Grace Church, Milwaukee, died at the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, Sept. 26. Mr. Phelps for years was a successful pastor in Michigan, and also served the church at Hammond, Ind., the Millard Avenue Church, Chicago, and for a number of years has been pastor of the Grace Church. Mrs. Phelps was an unusually capable church leader and served in various capacities in the general work of the denomination.

The seventy-ninth annual session of the Illinois State Convention will be held Oct. 15-18 at the First Church, Oak Park, of which Carl D. Case is pastor. "Together—facing our task" is the motto of the convention. The program is a live one. Among the speakers are P. H. J. Lerrigo, of New York; S. G. Neil, Philadelphia; F. W. Padelford, New York; E. Y. Mullins, Louisville; R. O. Jasperson, New York; A. M. Harris, New York; Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Manley of Ongole, India; A. E. Peterson, Benjamin Otto, F. G. Sayers, M. W. Twing, G. A. Sheets, C. D. The annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Illinois will be held October 15-16 in Oak Park. The Loyalty Banquet will be given on Tuesday, Oct. 16, at the Austin Church at five o'clock.

Investigations carried on in Pennsylvania to determine the amount of alcoholic beverages used for sacramental purposes brought out this interesting fact. The Roman Catholic priests are allowed fifteen gallons of alcoholic wines per year. The custom of the church is to withhold the cup from the laity. In case it is required this allowance seems to be a fairly liberal one for an individual.

Dr. Joseph B. Hingeley reported at the Rock River Conference in Illinois that the Methodist Episcopal Church had distributed during the past year $3,000,000 to retired ministers, widows and dependent children and that the denomination had an invested endowment for this purpose of $17,000,000. In the same conference Bishop Thomas Nicholson declared that a studied propaganda was being carried on to pack the next general conference which meet in May at Springfield, Mass. The propagandists are re actionaries who "are trying to check th progress of the church."

The First Church, Kalamazoo, Mich has entered upon the work of the fal and winter with a challenging program Among the items to be striven for w note: 200 additions to the membershi during the year, 150 in the prayer serv ice, every member a steward and 10 members tithers in the stewardshi league, 100 families with daily Bibl reading and prayer, 100 families wit THE BAPTIST and Missions, six youn men and women preparing for the min istry and missionary service. # MAKERS OF DISCIPLES

"Go ye into all the world and make disciples"

The year 1922 was another record year in evangelistic results on the foreign field. The ten mission fields of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society reported the baptism of 18,415 converts on confession of faith.

This is the largest total ever reported in a single year in the history of the Society. Burma reported 7,452 baptisms; Assam, 13,700; South India, 1,782; Bengal-Orissa, 122; China, 714; Japan, 500; Belgian Congo, 3,862; Philippine Islands, 283.

Evangelistic results in Europe were equally gratifying, the records showing 10,086 baptisms making the total 28,501 for Europe and the non-Christian world.

The Foreign Mission Society has always emphasized evangelism as the primary aim in its work. The world task of Northern Baptists is nothing less than the evangelization of the non-Christian world.

You who made a contribution to foreign missions had a share in this gratifying achievement. Your continued support is needed to carry forward the momentum of this evangelistic movement in future years.

Within and Without

LORD of thyself and me, through the sore grief
Which thou didst bear to bring us back to God,
Or, rather, bear in being unto us
Thy own pure shining self of love and truth!
When I have learned to think thy radiant thoughts,
To live the truth beyond the power to know it,
To bear my light as thou thy heavy cross,
Nor ever feel a martyr for thy sake,
But an unprofitable servant still—
My highest sacrifice my simplest duty
Imperative and unavoidable,
Less than which all were nothingness and waste;
When I have lost myself in other men,
And found myself in thee—the Father then
Will come with thee, and will abide with me.

—George Macdonald, "World's Great Religious Poetry."

Fresh from the Field

Rev. Wallace Petty, pastor of the First Church, Pittsburgh, will be the preacher at the University of Chicago, Nov. 25 and Dec. 2.

The ninth convention of the World's Sunday School Association will be held in Glasgow, Scotland, June 18-26, 1924. Already there is widespread inquiry upon the part of those who are planning to attend this great meeting.

Hon. Carl E. Milliken was the chairman and Mr. Orrin R. Judd, of New York, treasurer of the Citizenship Conference called in Washington for Oct. 13-15. The conference was called by 756 men and women of prominence. We hope to give an account of the conference in an early issue.

Last year 900,000 people in Baptist churches heard the missionary message and saw the missionaries at work through the stereopticon lectures. The way churches are booking lectures this fall indicates that the number will be greatly increased. One of our speakers who uses the stereopticon, has never made an address with it in four years that he has not known of increased gifts of money when he had a chance to meet the people after the address. Many also have asked about missions as a life work.

A few days ago a young woman in the East sent a package of pictures from the daily paper and a package of magazines to the daughter of the doctor sent by the government to live among the Indians in Utah. In writing about them the following statement is made. "The men and boys sit around a lot and read and look at pictures. You should see them eat up the pictures and papers. One boy carries off an armful every time he comes. They like picture papers, farm magazines and any books of information that are easy to read. They like stories too." The daughter's name and address is Miss Bess Myers, Whiterocks, Utah. Do you want to contribute such papers and magazines?

Under the auspices of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches, three of the most distinguished clergymen of Europe set out this week on speaking tours which will cover almost the whole United States and last until December. The most famous member of this trio is Dr. Nathan Soderblom, Archbishop of Upsala, Sweden, and titular head of the Lutheran Church. The others are the Rev. Thomas Nightingale, secretary of the National Free Church Council of Great Britain, and the Rev. T .G. B. Kay, rector of Christ Church, Marylebone, London. Archbishop Soderblom's trip will take him to the Pacific Coast. He arrived here Sept. 25 and after speaking at several meetings in New York City left for San Francisco where he was due for a lecture at Leland Stanford University on Oct. 9.

The First Church, Los Angeles, has sold its property for $427,000 and has launched its "temporary building" project. Rev. Rufus Kayser has been called to become the assistant of Rev. James A. Francis.

War-like terms are being used by the World's Work in announcing a series of articles by Rollin Lynde Hartt on "Will the Churches Split?" It is said that he has visited every "front" in the present religious "war." That he has visited the leaders in the "battle," inspected the "opposing forces." He says that there is one point upon which they are all agreed and that is "there will be no reconciliation, no reunion, no treaty of peace between 'liberals' and 'literals.'" We rather like his designation if we are to have "camps" among us.

The sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt, twenty-sixth president of the United States, occurs Oct. 27. To the end that the inspiration of Theodore Roosevelt's life shall be inculcated in the young, the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Association has purchased the site of his birth in New York City. As the work of restoring the birthplace is finished, Roosevelt House will be opened on the sixty-fifth anniversary of his birth and will then be dedicated to the educational work among the children of America to which it is to be devoted.

The following is from the account released by the Fellowship of Reconciliation concerning its recent conference at Belmar, N. J.: "'If we really want to live in fellowship with people we will follow the way of Jesus in giving up all that secures for us economic advantage' was the challenge flung out by Dr. Scott Nearing, of the Rand School, New York. This brought out some of the most animated discussions of the sessions, many declaring afterwards that they intended to live more simply hereafter, since a sharing of goods is a necessary concomitant of fellowship."

"President Harding's Challenge and Our Task" is the title of a beautiful card which recently came to our desk. Mrs. H. F. Compton of Seattle, one of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society vice-presidents, was so favorably impressed with the scripture text quoted by President Harding, on the occasion of his inauguration that she conceived the idea of putting this text in a permanent and attractive form for general distribution. She painted the motto and has had it printed. The title was suggested by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery. The object is twofold: (1) to have this motto text placed in homes and offices throughout the country for the lesson it teaches. (2) To raise some money through the sale of this beautiful motto, for foreign missions, as all the profits from the sale will go to the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. These cards will be on sale throughout the country; retail price 10 cents each.

THE BAPTIST Should Be Included

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon suggests that upon his tomb be placed these words: "Here lies a man who thought he had a sermon to preach. He longed to preach it, but he was killed by the 'preliminaries'." Organ prelude, doxology, invocation, response, solo, responsive reading, anthem, hymn, duet, scripture, prayer, response, second anthem, notices, solo, offering, offertory, prayer, gloria hymn, sermon, hymn, benediction, postlude. He says that the minister watches the hands of the clock move around to about 11:50 and then begins his sermon with the knowledge that he "must close on time." If Dr. Sheldon had been a Baptist he would have said: "The pastor also knew that the best interest of the local church, the denomination and the kingdom required due consideration of the denominational periodicals."

An Appeal for Aid

The Living Church is probably the best and most widely read newspaper among American Episcopalians. It has a keen editor and a good constituency. We quote from the front page of the issue of Sept. 8, 1923: "We desire to present frankly to you certain aspects of the conditions under which the Living Church is being made. The fiscal year ends May 31. For the year ending May 31, 1923, the paper was published at a net loss of $5,358.38. . . . It must be evident that this cannot go on indefinitely, nor do the publishers feel that they can bear the burden of the annual loss unaided. . . . We see no opportunity for making the Living Church self-supporting in the near future." The editor goes on to explain that he draws but a part of his salary from the Living Church since he is president and manager of the Morehouse Publishing Co., publishers of the paper. "The circulation is relatively small . . . but if it were doubled it would probably not wipe out the deficit. And our experience indicates that it will not be doubled in the near future. What shall be done about it? Something or the Living Church must either be greatly reduced in scope or entirely withdrawn." Then follows an appeal for "associates of the Living Church who will underwrite annually such deficits as may be incurred."

Our Balance Sheet

In the light of the above it may be of interest to our readers to glance at the balance sheet of THE BAPTIST at the close of business Sept. 29, 1923.

|---|---|
| Bank balance (September interest not included) | $6,035.29 |
| Bills receivable (advertising) | 2,875.42 |
| Total bank balance and bills receivable | $8,910.71 |
| Bills payable | 4,598.46 |
| Balance | $4,312.25 |
| Bank balance Sept. 30, 1922 | $2,295.76 |

We know that this is not to our credit as a denomination. We ought to spend more on our periodicals, but it is not especially discouraging in the face of the crying need for funds for all our work. By the strictest economy we have passed through the "dry" period on our own resources and are well into our second year without any denominational "subsidy."

Rev. William J. Day has rounded out ten years of service as pastor of the First Church, Winthrop, Mass.

Rev W. A. Atherton has accepted a call to the First Church at Marblehead, Mass. For twenty-one years he was pastor of the First Church, West Springfield, Mass.

The First Church of Easton, Pa., has extended a call to Rev. W. J. Barnes of Stamford, Conn., to succeed Rev. A. W. Anderson, recently appointed commandant of the state Soldiers Home at Erie, Pa.

The Baptist Church of Wakefield, Mass., Harvey J. Moore, pastor, is planning a musical program for Sunday evenings of the coming six months. The program will include noted musicians.

The National Geographic Society has sent out a party from Gallup, N. Mex., to explore the San Juan country of southeastern Utah, an almost wholly unknown part of the state. The expedition will attempt a preliminary survey of the region between the Colorado and San Juan rivers. Dr. Neil M. Judd, leader of the National Geographic Society expeditions which excavated and studied the dwellings of Chaco Canyon, N. Mex., leads the Utah expedition.

"Things to cultivate and things to kill in Harlem" reads the announcement of sermons to be given in the Mount Morris Church, New York, by its pastor H. G. Weston Smith. "Some things should be cultivated where they are found growing. Some things should be killed because they interfere with the growth of good things. Now and then on Sunday evening the pastor will speak on a few of such things as are not always the most easy to distinguish from each other. Here are some of them: "Ambition—Sufficiency;" "Human Interest—Small Talk;" "Conservatism—Reaction;" "Dependableness—Orientalism."

The first echo of victory from the Bible and missionary conferences has reached the national headquarters, at 276 Fifth Avenue, New York. It is a reverberating echo, easily resounding across the continent, all the way from Salt Lake City to New York. The triumph is the greater that it comes not from one of our largest churches in our biggest cities, but from a smaller place of worship, though one no less enterprising and determined in the work of the Lord. On Oct. 9, four days before the opening of the first Bible and missionary conference, Rev. W. H. Bowler, secretary of field activities of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, and national director of the conferences, received this wire from Lester T. Randolph, conference secretary, in Salt Lake City: "Calvary Baptist Church reached quota today. Are they the first in convention?" Doctor Bowler replied: "Calvary Baptist Church is first reported to us as reaching quota." What church in the convention field will have the honor of coming next?

The Blue Hills Church, Hartford, Conn., is now under the ministry of Rev. Ivan H. Benedict, recently installed.

Rev. Alfred E. Wheeler, of the West Acton Church, Mass., has received a call to the First Church of Framingham, Mass.

Rev. C. L. Evarts is training personal workers at the Blaney Memorial Church, Dorchester, Mass. Members of three neighboring churches have joined in the classes.

The "Manchester Guardian Weekly" in a recent issue comments on the decision in one of our Federal courts respecting the seizure of smuggling vessels of foreign registry outside the three-mile limit of territorial waters. These decisions, the Guardian says, are far-reaching but while distasteful to Britons need not surprise them because "the United States has been driven to these measures (which are by no means novel in its history) by the campaign of smuggling which has been largely organized from this country. As soon as our government puts its foot down and stops these systematic efforts to defeat the laws of a friendly country the United States will be under no necessity to pursue smugglers on the high seas."

A Cycle of Prayer

"Evening and morning and noon will I pray and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice"

Special topic for emphasis during October—Stewardship of talents, time, mind, money.

Our Work and Workers Abroad

20th day—Africa.
21st day—Europe.

Our Work and Workers at Home

22nd day—Negroes.
23rd day—Indians.
24th day—Orientals.
25th day—Alaskans and Mormons.
26th day—Latin Americans.

Announcement is made from New York by the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America of the appointment of Channing H. Tobias, as senior secretary of the negro men's department of that committee. He succeeds Dr. Jesse E. Moorland who reached the retirement age Oct. 1 after twenty-five years' connection with the department. Mr. Tobias has been a secretary of the international committee twelve years, giving the major portion of his time to student work. He is a graduate of Paine College and Drew Theological Seminary. He is a member of the negro Methodist Episcopal Church.

A cable from Dr. George B. Cressey announces his safe arrival at Pekin, China. He spent the summer with a Y. M. C. A. party in Europe and then traveled through Russia and Siberia, ending with several hundred miles by automobile through Mongolia. After a year of language study in Pekin he will begin his life work in the Shanghai Baptist College. He is a son of the Ohio director of promotion.

The First Church, Wichita, Kans., has been cooperating in a splendid way in the Gypsy Smith meetings which were held in September. The membership of the church has grown steadily during the three years of Rev. J. B. Smith's pastorate. At the time of the pastor's coming, Sept. 1, 1920, the membership was 1318. Since that time 343 persons have been baptized, 512 received by letter and experience. The losses by death, letter and erasure have been 343 and eighty-nine have been placed on the list of the "missing." The present membership is 1710. The church is planning for a great year's work.

Are you the person we want? If so, a wonderful opportunity for life and service awaits you. We need a motherly woman with a warm heart for about twenty little Alaskan boys, and fingers deft enough to keep them clean and mended. Above all she must have a deep interest in the cause of Christ and a desire to serve him. She should be between thirty and forty, well and strong. For such a person there is an interesting position waiting as boys' matron at Kodiak Baptist Orphanage, Wood Island, Alaska. The matron has no responsibility for cooking or heavy housekeeping, and since the little family of boys attends government school every day she is in no sense responsible for their education. It is her duty merely to love and mother them, supervise their clothes and health, and bring them up with a love for Christ in their hearts. If you want to know more about this big opportunity write to Mrs. Katherine S. Westfall, executive secretary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

There was held in Springfield, Ill., last summer, what is believed to be the most successful series of open air Sunday evening union church services ever held there. The services, eight in all, were held on the beautiful lawn of the high school, located eight blocks from the heart of the city, with audiences numbering from 2,000 to 2,400 at nearly all of the services. The aggregate attendance was about 15,000. These services were inaugurated in 1917, and have shown a marked increase in effectiveness each year. As in previous years, the preaching at most of the services was by local pastors. A special feature was made of the music. The total cost of the services was $2,811.81. It is interesting to note that most of the money for this purpose was given in small amounts by a large number of people. Nearly 6,000 persons were called over the telephone and asked to subscribe from $1.00 to $2.00 each. The treasurer has a comfortable surplus on hand after paying all bills.

Week-Day Religious Schools

ONE of the most recent attempts of the Protestant churches aims at the supply of a vital need through the movement for week-day religious education. The need is vital though the plan presents many problems.

The need lies in the fact that the most of our churches have through their Sunday schools a scant half hour a week for teaching and that the homes do little of religious instruction. Week-day education has, in our country, come to be considered a duty of the state, and in America the state cannot teach religion. This would not be cause for regret if the churches, and especially the homes, gave religious training to their children, but as it is almost everything is taught to our Protestant children except religion. It is not that parents are wholly regardless of their duty to their children in the sphere of life that is supreme; but in the speeding up of modern life, in the pushing of the residence section of our cities far out beyond the church and the office and sometimes at a distance from the school, in the multiplication of new occupations, new social organizations and groups and new amusements, many separate interests engross the fathers, still others the mothers and others still the children until the unity and the quiet home life of other years is largely gone. Religious training by parents is a rare thing. Family worship has fallen into disuse or is a sketchy and perfunctory performance. Any movement tending further to disburden the parents of their proper responsibility would be of dubious value; but since parents do take a measure of interest in the public school work of their children it may be that a system of week-day religious education will enlist the cooperation of the parents also.

It seems to be conceded that the objective can be reached in any large and satisfactory way only through some arrangement with the public school system, since the school requires about as much of the pupil's time as ought to be given to study and since it has a preemption claim upon the child's attendance during the week days both from long-continued custom and from legal authority. It should be remarked, however, that in spite of law, custom, and common consent which all decree universal education in the United States, the enrolment in the public schools falls far short of the number of children of school age and the actual average attendance falls inexcusably far below the enrolment. Yet undoubtedly the simplest method of securing an attendance upon week-day religious instruction is to have the period devoted to it taken out of the regular time of the public school.

Perhaps the chief difficulty is in the adjustment of this type of religious education to our American ideas. Since the state took over the education of the children, education is made not only the privilege of all but compulsory to all. Yet our constitutional provision for the complete separation of church and state, a provision secured largely through Baptist leadership, makes the mingling in any way of secular and religious teaching in our schools a difficult matter and especially so for our own denomination. The Catholics, and to some extent others, meet the difficulty by establishing parochial schools, but it does not seem possible or desirable to take general education for American citizenship out of the hands of the government. The need of religious education has therefore led to various forms of utilization of the public school machinery to meet the need, without infringing on religious freedom. The Gary schools have been a laboratory for the trying out of one form of cooperation; the interdenominational Sunday School Association of Colorado began some years ago a plan of teaching certain religious subjects for which credit was given in the curriculum of the high schools of the state; and various publications of selections from the Bible, chosen with the aim of presenting ethical and religious teachings which will be wholly unsectarian, have appeared from time to time. Altogether there seems to be a growing appreciation of the need and some hopeful approximation to a solution of the difficulties.

IN a small community with a homogeneous religious character it would sometimes be almost too easy to secure the consent of the school board to the teaching of religion from the point of view of evangelical Protestants; but we must guard the religious liberty of others as well as our own. It is, however, quite possible, as has been proved in some of our great state universities, notably at Michigan under President James B. Angell, to have baccalaureate services and daily chapel in a way quite acceptable to evangelical Christians without arousing the antagonism of others. There was even held a series of evangelistic services in University Hall by Dwight L. Moody in 1890 under the auspices of the Students' Christian Association of the university, with after-meetings and conversions, no noticeable opposition being aroused.

A practical difficulty is found in obtaining proper teachers in small communities, but here again with tact and Christian courtesy the evangelical churches may combine for the greater part of the teaching work, and the pastors or some other fit person give at certain seasons distinctively denominational instruction. It has been tried out successfully. In the increasing adoption of the plan of employing a pastor or director of religious education by churches able to do so there is large hope for the solution of the problems involved.

But all expedients are inferior to home training. It should precede and supplement all other methods of religious culture. The supreme need is home religion.

A Revival of Personal Religion

DURING the past few weeks we have been making, on behalf of our constituency, a careful estimate of our denominational situation. Pastors have been consulted. Laymen and women have analyzed the situation for us as they see it in their local churches. With great care state secretaries and other denominational leaders have gone over the present situation with us from their standpoint.

We believe, therefore, that we have the consensus of judgment and vision, as we write this article. Our real need is not primarily money, but a personal revival of religion. It is generally agreed that the meetings at Atlantic City were of unusual worth to our spirit of unity and our spiritual life. The denomination, it would seem, has found in the plans and programs of the year a new sense of responsibility and therefore a fresh opportunity for service of a worth-while character. A leading pastor expressed himself to this effect: "The plans and program for this year are wise and envisioning and have in them what we have long needed in my church. If my people will follow them they will have a revival of religion that will put us in a state of spiritual achievement." We heard a prominent worker discuss the program with a group of state leaders and while the money needs were strongly presented, the group left the meeting with a great conviction that the program really meant a new sense of Christian love expressing itself in fraternal ministries in every local church. One of the women, as she was leaving the room, said, "If we will only reach our people in the way outlined in the program they will be brought back to a right relationship with their Lord and Saviour and because of the new life our money problems will be solved."

In our judgment our denominational leaders have a keen sense of the real situation. In spite of the fact that we have placed upon them the responsibility of bringing in more than $12,000,000 this fiscal year, the burden of their objective is not primarily money, but a spiritual awakening of the members in every local church. The emphasis upon the Bible in the score or more of major conferences and in the hundred or more secondary rallies, is a clear indication that they see the great need for a revival of religion which can come only as God speaks to the hearts of our people. We have been busy about many good things in these past few years, but the conviction has come that somewhere in all our activities we have lost the power of God in many a local church and our people do not love one another in such a way that they feel a burden of prayer and personal ministry for each other.

There is no easy road to a real revival of religion, but there is the same old hard road of the cross of Christ. That road always leads a disciple to an agony of prayer and personal ministry in the name of Christ. Old-fashioned, you say. Yes, old-fashioned but not outworn. As old as mother love is this fraternal love in Jesus, but it is just as fresh and wonderful today as in its beginnings in the long ago.

We need a revival of personal religion in our local churches and throughout our denominational life; we are setting ourselves to prayer in order that God may have a chance to bring it to pass in our hearts and in the hearts of every other church member. After we have prayed then we will go to work with new power, and from house to house our personal ministries will spread till every church member shall have been awakened and set to work. "By this ye may know that ye have passed from death unto life because ye love the brethren." Get the church members right with God, and money in abundance for all our needs will surely come in to meet our obligations.

Maintain Confidence

SOMEWHERE George Eliot voices warning of the dreadful sin of tearing down the altar of trust in some other heart. What inspiration and courage come to us in our knowledge that all about us are men whose hearts are strongholds of sublime faith in God! We must keep our trust in them or suffer loss.

In a very real sense the high regard in which men have held the churches of Jesus Christ has been to them a bulwark of strength in their own lives, though often they have lived and worked apart from the fellowship of church life. Every organization this country has that sets itself for the uplifting of men, the righting of wrong, the alleviation of suffering, draws helpfulness and cheer and strength from its conscious fellowship with the churches. Men who never darken the doors of a church are nevertheless touched in more or less degree by the influences of the sanctuary. Sinners are often kept by them from the limits of abandon. Now, as in the day of the Master, Christians are the salt that keeps the community from rottenness, the light that points the way in the dark.

Belaboring the churches is not a helpful exercise, either to him who engages in it, or to others. Recently a minister in Canada advised his traveling members to carry the printed copies of his sermons with them "in view of the dearth of the Word of God in the churches of the land." Apart from the egotism of such advice, one wonders how this minister, who, like all his brethren, preached every Sunday, can know of the "dearth in the land."

The needs of the time call for building in the hearts of men the altars of trust, and not tearing them down. Always the world outside the churches will interpret the mind of Christ as it observes it in the outworkings of Christian life. If creed is not crystallized into deed the world will have none of it. It is time to remember to safeguard the heritage of high regard in which our communities have held the churches. Let the champions of both orthodoxy and heterodoxy, so-called, be careful not to sacrifice our good name upon the altars of controversy. Let us be mindful to build up confidence in the churches.

Prize Fighting a National Disgrace

THIS is what the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist church says about it:

"Prize-fighting with its graft, fakery, greed and brutality is raging like an epidemic once again.

"Under the guise of boxing conducted for the amusement of the participants and the free entertainment of their friends, prize-fighting like the camel's nose, pushed its way into the tents of the government services during the war. The first matches were limited to a few rounds; rounds were of short duration; the bouts were between amateurs with no prizes; no admission fees were charged, and the decisions were on points. Today at various army posts men who are on the level of professional pugilists batter and bruise each other at prize fights for which admission fees are charged. In these fights the boxer may win on points, but knockouts are preferred. Gambling, always an evil in the army and navy, is the chief interest.

"It should be made plain beyond all possibility of mistake that the Christian people of the United States do not object to boxing and they know the difference between boxing and prize-fighting. A man boxes with his brother or his best friend and when he boxes he does not try to start the blood, close the other man's eye, clog his nostrils and mouth, paralyze him by blows at the base of the brain, pound the small of his back in clinches or injure his heart, liver or kidneys. When a prize fight is not a fake these things are done, and they are done with a view to financial profit."

The Unreality of God

NOT long ago we heard a sermon by a young Baptist preacher from Wales in which he took up the assertion made by so many people in our day that "God seems unreal." And this young man told his congregation quietly and positively that it was simply because people made no attempt to keep up any kind of an acquaintanceship with God.

"Let a young man go away from home," he declared, "and never write to his father and mother, never hear from them or about them, never talk of them or think about them, and after a lapse of years there is no question about their becoming unreal to him! They exist but they do not exist for him. It is the same way with the heavenly Father."

If we never talk to God, never think about him, never listen to his voice, God gradually passes out of our lives. All psychologists agree that "the power of attention is limited in scope." If we fill the mind with one kind of thing exclusively, other things are crowded out. We fill the mind with business, with pleasure, with ambitions of one kind or another, and we have no place left for him who gives meaning to it all. It is not a question of the "unforgivable sin" or of "God turning away." It is simply a question of our having no room for him in our lives.

The text which we need to frame and put up in our offices is "Be still and know that I am God." Literally, "Cease ye," "Let your hands drop down," stop this rush and hurry. Take time for that which gives the truest happiness on earth. Know that there is a God. Walk with the Great Companion and Friend.

Politics

OKLAHOMA is a good subject for study.

Some hundreds of her citizens, good or bad, have recently suffered whippings at the hands of outlaw gangs.

Had this thing occurred in Sicily, it would have proved conclusively that the Italians are unfit for American citizenship.

Comes then Governor Walton declaring that the Ku Klux Klan is responsible for the outrages, that it controls the courts and through them protects the whipping parties, and that the constitutional machinery of government in that state has been superseded by the invisible power of a secret order which commits and condones crime.

Whereupon he proclaims martial law and creates a military dictatorship.

What does the Klan? With urgent reasons pressing it to aid the governor in running down the midnight marauders and to clear the good name of the order by a stand for the enforcement of law, it turns instead to denouncing and resisting the efforts of the governor to restore a reign of law in that unhappy state.

So the newspapers inform the public. But both the governor and the Klan declare that the papers are under the control of sinister influences which prevent their telling the truth.

The whole fracas emits the odor of spoiled politics. Lovers of the Republic may well study and avoid the Oklahoma example.

A Measure of Industrial Progress

A FORTY-PAGE pamphlet on China today has been prepared by the American Bankers Association. From this we quote: "If we had to hire coolie carriers to carry freight, not to mention the 1,000,000,000 passengers which our American railways hauled in 1921, it would take twice the present estimated population of China, or 800,000,000 men, each man carrying 100 pounds 15 miles a day for 365 working days. It is also calculated that the motive power we are now using, steam and electricity, gives us the equivalent of five energy servants for every man, woman and child in the United States, which in itself is equivalent to giving us industrially the effectiveness of 500,000,000 people working without this power. The application of this statement can be appreciated in a country like China, where there has not yet been developed one horse-power of its wonderful potentialities in hydroelectric power and where steam power is only at the threshold of its possibilities in modern industry."

The Uplifted Lord

The sermon preached to the Baptist World Congress, Stockholm, Sunday morning, July 22. Text—John 12:32: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself."

By W. A. Cameron

IT was the hour of apparent triumph. Christ's entry into the city had been hailed with joyous acclamation. Although the procession was a humble, impromptu affair, it doubtless filled the souls of the disciples with exultant hopes and with visions of their hero ruling in majesty over the kingdoms of the world. The narrow streets had echoed to the loud hosannas of the people. Nor were the disciples the only ones deceived by the enthusiasm of the hour. When the Pharisees witnessed our Lord's welcome as he entered Jerusalem, they spitefully said among themselves: "Behold, we prevail nothing: lo, the world is gone after him."

Then came certain Greeks giving color to the same impression. When the excitement was at its height they approached Philip and expressed a desire to see Jesus. Just why they wished to see him we do not know. It may have been to satisfy an idle curiosity, or it may have been with the hope that he would speak some message that would answer a spiritual longing which even Judaism had failed to satisfy. Their visit stirred the soul of Jesus with conflicting emotions. A strange and wondrous joy took possession of him. For the moment, at any rate, he was elated. In deep spiritual ecstacy he cried, "The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified." What was it in this seemingly trivial incident that wrought the Christ to such intense emotion and that warranted the assertion of so positive and complete a triumph? With true prophetic instinct Christ saw the vision of a seeking world, inquiring its way to him. Here was a little band of advanced scouts preceding a host which cannot be numbered. The tendency of this handful of Greeks will become the drift of the world.

Death and Life

It must have seemed to our Lord's bewildered followers that nations were already coming to his light, and kings to the brightness of his rising. Eagerly they seized upon the thought that the hour of his temporal sovereignty had at last arrived. They saw the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them and Christ on the throne. They saw empires wide open to such powers as his. They saw him serving God on a royal scale and making him an offering of a conquered world. But Christ broke the spell by that pregnant parable of a corn of wheat. "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die it abideth by itself alone." Strange hour this to talk of death! But Jesus knew that there is no expansion possible for a grain of wheat until it is planted.

In Canada's capital, on the banks of the Ottawa river there stands a statue put up by a Harvard student. It is built of bronze on a huge granite base. It is the figure of a young knight. His hair is blowing in the wind. His head is poised upward, and he has a sword drawn in his hands. His cloak flies behind him, and he is evidently climbing the granite rock. Underneath are written these words of Sir Galahad, "If I save my life I lose it." It stands there in memory of another Harvard student, William Harper, who was walking along the bank of the river when he saw a young man and a young woman skating. They came down to a dangerous place where there was a swirl in the water. The ice was thin; it broke; and they disappeared. Harper took off his coat and went out and dove into that hole and was drowned, trying to save two people he did not know. "If I save my life I lose it." It was true even of the Son of Man. He shows how the selfless life that pours itself out, and offers itself up, and gives itself away is the life that yields the harvest of abundant blessing. For him as for us there is no royal road. The throne upon which they would have thrust him was, after all, the symbol of a very limited authority. The cross to which he resolutely journeyed was the true throne of the universe. It stood not at the end but at the beginning of things. If he had drawn these few Greeks by the magnetism he now possessed, when he was uplifted on the cross he would not draw a few but all. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself."

> "IF mankind blessed with good and filled with plenty progresses only in pride, envy and selfishness, while mankind smitten with sorrow and appalled by overwhelming distress grows pitiful, benevolent and urgently helpful, it can scarcely be deemed mystifying, even from the low-level observation post of human conjecture, that the Heavenly Father, yearning over the just and the unjust, thinks it needful betimes to punctuate his benedictions for the earth with disciplines of woe. It is kinder to smite than to let the human race unchastened go its prospering way to universal hardness of heart."

The Sublime Egotism of Jesus

First of all, then, I bid you notice what I shall venture to call the sublime egotism of Jesus. "And I, if I be lifted up." There isn't anything quite like that in all the world. If Jesus Christ is nothing more than a man among many here is presumption without a parallel in history. He is about to die and he claims that it is to be no ordinary death. He claims that his death would but enlarge his powers of offering himself to men as their spiritual food. He claims that his death is to liberate stores of vital energy which are to loosen the souls of men from their most tyrannical sins. Sidney Lanier has a poem in which he offers pardon to the great and good men of the past for the faults and flaws that mar the perfection of their record. There is something in each of them to forgive. There is something to be forgiven in Buddha:

"I pardon thee
That all the All thou hadst for needy men

Was nothing, and thy Best of being was
But not to be."

There is something to be forgiven in Dante:

"Worn Dante, I forgive
The implacable hates, that in thy horrid hells
Or burn or freeze thy fellows, never loosed
By death, nor time, nor love."

There is something to be forgiven in them all:

"All, all, I pardon, ere 'tis asked, .
Your more or less, your little mole that marks
You brother, and your kinship seals, to man."

Then he turns to Jesus:

"But Thee, but Thee, O sovereign Seer of Time,
But Thee, O Poets' Poet, Wisdom's Tongue,
But Thee, O Man's best Man, O Love's best Love,
O perfect Life in prefect labour writ,
O all men's Comrade, Servant, King and Priest,
What if or yet, what mole, what flaw, what lapse,
What least defect or shadow of defect,
What rumour tattled by an enemy,
Of inference loose, what lack of grace,
Even in torture's grasp, or sleep's, or death's,—
O what amiss may I forgive in Thee,—
Jesus, good Paragon, Thou crystal Christ?"

And here is the marvel of it—the poet's estimate of Christ is Christ's estimate of himself. He finds nothing in himself to forgive. He exhausts metaphors in the assertion of his unique and preeminent relation to life. "I am from above," "I am not of this world," "I am the bread of life," "I am the light of the world," "I am the door," "I am the good shepherd," "I am the way," "I am the truth," "I am the resurrection and the life." On one occasion the Pharisees were stung to madness by the immensity of his claims and they retort "Art thou greater than our Father Abraham?" And his reply is one lifting the whole controversy almost out of the range of human thought, "Before Abraham was I am." And here is the supremely wonderful thing about Jesus, that when he makes his superlative claims we do not resent it. The Emperor Julian repeated dreams that he had had in the night, and in which he saw himself clothed with god-like prerogatives and powers. But everybody felt the collossal and insane conceit of the thing. Is it not most significant that although Christ made such claims he has ever been regarded as the ideal of humility? His lowliness was the base of all his virtues. The heart of man instinctively recognizes in him the humility of the incarnate God. When we look at him through his own eyes, he is transfigured before us. His cross becomes his throne. Nothing has happened to invalidate a single claim made by him. He was never more unique and never more sufficient. Still he stands strong among the weak, erect among the fallen, clean among the defiled, living among the dead,

"Who that one moment has the least descried Him,
Dimly and faintly, hidden and afar,
Doth not despise all excellence beside Him,
Pleasures and powers that are not and that are.
Ay, amid all men bear himself thereafter,
Smit with a solemn and a sweet surprise,
Dumb to their scorn and turning to their laughter
Only the dominance of earnest eyes?"

The Sublime Optimism of Jesus

In the second place we have in our text a suggestion of the sublime optimism of Jesus. "I will draw all men unto myself." It is impossible to ponder these words without feeling the sweep of the assertion. It covers all the sons and daughters of men. It includes the working man and also his employer. It includes the drunkard and also the publican. It includes the pauper and also the millionaire. It includes the pulpit and also the press. It includes the North American continent and also every other continent. It overleaps the barriers of race and caste and creed. It brings us into touch with the God who hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth. Very early in his ministry Christ said, "If ye love them that love you what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?" There is no more selfish force in all the world than the love that limits itself to its own family or nation. During the days of feudalism there was intense loyalty among families and tribes, and the result was a perpetual warfare which split up society into scores of hostile camps. It was

"the simple plan
That they should take who had the power
And they should keep who can."

And the world has not outgrown that spirit yet because it has not learned the purpose of Christ. That purpose is not limited by personal friendships. It is not bounded by community interests. It knows nothing of party affiliations, racial prejudices or national pride. It takes fire at the thought of bringing the whole world into the loving embrace of God. It is love set free and behold what it can do!—"All men unto myself."

The secret of that optimism was an abiding confidence in God. Our faith is clouded and intermittent. It floods and ebbs like the tide. Jesus never doubted. His vision was unclouded. His trust was absolute. He saw God. He realized God. He hid himself in God. In God he lived and moved and had his being. He was no cheerful optimist who had shut his eyes to the sorrow and heart-break of the world. Never were eyes wider open than his. He saw suffering in its every form. He had ears which caught every shriek of agony, every cry of distress, every sigh of want. But he remained undaunted. He never lost heart. He faced facts as they were and he predicted grander facts which were to be. He marched breast forward. He never doubted clouds would break. He felt the fury of the storm and was certain of the calm which was to follow. He could measure the dimensions of the night and also see the dawning of glorious morning. His optimism was the optimism of God because he knew the secret of perfect trust.

The Secret of Optimism

Then, too, the secret of that optimism was an unshakable confidence in man. Matthew Arnold says of Goethe that he was able to lay his finger with unerring accuracy upon the real seat of human mischief and ill and say, "Thou ailest here and here." The same might have been said of Christ. The difference between others and Jesus is this—that while they saw the disease and despaired, he saw the disease and hoped. Our Lord had an extraordinary belief in the spiritual competence and responsiveness of every man. One of our modern writers emphasizes Christ's "ability" as a teacher. But it does not represent itself to me as a matter of "ability" at all, but rather as a matter of Christ's belief in them. That great sermon on the spirituality of God and the universality of worship he preached to a despised and degraded Samaritan woman. It was an amazing compliment to the spiritual capacity of human nature, even when that nature was degraded and sunken. Another writer says "He was not afraid of wasting time or truth on barren souls." It would be better to say that he was not afraid of wasting time or truth on any man for the simple reason that he did not believe that any soul was barren. In these days of radio we know that unless the transmitter and receiver are keyed together the wireless message trembles in the ether in vain. Jesus believed that the heart of God and the heart of man were keyed together, and that eternal foundations can be laid in human souls.

The Kingdom

And, once more, the secret of that optimism was an abounding confidence in the kingdom. In the mind of Jesus the kingdom was the chiefest good of the soul and the hope of the world. The kingdom is commensurate with his reign and rule and authority everywhere. It includes the new social order where is gathered together a great fellowship of art, science, literature, music, statecraft, government, family life, everything shot through with the Spirit of God. It includes the sanctified church, the sanctified state, the sanctified family, the sanctified nation, the sanctified world. The kingdom cometh to a man when he sets up Christ's cross in his heart. It passes on its way when that man rises from the table and girds himself and serves the person next him. It comes to every man with its offer of rebirth into newness of life. It comes to society with a new order which reshapes the men and women who live under it. It comes as a protest against any features in prevailing conditions that do not disclose Christlike love. It comes with a program of social redemption to be made effective in commerce, in pleasures, in international relations and the whole of human life. It is the world-wide state, whose law is the divine will, whose members obey the Spirit of Jesus, whose strength is goodness, whose heritage is God.

Surely we as Baptists have a contribution to make in the building of the kingdom. Who knows but we have come into the kingdom for such a time as this? Many of our principles are shared with others who profess the evangelical faith. In this we rejoice and would adopt the attitude of Tennyson when his friends told him the minor poets were using his methods.

"Once in a golden hour
I cast to earth a seed;
Up there came a flower—
The people said—a weed.

Then it grew so tall
It wore a crown of light;
But thieves from o'er the wall
Stole the seed by night.

Sowed it far and wide
By every town and tower,
Till all the people cried,
'Splendid is the flower.'

Hear my little fable—
He who runs may read—
Most can grow the flowers now:
For all have got the seed."

But the seed is still ours and the world still needs it. What is that seed? An American scholar says "The Baptist principle is one, and only one. It may be stated in many ways, but it has never been better put than in that old Reformation formula: the competency of the soul before God." That includes the immediacy of the soul's communion with God. It includes the spirituality of religion. It includes the rights and responsibilities of the individual. It includes freedom from the coercion of belief, from the coercion of ritual, from the coercion of ecclesiastical authority. It includes the right of private judgment—to see and state the truth as God gives the vision. It includes the liberty and equality and priesthood of all believers. It includes these and many other things. These principles are essential if we are to have a redeemed humanity upon a regenerated earth, if we are to look forward to a time when the clash of arms shall be no more; when oppression and injustice and hatred shall have ceased among mankind; when this world of struggling men and women shall indeed recognize Christ as the Light of its light and the Leader of its thought.

And if all this means anything to us assembled in this congress it ought to mean that in Christ is to be found the deepest ground of our optimistic faith. The more we commit ourselves to him the securer will be our optimism. Christ is our great Watchman on the ramparts of the city of Humanity. Let us send up one voice to him as he stands there with his broad outlook on human life: "O divine Watchman, what of the night?" And, as we cry, the answer will come, tender and clear and strong: "My anxious disciple, the night cometh. Not yet is the perfect day. Fear not. Faint not. Fight on. Trust on. The eastern sky is brightening with the promise of sunrise. I shall yet draw all men unto myself."

The Sublime Magnetism of Jesus

And now finally let me say that our text speaks to us concerning the magnetism of Jesus. The magnet is not only Christ, but Christ in the wonderful power of his unique sacrifice. Yea, he declares that it is in the power of that unique sacrifice that his personal magnetism is to be found. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw." The cross swings into view. The path of humiliation is to be the path to glory. The sacrifice is not meaningless; it has a redemptive purpose. He who went to Calvary was not the mere victim of man's hate and envy. He was the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world. The sacrifice is not something flung at the feet of an angry God to persuade him to change his mind. God did not need to change his mind. The sacrifice began in his own heart before it ever expressed itself in the perfect Life or the wondrous Death. The world could only be redeemed by sacrifice and the sacrifice that redeemed us was the sacrifice of God. And when we see Christ identifying himself with our sinful race, even to the uttermost of all that was involved in that, we know that the heart of God is thus entangled in our sorrow, and the hands of God are stretched out to save us from our sin. This is why the cross is so melting, so subduing, so morally magnificent, so mightily attractive.

There is nothing like that magnet even on the plane of common life. Sacrifice does not imply the lessening but the enlargement of life, nor should it always be associated in the mind with the thoughts of pain and sorrow. Its greatest ingredient is rather the joy of self-giving and the triumph of achievement. Properly speaking there is no such thing as sacrifice in the sense of permanent loss and impoverishment; rightly understood it is always gain, glorious gain, more life and fuller. All the world over and in every age men have instinctively felt and recognized the grandeur of self-offering in the service of an impersonal ideal. The worst and cruellest religious observances contain something of it. In his "Tale of Two Cities" Charles Dickens makes the not otherwise very reputable Sydney Carton go willingly to the guillotine to save the husband of the woman he loved. The play in which the episode is represented is rightly termed "The Only Way." It is the only way. The only way in which God could save the world. The only way in which the soul of the race or the individual can mount to God. The Lamb in the midst of the throne has been slain in a good many altars since history began. Dickens' hero is only expressing the experience of humanity scaling the heights of divinity when he says in his dying moments: "It is a far, far better thing that I do now than I have ever done; it is a far, far sweeter rest that I go to than I have ever known." I think of Livingstone making on himself that ancient curse of Africa. I think of Father Damien becoming a leper for those who suffered from that lamentable disease. I think of Florence Nightingale carrying the burden of wounded men lying on the battlefield. I think of the men who died in the war, men from almost every nation represented in this congress, sacrificing themselves to set right a world entangled by selfishness and impeded by sin.

"Each drop of blood that e'er through true heart ran
With lofty message, ran for thee and me."

Surely there is no one so dead in soul as not to feel the magnetism of such sacrifice. But when I think of the uplifted Son of God offering himself as the supreme sacrifice, I understand how he lays his wondrous spell upon the hearts of men and draws them to himself.

Attraction of the Cross

There is no spiritual attraction like the cross. Those who find themselves proof against many other religious attractions are drawn by this one. We Baptists may not make much of it as a visible and material sign in our church and homes. We may not wear it as an ornament on our bodies. But we are not of those who wish to make it of none effect. We know full well that the secret of its power is not bound up with any ecclesiastical exposition of it. The men who find in ecclesiastical theory and myth little to attract and much to repel, but who still glory in the cross and find the law and inspiration of their life in the faith and spirit of him who consecrated it by his death, are in our day a multitude which no man can number.

Notwithstanding all this our religion has had too little sacrifice in it. Christ's cross has been taken from his hands and smothered with flowers. It has become what he would have hated, a source of graceful ideas and agreeable emotions. There has been nothing of travail; nothing of struggle; nothing of climbing on hands and knees through thorns and briars. When Jesus presented the cross for the salvation of his disciples, he was not thinking of a sentiment which can disturb no man's life, but of a calling which is both serious and high. He knew we could get along without a creed, he also knew we could not get along without a cross. Only as we follow in his steps can we in any high degree bless our generation. We help, heal and save only as the virtue goes out of us. Self-indulgent, self-centered, self-seeking, we cannot be Christ's disciples. There is no option but to follow Christ. It is a mockery to bear his name and live the selfish life. If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him. It is the glory of the cross that it speaks to us of the service he did for us; but let us not forget that it also speaks of the service he expects from us.

"Measure thy life by loss, instead of gain,
Not by the wine drunk, but the wine poured forth;
For love's strength standeth in love's sacrifice,
And he that giveth most hath most to give."

Alabaster Boxes

Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering words while their ears can hear them, and while their hearts can be thrilled and made happier by them; the kind things you mean to say when they are gone, say before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them. If my friends have alabaster boxes laid away, full of fragrant perfumes of sympathy and affection, which they intend to break over my dead body, I would rather they would bring them out in my weary and troubled hours, and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them while I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin, without a flower, a funeral without a eulogy, than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy.

The Cross the Challenge of the Future

Here then is our challenge as we face the future. The cross is the starting-point of the vastest activities of the world. It is the birthplace of the hope which crowns human life today and thrills it with divine ambitions for its onward course. It is a tremendous moral demand. Its splendid idealism may become a superb realism. Its imitation will lay upon us a terrific ethical obligation. It will open the doors of the greatest experience possible to mankind. When Samuel Rutherford was marching along in one of his grand pulpit marches, he passed away from a controversial passage to expound the cross, and one of the Dukes of Argyle who was present, was so excited that he shouted out: "Gang on, mon, you are on the right string now!" It was a great saint of another century who declared "The church of our deathbed is the church of the future." If we will but listen we can hear the echo of the feet of the multitudes who through past centuries have come to God through the royal way of the holy cross. And we can hear the oncoming tread of the greater multitudes of all nations in the days to come who are coming into the kingdom by this road. My Baptist friends, I pause to listen for your feet. Are they on this road? If they are you are destined to reach that gateway that leads to victory and to God.

The Murren Conference

By Albert Dawson

THE conference organized by Sir Henry S. Lunn betwen Anglicans and Free Churchmen on the church and social problems, held at Murren, Switzerland, in September, has given great satisfaction to all who took part in it and promises to be productive of much good. Members of different communions who have never or rarely met before got to know and understand one another, and discovered that the things on which they are agreed are far more numerous and important than those on which they differ. As Prof. Carnegie Simpson remarked, "distant views lead to distorted views." Midway in the conference the venerable head of the church army, Prebendary Carlile, testified, "We have come to love one another as never before." A leading Baptist, Dr. Charles Brown, humorously remarked that all his life he had been mortally afraid of bishops and archdeacons and canons, but during his stay at Murren he lost all awe of them. At the close of the proceedings the Bishop of Bradford said that if such conferences did not cut very much ice in the actual results directly achieved, they generated a spirit and atmosphere through which things could be done. Doctor Perowne added: "I believe that the day of conferences in which we live is really a day when this spirit of fellowship between Christians of different communions is going to effect far more than in the old days of controversy when we all stood for great principles and thought we were going to win everybody else over to our side, and so the world would be won for Christ." A Welsh Wesleyan, Dr. Maldwyn Hughes, said there had been much talk lately about Christian unity, those who took part in the conference had realized that unity was not a goal but an achievement, a present possession, and all they had to do was to translate it into united action. "When we go home," said the rector of Newington, and his words indicate how the conference will bear fruit, "we must put into practice what we have learned at Murren." The experience of the conference indicates that similar gatherings, wherever held, would strengthen the response to the Lambeth Appeal, and help the movement towards a larger spirit of Christian unity amongst all men of goodwill. The Bishop of Bradford paid a high tribute, enthusiastically endorsed by the conference, which numbers about sixty members, to the vision, courage, and generosity of Sir Henry Lunn in creating the Gindelwald and Murren conferences.

> "I BELIEVE that the day of conferences in which we live is really a day when this spirit of fellowship between Christians of different communions is going to effect far more than in the old days of controversy when we all stood for great principles and thought we were going to win everybody else over to our side, and so the world would be won for Christ."—Bishop Perowne.

United Christian Councils

The primary aim of the Murren Conference was to help to give effect to the recommendation of the last Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops that councils representing all Christian communions should be formed within such areas as may be deemed most convenient, as centers of united effort, to promote the physical, moral and social welfare of the people, and to extend the rule of Christ among all nations and over every region of human life. A session was devoted to the discussion of possibilities of associations of congregations. One speaker remarked that if the leaders of the churches are not careful, in twenty years' time there will be no congregations to associate! Doctor Brown said that we could not have unity on the grand scale unless we first had it on the small scale, and ever since the Lambeth Conference he had been waiting for this special part of the bishops' message to materialize. He urged Anglicans and Wesleyans, as the two largest bodies, to take the initiative in forming local councils. Accounts given by Bishop Perowne and others of work done showed that the Lambeth recommendation has been anticipated in certain localities, united councils, some of them including Roman Catholics and labor men, having been in operation there for years. At Plymouth joint committees on housing, temperance, purity, labor, etc., have been very effective. At Hull three representatives from every congregation in the city constitute the council, which did specially good service during the dock strike. In Newington twenty clergymen and twenty labor men had been brought together, and agreed upon a joint manifesto, embodying Christian principles, of which many thousands of copies were circulated. In another part of south London Anglicans and Nonconformists have worked together for thirty years, and done much to cleanse and uplift one of the worst areas in the metropolis. Such councils not only enable the Christian churches to exercise effective influence in local affairs, but also help to foster good-will and the spirit of cooperation among all Christian people, and so encourage common effort in evangelistic work. As the conference proceeded, consciousness deepened of the irresistible power of the combined Christian forces. The Bishop of Bradford thinks the time is almost ripe for them to act like a lever in society, rather than as leaven. Very impressive words were spoken by Sir Donald Maclean, the Liberal statesman: "The chance of the Christian church was never so great as now. I would say to you Christian ministers, do not apologize for yourselves half as much as you are accustomed to do. The rulers and leaders of all parties are afraid of you, because you hold in your hands, if you care to exercise it, and if you act together, a power and an influence that no party machine could stand in front of for five minutes. If you do not take the chance you have today, the trades unions will snatch the moral initiative from you, and political organizations among working men will lead the nations of Europe along the path you ought to have led them generations ago." The conference was justified in resolving that by concentrated and combined work in social and moral reform a new impetus will be given to many movements of great importance ot the world, the forces which are working for the reconstruction of society on the ethical foundations of Christianity will be greatly strengthened, and the kingdom of God will be advanced.

An Object Lesson

Several illustrations were given of what may be done in shaping state policy and averting bad legislation when Christian bodies act together. When there was a strong agitation in England in favor of the issue by the state of premium bonds, which would involve the lottery principle, a deputation representing various churches and headed by Dr. Clifford waited upon the government of the day, and Mr. Bonar Law definitely told the speakers before they withdrew that but for their representations the government would have supported the proposal. The anti-liquor campaign provides a similar object-lesson. For a generation before the war no substantial temperance legislation had been passed in England. Eight years ago the various temperance organizations of the fourteen leading denominations, which had been working independently and advocating different and sometimes conflicting policies, formed the United Temperance Council, and agreed upon a program, the four main planks being: No sale of liquor to young people under eighteen, local option for England and Wales (as in Scotland), entire Sunday closing, and effective control of drinking in clubs. As a result of this union of forces one success followed another. Lady Astor's bill secured the first point, the duration of the drinking day has been halved, the sale of liquor in clubs has been curtailed and the "bona fide traveler" (i. e., any one who by taking a little walk could obtain liquor at any time on Sundays has been abolished. Dr. W. C. Poole the American pastor of Christ church Westminster-bridge-road, gave the conference a vivid account of the beneficia results of the abolition of the liquor trade in the United States. Without presuming to judge the issue of American prohibition, the conference recorded its feeling that the deliberate adoption of this measure by a great people is entitled to the respect of all other nations, and it therefore strongly condemned those who, in the press or otherwise, seek to expose it to unfair criticism, and still more, those who, by countenancing the illegal importation of intoxicating liquor into the states, hamper the carrying out of the American people's decision. Especially the conference viewed with apprehension any action which would necessitate measures being taken to alter the specific character of the one great unguarded frontier of the world between Canada and the United States.

The first question to which the Murren Conference addressed itself after the presidential address, was that of world peace. The Bishop of Plymouth, who introduced the subject, said that international peace was almost the acid test of churchmanship, because the outside world is judging Christianity very largely by its supposed failure to prevent war, and also because it brings us straight up against the question whether we believe in the Fatherhood of God, with its corollary the brotherhood of man. A doctrine of brotherhood which stops at national frontiers is not the brotherhood preached by Jesus Christ. Every approximation between the churches of different countries is an asset for international peace. The conference was challenged to answer the question, "Is war ever right?" The pacificist position was ably stated by a young Congregational minister, Rev. A. D. Belden, who maintained that the Holy Catholic Church being "one man in Christ Jesus" and being bound by a sacrament or pledge that takes precedence of all others, should refuse to take part again in combatant warfare as being plainly contrary to the spirit of Christ, and in the event of war should devote all its energies and resources to the succor of humanity, belligerent and otherwise, and to the reconciliation of the peoples at strife.

But nearly all the speakers agreed that, in the circumstances of 1914, Britain could not honorably do other than she did. Dr. Chas. Brown justified wars for the defence of the weak, the deliverance of the oppressed, the championing of the persecuted and wronged. Dr. Carnegie Simpson submitted as a guiding principle: War is justified if it is necessary for an end greater than peace. Another speaker said that in God force is subject to love, and so it should be in man. The Rev. J. E. Ratenbury argued that under certain conditions pacificism is less Christian than other methods of resisting aggression. The discussion showed that Christian people are very much exercised over the problem of war and nonresistance. They have an uneasy feeling that killing is never right, and yet they cannot see how a chivalrous nation could act other than as England did in 1914. The collective mind of the conference was finally expressed in these terms: "The conference declares its abhorrence of the doctrine that war is inevitable, and holds that, unless civilization is to be

Before the Judgment Seat of Christ

A sermon preached at Murren, Switzerland, Sunday, Sept. 9, before the Conference on the Church and Social Questions

BY CHARLES BROWN

"HOWBEIT, I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee."—Matthew 11:24.

Most serious and surprising words, spoken in one of the most beautiful spots in Palestine.

And I suppose—for I put the paragraph near the end of our Lord's Galilean ministry—they must have startled and shocked the people who heard them.

They were spoken of Capernaum.

Capernaum was a town of average morality; it was the center of our Lord's Galilean ministry; it came to be known as his own city. Its narrow streets had been crowded when he spoke. In Capernaum people trod on one another in their eagerness to hear the words from his lips. He was their prophet. He had to put out in a boat on the sea while a thronged multitude stood on the beach listening to him. They wanted to make him king in Capernaum. It was at Capernaum that:

At even, ere the sun was set,
The sick, O Lord, around thee lay,
Oh, with what divers pains they met,
Oh, with what joy they went away.

To put Capernaum in the same category with Sodom, with its unspeakable, revolting depravity; a city on which the Lord rained fire from heaven, and to the advantage of Sodom, was enough to undo all the favorable impression that our Lord had made on the town, and to kindle the fire of resentment in the hearts of its people if they heard it. And surely they did. It seemed unfair, and yet he spoke the words; there is no doubt they are the words of Jesus, and they are introduced with this majestic formula, "I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee."

These are not words a speaker would choose, but the words choose the speaker.

They represent an aspect of our Lord's teaching that we would rather not look at. They are not words that we linger fondly over. You do not take this passage and frame it and hang it in your schoolroom, or bedroom or study. You take the later words that come after in the twenty-eighth verse, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Thank God those words are true. He said them. The ages have proved them to be true, and their glory can never be dimmed. But they are not the only words of Jesus, and I think the evangelist is divinely guided when he puts those words in the same chapter, side by side with our text.

It is worse than foolishness for us to be eclectic with the words of Jesus, choosing here and there; and that is our tendency, to take the thing that comforts us and to refuse his commands. He attaches the most vital importance to his own words. He alone can say, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."

What do we do with the commands of Jesus? Play fast and loose with them?

When he bids you forgive your enemies, are you doing it? Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you?

Why?

That ye may be the children of your Father.

When anybody insults and maligns you, do you go and choose the nicest book you have, or some valuable present, and send it round to them?

That is what it means.

When he says, "I say unto you," let every other voice be silenced, and let Jesus speak. When he corrects Moses, as he does, listen to him. Let your preconceived ideas go. When he speaks on divorce, listen to him, and on non-resistance, on love of the brother as a vital thing.

It is the man who listens and does who builds on the rock; it is the man who listens and fails to do who is like a man who, without a foundation, built his house on the sand.

We are told that people today want comforting sermons.

God forbid that any one who speaks in the name of Jesus should ignore the fact that people are broken-hearted and suffering from strain. But there are times when comfort is not the thing. There are times when people who want comfort need to be aroused. They need to be led in the way of receiving legitimate comfort. There are times when it is quite wrong for you to caress your child; to do it then would be to put a premium on disobedience and selfishness and wrong-doing.

I know these words "Come unto me." I would flash them out as with electric light through all the dreary streets of London. I would bring them to the rich people who are blase and suffering from ennui. I would take them to the wretched and the burdened. I would call out to every man, "Come unto me."

But suppose a man refuses to come to Jesus in any effective way—and there is no effective way to come to Christ except by the way of obedience. Am I to go on comforting him? Am I to assure him that God is good-natured, that all is well? I should be a false prophet, I should not be a true friend of the man, I should be dealing unfairly with the words of Jesus Christ. When Jesus speaks again, let every voice be silenced. The last word is always with him, and for our health and salvation let me remind you that far more of our Lord's words than we realize are words of warning, of severity, of condemnation. You might take the four Gospels and pursue this theme—the place of fear in the teachings of Jesus Christ. You have not dealt fairly with the Jesus of the New Testament. The "gentle Jesus, meek and mild" of Wesley's hymn is only part of Jesus.

Then there is the Jesus whose eyes are a blaze of indignation at the hypocrite and the formalist, and the man who causes his brother to stumble. Take the whole of the words of Jesus and do not neglect any of them. And if people will not come to Jesus, and wilfully reject him, we have no right to bring to them messages of comfort.

What do these words of our Lord indicate?

Not, as some unworthy critic has suggested, that he is suffering from pique because the people of Capernaum have not been what he expected them to be. It was there that he enjoyed the greatest popular favor that he had anywhere. They are words of disappointment, keen and bitter disappointment and grief.

He had poured out his soul on Capernaum.

Spiritual Message Refused

We have read what he did and said to the messenger of John. "The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them," and it had made no difference, as if superficially the people of Capernaum were no better. That was the trouble of Jesus. There was a great spiritual purpose and passion underlying all his beneficence and they were willing to take all the material benefits he could bring, but his spiritual message they refused. It was at Capernaum that he preached the great sermon in the sixth chapter of the fourth gospel on the bread of life, and upon this many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him.

The church has been foremost in healing the sick and in feeding the hungry. All the great philanthropies of the world have sprung out of Christian faith —our hospitals and orphanages. But that is not the deepest thing our Lord came to do.

After all hunger and sickness are symptoms of a disease that lies deeper, the disease of Capernaum.

It was that Jesus was after.

Hunger is a symptom—it was never God's intention. Starvation in Russia is not the work of God, it is the work of bolshevism.

Let me say this quite deliberately, that if all people everywhere were all they ought to be, if all men would come to Jesus and take his yoke and learn of him, there would be no hunger in the world.

There is quite enough for everybody, fish in the seas, birds in the air, and creatures on the hillside, and the productivity of the soil. It is a question of production and distribution. There are millions of acres waiting to be cultivated. Where does hunger come from? It comes from the greed and rapacity and selfishness of man; idleness, drunkenness, selfishness. There are plenty of minerals in the world, we have only just begun to discover the treasures of this old earth, and people have been quarreling until oil and coal have become international questions, about which nations go to war, or threaten to go to war. Hunger is a symptom that there is something wrong with man.

THE while I listened came a word—
I knew not whence, I could not see—
But when my waiting spirit heard,
I cried, "Lord, here am I, send me!"

For in that word was all contained—
The Master's wish, the servant's joy,
Worth of the prize to be attained,
And sweetness of the time's employ.
I turned and went—along the way
That word was food and air and light;
I feasted on it all the day,
And rested on it all the night.

I wondered; but when soon I came
To where the word complete must be,
I called my wonder by its name;
For lo! the word I sought was He!

—Phillips Brooks.

As for suffering, I venture to say that two-thirds of the suffering of humanity might be eliminated if men came to Jesus and took his yoke upon them and learned of him, and lived chaste and natural lives, not turning night into day, and not wearing themselves out in the pursuit of money or pleasure.

He began to upbraid the city in which most of his mighty works were done because they repented not. There was the point.

It is quite obvious that the gospel of the life and death and resurrection of our Lord is not a soothing thing, but a great moral challenge and a great spiritual appeal. And the people in Capernaum had refused to repent.

What is it to repent? It is a great word. Whether we take it in Greek or Latin, mind is in it. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind." To repent is really to re-think, and the people at Capernaum had refused to think.

The great need of the day is to rethink God, and man, and sin, and the purpose of human life.

We talk about the love of God. Why should God love you? What right have you to love him? What is his love? Is it mere soft sentiment? Is it not a spiritual and righteous passion to make men like himself.

Why did God become man? Why did Jesus Christ die? Do you think anybody has ever understood why Jesus Christ died? Not merely to reveal the love of God, his benevolence, to show the good nature of God. He died to redeem us from iniquity; he died the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God.

Why should God care? We assume things, we do not look into them. Why should God care about me, with sixteen hundred millions of people to think about in this world, and nobody knows how many millions of worlds to govern?

Why Should God Care?

Why should he care whether I tell a lie or speak the truth? Why should he care whether or not I break my heart?

It is quite obvious that a great part of the ministry and word of our Lord was to startle men into thinking. Some friends of mine are very much disturbed about modern thought. I am not in the least. I am disturbed about the modern want of thought. If only a man is thinking I do not care how wrongly he is thinking. Let him go on thinking. It is the men who do not think who trouble me, dancing all night, going from one excitement to another. They put their thinking out to be done for them; they let the Daily Mail do it. It is not thinking, it is an appeal to prejudice and ignorance. It is re-thinking that is needed. That is what repentance means, re-thinking. Capernaum had not repented and had not thought; it had persisted in its own ways.

It is the business of the pulpit to make men think, not merely to stir their emotions.

What is the intellectual content of the gospel? What is the gospel of the divine Fatherhood? Not an assurance of God's protection and care, but an assertion of God's authority. If you want to know what fatherhood meant look at our Lord. He never for a moment questioned or deviated by a hair's breadth from the will of his Father. It was the light of all his seeing.

What are you going to do with this challenge and this appeal?

Nothing?

That is what Capernaum did.

The sin of doing nothing is pilloried in the Old Testament and in the New. Dives did nothing and he went to hell. He did nothing for Lazarus. He thought that was a divine appointment. The people who went away into shame and darkness had done nothing.

Here is a text for you to preach from: "What shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel?" Do you see its implications? The gospel is something

The First News by Letter Since Japanese Disaster

29 Sanai-Cho, Ushigome, Tokyo
Sept. 9, 1923

Dear Friends:—

I will begin a general letter, but do not know when it will be finished, much less when or how it will go to you. I shall not attempt to give general descriptions as the press is doing that for you and exceptionally well, I think. Suffice to say that you will read no description of the situation that gives it too bad. Words will not suffice to tell the story. If you want pictures, go to your copy of Danté's "Inferno."

We did not know anything at Sendai Beach until Sunday. We did not dream it was like this, of course. One man set out for Tokyo on other business but was sent back. Monday morning word came from the government railway officials that they would not transport us to Tokyo in any case; so we should all remain quietly where we were till we had word from them. But Tuesday Holtom of our mission and a Y. M. C. A. man were sent on to get down if possible to learn if Gressitt and others had survived. I expected to stay till they sent work back. But at daylight a telegram came( brought part way by refugees and sent on from there) that our cook's son was dead. He felt he must go to his wife; but he is old and feeble and we doubted if he could get through alone. Anyway I felt that it was urgent that I get back to help rally our forces; so I came along. We took nothing but food and water and a coat in case we had to camp in the rain outdoors. We kept pretty well to schedule till we got within fifty miles of Tokyo. Several times during the night the guards, who were everywhere, stopped the train and searched for bombers. Two or three times there were wild chases in the darkness and the train guard said two were actually captured under our car. I do not vouch for the truth of this.

Frantic Fugitives

Stations were crowded with frantic folks waiting the coming of the refugee trains hoping their folks might come. This was throughout the night and in heavy rain. The trains were beyond description. Folks were riding on the front and sides of the engine, crowds on top of the coal car, on the bumpers, between cars, on top of cars, on the steps, everywhere. Many must have fallen off and been killed; any means to escape from the hell of Tokyo. At many stations relief companies were on the platforms with water and food.

About twenty miles from Tokyo we were told that our train could go no farther; but fortunately that was changed and we were among the very few that finally rode well down toward Tokyo. We were put off in the morning—I do not know what time as I had no watch with me—around seven or a little after I guess. We hiked from then till about noon when we arrived here safely, and tired we were too. The wire about Shige San, the cook's son, read "at the point of death," which I knew was an oriental way of saying killed or dead. We inquired immediately about him. He was killed by a falling wall at the government printing bureau, where he worked and most of the body burned up. The rest was cremated, and I have arranged for a little funeral at Yotsuya Church when conditions permit.

I have looked up a few foreign friends, all of whom had come through safely. I have been to the embassy twice, which is now at the Imperial Hotel, one of the few buildings that are useable. As the force there urged it, I was inoculated against typhoid fever and have my directions as to coming next time. I met a number of friends there, many of whom have wonderful adventures to tell. Gressitt had the narrowest escape: He was seeing a friend off on the "Empress of Australia;" it was two minutes of twelve, the streamers were flying and the gang-plank up ready for the noon gun for the boat to start. He finally was saved aboard the vessel.

All our missionaries escaped. Two of the native teachers of the Mabie Memorial School and one servant were killed in the building; some were injured, but none very seriously as far as I have heard. Miss Ishihara, head of the kindergarten training school, was not heard from for some time. She was at Zushi near Kamakura and was injured some. Pastor Bakajima and his family nearly perished in the fire but escaped to safety with barely enough on their backs to cover them. Fujii of the Tabernacle was in a nearby barber shop at the time; the house fell in the first quake and he was pinned in so that he could not escape; then the next big shake lifted things enough for him to crawl out and flee. Miss Carpenter was in the third story of the former Sarah Curtis Girls' School at Suruga Dai. It seemed that it must collapse but they could not walk, try as they would. Their was one of the first parts of the city to burn. They (she and five Japanese women) spent Saturday night in Ueno Park. Early Sunday morning they were driven from there by fire, and fled to Takinogawa on the north of Tokyo. Tuesday she heard that this place was standing and so made her way here and is living here—staying might be better.

In Tokyo besides the Sarah Curtis Girls' School, the Wynd and Holtom families lost everything; the Tabernacle was burned but the reinforced concrete part—outside walls, floors, roof and stairs—seems not seriously injured. It has not yet been examined by an expert. The Shiba, Kyobashi and Fukagawa churches were burned completely. Yotsuya church stands and was used today. The church people reported that it was injured very little, but when I examined it I was convinced that it will probably be condemned and must be torn down. I hope I am mistaken in this. Immanuel Church is standing and not badly damaged. Miss Ryder's dormitory for girls is not hopelessly damaged. If the repairs could be done now it would not cost a large sum, I think. Axling's house fared wonderfully well, so that he thinks it will not even leak badly. The Waseda buildings fared better than many. Hovey Memorial Dormitory was only slightly damaged. The upper part of the tower of Scott Hall fell through the auditorium into the dining-room in the basement. Benninghoff has consulted one of the Waseda architects as to what ought to be done to save the building. The classroom end is undamaged. I have not seen the kindergarten training school buildings, though they stand; reports from folks with no experience in building say they are not so badly injured. Our buildings here all stand. The neighbor's house fell on our dormitory kitchen but it still survives. The end of the school building towards the dormitory was in precarious condition but we have built up under it so that it seems safe now. All roofs were wrecked. Fortunately it has not rained so we have shifted things around and patched up temporary roofs over small sections where we hope to keep some things dry. This evening while I have been writing this page we have had a short shower and already it has wet through in every room. One more day would have given us a little place of refuge. Much of our stuff we have moved to the front porch where it seems it may keep dry as that has a sheet iron roof not badly damaged. I trust it will not be stolen from there. The trunks in the attic I made into one pile and covered over but that will not amount to much in a big storm. September is the time of heaviest rain in the year in Tokyo. It is a mercy we have escaped so far. I estimate that $20,000 to $40,000 would have to be put into these buildings to repair them so tha

Where Is Heaven?

WHERE is heaven? Is it not
Just a friendly garden plot,
Walled with stone and roofed with sun,
Where the days pass one by one,
Not too fast and not too slow,
Looking backward as they go
At the beauties left behind
To transport the pensive mind.

Does not heaven begin that day.
When the eager heart can say,
Surely God is in this place,
I have seen him face to face
In the loveliness of flowers,
In the service of the showers.
And his voice has talked to me
In the sunlit apple tree.

we can go on in them even for a few years.

Travel is next to impossible anywhere in this part of Japan. Even those in Tokyo can hardly meet. A few sections have street cars since yesterday. People are carried free. But one could not hope to ride without fighting for a place and might then be hanging on outside. People do this at their own risk and the cars jump along lively when they do get under way and do not stop often. It is the only way they can do anything with the crowd.

In the past I have criticized the military machine in Japan, but one is thankful for it today. The army and navy are everywhere, doing everything. We meet men with fixed bayonets everywhere, but as they save us from anarchists and escaped criminals we are thankful for their protection. Army trucks hustle food, tents and a thousand other things all over town. Army engineers are up the electric light poles getting us lights again. Most of Tokyo has light tonight, though our place is still dark. Considerable sections already have city water, probably due to the help of army engineers.

Yokohama was much worse than Tokyo. All our property in Yokohama is completely gone except the Mary Colby Girls' School and the Kanagawa Church. I fear the school is so damaged that it cannot be used. I have no reports from any one that has seen it; so have only the information that it is standing. The Gressitts, Fishers, Toppings and Covells were entirely burned out. I have no eye witness account as to the Covells but that section is said to be all gone. Early reports were that Yokohama would never be rebuilt, perhaps could not be on the same site; but the leaders are rallying and an effort will be made to restore the city.

Rain! Rain!

Monday morning: The weather man predicted fair weather for the next two or three days, but it began to rain about eight or nine last evening and has been at it off and on ever since. I was hoping for one or two more good days. We shifted things still more so as to keep them dry if possible, and I finally turned in between eleven and twelve, but not for much sleep. At two this morning I took off all the paper on the ceiling of my room, as it was falling from the rain. One big, muddy strip fell on my bed, which convinced me it was time to get busy. I managed however to keep my bed nearly dry, but if it continues to rain as it seems likely to do that room is a vain shelter. I have not had courage to look at the attic but it will be a sea of mud, if it is not already. But we take such things lightly in Tokyo now-a-days. Life itself when it is by ones or twos does not seem as if it could ever call for headlines.

Mails are collected from time to time from postoffices but there is no promise as to when they will go to their destination. We do not have deliveries at all. The only sure way to get a message through is by messenger as in the ancient world.

We are getting on wonderfully well in this scar that was Tokyo. It is almost a miracle that our circle is unbroken. Had the calamity come a week later many missionaries would have been killed or injured. It is a problem where all our folks can live through the cold weather. But we are setting our faces to the future though we cannot yet see far ahead.

Steadfastly yours,
Charles B. Tenny.

State Conventions Gather

North Dakota Convention

By Fred E. Stockton

Baptists of North Dakota gathered at Fargo, Oct. 3-7 to observe the fortieth anniversary of the work of the convention. The weather was ideal. Many drove long distances by automobile. The welcome extended by the three Fargo Baptist churches was most cordial. The fellowship was enjoyable and a spirit of harmony prevailed throughout the sessions. The program was never better and the spirit of optimism and consecration grew from day to day. The registered attendance of visitors and delegates was above 200. Several factors contributed to make the fortieth anniversary an outstanding event in the Baptist history of North Dakota.

Elijah Terry

Special attention was given this year to the life and service of Elijah S. Terry, the first Baptist and the first Protestant missionary in Dakota territory, who was massacred by Indians at Walhalla, N. D., June 28, 1852. (An account of this with interesting pictures appeared in The Baptist of Sept. 22). An oil portrait of the martyred missionary was unveiled by R. B. Griffith, president of the convention. Duane Squires, of Grand Forks, delivered the presentation oration. The portrait is to be hung in the memorial auditorium of the Roger Williams National Baptist Church in Washington, D. C. Prof. Benjamin S. Terry of Chicago, nephew of the martyred missionary, gave an interesting address in tracing the development of Baptist work across the continent from New Jersey to the Northwest, as it pertained to the ancestors and life of Elijah Terry. During the convention, a new colportage automobile, purchased by North Dakota Baptists, to be used by Colporter-missionary Rev. Philip E. Nystrom west of the Missouri river, was formally dedicated as the "Elijah Terry Memorial Gospel Car."

Special attention was also given to the development of Baptist work in North Dakota during the past forty years. Frank D. Hall, Fargo, one of the Baptist pioneers of the state, presented a paper setting forth matter of historical interest during the past four decades. Ole Larson gave a brief account of the history of the Norwegian Conference, and L. M. Stolberg, a similar account of the Swedish Conference. These papers will be preserved for their historical value in coming generations.

Bible and Missionary Conference

The convention this year combined in its program the work of the Bible and missionary conferences that are being held throughout the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention A Bible exposition was given each morning by various pastors of the state. W. O. Lewis, European representative of the Foreign Mission Society, and Mrs. Anna M. Salquist of West China, brought the convention reports of present conditions in Europe and China. Peter C. Wright, associate secretary of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board, conducted the conference on the program of activities for the present year. Doctor Wright also presented the work of the board he represents, and gave a view of the work and opportunities of the denomination today.

Laymen

The work of our laymen was given special emphasis on the program this year. R. O. Jasperson, executive secretary of the Council of Northern Baptist Laymen, and Judge Fred W. Freeman, of Denver, made addresses, calling the men of the denomination to renewed consecration and activity. The laymen's supper, attended by fifty men, was held Saturday evening. An effort will be made to secure a large delegation of laymen to attend the Milwaukee convention next summer.

Sunday Schools

The work of the Sunday school was cared for by Dr. Thomas S. Young, who presented the value of the daily vacation Bible school and week-day religious education. The young people's special session was held Sunday afternoon. O. S. Jacobson of Bismarck, state president of the Swedish young people, presided. Doctors Young and Best were speakers on this occasion. Miss Katherine Pratt, of Grand Forks, was elected president of the state B. Y. P. U. for the coming year.

The convention banquet was more largely attended than those of former years. More than 200 were present. Judge Freeman was the guest of honor. Pres. Fred G. Boughton of South Dakota represented Sioux Falls College. The Northwestern Hospital Association was represented by Rev. J. F. Saunders and George Earl, M. D., both of St. Paul, Minn. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. E. Monnes, pastor of the Powers Lake Church.

The Past Year

Supt. Fred E. Stockton in his annual report reviewed the work of the past year. Thirty-eight workers and missionary pastors have been on the convention pay-roll since the last meeting of the convention. The convention has paid one-half of the total of its New World Movement pledges. Evangelism has been emphasized during the past year. There have been many additions to the churches. Special attention has also been given to church edifice work. Three new churches are now ready for dedication—Park River, Drayton and Roseglen.

Officers Elected

R. B. Griffith, Grand Forks, who has served the convention for fourteen years as president, ten of which have been consecutive, asked to be relieved this year. The convention gave expression to its appreciation for the splendid leadership of Mr. Griffith, and also presented him with a bouquet of American Beauty roses. George B. Newcomb of Bismarck, superintendent of the North Dakota Humane and Society for the Friendless, was unanimously chosen to succeed Mr. Griffith. Frank D. Hall of Fargo has served the convention for the past six years as recording secretary. Upon his request another nomination was presented and L. R. Johnson of Bismarck, was elected to this office. Mr. S. C. Hendrickson of Grand Forks, was re-elected for the tenth year as treasurer. F. E. Stockton, who has served the convention for nearly four years, was re-elected for an indefinite period of years. H. R. Best, of Fargo, was elected president of the state pastors' conference. Jamestown was chosen as the place for the convention meeting next year.

The New Hampshire Convention

By W. G. Hubbard

The New Hampshire anniversaries were held in Concord, Oct. 1-3 with the Pleasant Street Church, whose pastor elect, Everett A. Rockwell was ordained the previous evening. The meetings included the Ministers' Conference, the Woman's Mission Society, the Historical Society and the state convention proper. The sessions were so full that the annual sermon was postponed and then finally omitted because of lack of time. The question of an annual sermon for next year was left to the program committee with the request that the preacher, if any, shall be W. W. Harris who had been invited to speak this year. Hon. C. M. Collins presided at the convention sessions.

The opening address of the week was delivered at the banquet, Monday evening, by Dr. Woodman Bradbury of Newton, on "God Our Ally." Speakers other than state pastors were N. C. Fetter, student pastor First Church, Boston; F. J. Peters of Cuba; W. E. Chalmers of Philadelphia; Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer of the Woman's Home Mission Society; Charles L. Littlefield of Providence; C. N. Arbuckle of New Center Church; R. L. Webb of the Northern Baptist Education Society; Professor English of Newton; Miss Dorothy Dowell of the Philippines; J. H. Robbins of the Anti-saloon League; R. J. Blair, C. E. field worker; and Herbert S. Johnson of Boston. A vote was passed appointing Jonathan S. Lewis delegate to the Washington Citizenship Conference to consider the present status of the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, and appropriating money for his expenses.

Information was presented showing that the convention treasury has been depleted the past year by the diversion of a part of its income through the workings of the present scheme of cooperation with other states in the Northern Convention. A resolution was passed which, it is hoped, will avert this danger in the future. The report of the board showed a good year. Col. Richard C. Goodell was elected president; vice-pres., John Manter and C. W. Tobey; secy., D. S. Jenks; treas., L. E. Staples.

Mr. Staples presented the convention a copy of the original New Hampshire Declaration of Faith, 1833, which he had secured from J. B. Lemon of Greenfield, Mass. In connection with this gift, the fact was brought out that what is commonly called the New Hampshire Confession is not the original declaration but is a revision by its author in 1853 on his own authority when he had left the state and was connected with the American Baptist Publication Society. However, when an additional thirty years had passed and the convention had requested its board to publish copies for sale, it was the revision of 1853 which was then published. The preface to this edition bears both dates, 1833 and 1883, and it nowhere indicates that the persons who had the matter in charge were at all aware that they were not using the original form. Probably some of them did know of the difference but evidently considered it a matter of comparatively little consequence. Indeed, the chief purpose of publishing the original declaration in 1833 seems to have been to save each individual church the expense of printing a separate confession of its own as had heretofore been the custom. Of course, questions as to the best form of statement necessarily arose as soon as the direct work of constructing the confession began. Brethren in other states who have been interested in the New Hampshire Declaration and who have read numerous articles concerning it some time ago, may be glad to have this plain statement.

Minnesota Convention

By F. H. Fahringer

An enthusiastic crowd of Minnesota Baptists assembled in the new Fourth Church, Minneapolis, for the sixty-fourth annual state convention, Oct. 8-10. Two hundred of the 416 people registered were delegates. Every session was well attended, the evening meetings overflowing.

The convention approved unanimously the future plans of the denomination to be followed out after the close of the New World Movement. It voted to support heartily the proposed new $1,000,000 Baptist hospital to be erected by the Northwest Baptist Hospital Association in the Midway district between St. Paul and Minneapolis, to which project the business men of the Midway of other denominations have already subscribed $333,000, contingent upon the Baptists of all nationalities of the Northwest raising the balance of the money.

R. O. Jasperson gave the opening address to 450 men at the laymen's banquet Monday evening, explaining the function of the Board of Promotion with reference to collecting funds for the seven organizations of our denomination, and pledging the men to support the New World Movement. He emphasized the necessity on the part of the laymen of "telling the story," instead of letting the pastors exclusively do that important work. He urged the men to attend the Northern Baptist Convention at Milwaukee next spring.

Following the laymen's banquet, Dr. P. C. Wright gave an address on the world situation, citing the achievements of our denomination during the past four years. He also spoke of the present year's program of finishing up the New World Movement by meeting our obligations for the current year, paying the denominational debts and underdrawings, and thus closing up the work with a victory.

The Call of the Hour

In preaching the annual sermon of the convention Monday evening, Dr. John Earl, pastor of the First Church, St Paul, said, "The call of the hour, in my judgment, is the call to the conquest of fear through the courage of faith. We fear matter, maladies, and each other. There is no conflict between science and religion because science begins in faith and reaches its conclusions in faith. The logical results of these fears are persecutions and wars. Every war that was ever started was started by the fear of one another. Fear lies at the bottom of all race antipathies. Anything that appeals to fear will never live. The theological turmoil is due to the fact that the sympathetic nervous system is being used with negative emotions. We Baptists, of all people in the world should be the last people to bind faith up in a syllogism."

On Tuesday morning, Dr. W. O. Lewis, our special representative in Europe, gave an account of Baptist work in Europe, of his work in distributing clothing to 30,000 Russians and of Baptist progress in Sweden, the Baltic states, Esthonia, and Czecho-Slovakia.

Dr. W. S. Abernethy delivered an address Tuesday afternoon, on "Wanted—A Stabilizer." He began with, "I have wandered around the world for twenty-seven years. Now I have returned home. On the spot where I stand there used to be a hen coop, and right over there a strawberry patch which I used to weed." The Fourth Church in which the convention was held was the precise site of Doctor Abernethy's birthplace. He said, "Things will not be right until the spirit of Christ is exemplified in the daily lives of the people. Jesus Christ is the only remedy. He has been tried only in spots and spasmodically. Make it possible for the power of Jesus Christ to be connected with the machinery we have today."

Rev. F. C. Rideout, chaplain U. S. Army at Fort Snelling, delivered addresses on the subjects: "Rebuilding Broken Altars" and "Man Making," the close of the morning sessions.

Embryo Patriots

Embryo patriots, these eager children id young folk of our Sunday schools.
espect for law, love for country, love r all people, they must of necessity eathe it now, lest lawlessness prevail, d masked bands of night raiders and e irresponsible mob law of hate super-de law and justice and right. Let ilstrations begin close at home: Does t the true patriot respect his own city dinances and has he not respect for affic regulations when the eagle eyes the traffic officer are both on duty ewhere? Is not the reckless violator traffic laws who would pose as a true triot already caught? How long does take the heavenly recorders to make entry? Did the Master say, "Render erefore unto Caesar the things that are esar's; and unto God the things that e God's"?

In the Sunday school we inculcate the irit of love; without this love patriot-in is like the fine-looking English walt that I picked up the other day. A e-looking shell it was, but telltale lles revealed the fact that a hungry ie jay had extracted all the meat.
ithout the teachings of Christianity the at of patriotism is extracted, leaving ly the shell of eloquent words—spreadgle orations, etc.—instead of the meat
"Thou shalt love they neighbor as rself."

If Sam Jones is in the employ of Dean Smith—Smith's Hardware Emporin—and a city ordinance is enacted that nings must be a certain distance from sidewalk, does not Sam at once make ntal note of the deacon's attitude to-rd the law? If he says cheerfully,
Well, Sam, there is a new ordinance in erence to height of awnings. Must the awning man and have our awnraised," why, that is a good patriot-n pointer for Sam. On the contrary, agine the deacon saying, "Don't be-re they will enforce that ordinance; I l take a chance." In that case might Sam "take a chance" and leave his rals hanging dangerously near the ewalk of sin because of the example him? Sin and virtue are alike in one pect, they spring from small begin-gs—are they not as seed sown in hun soil?

neighbor's little girl went to my k fence and shouted, in a very impoand irritating manner, to some Mex-n children who lived under the hill. I k her to task for her rudeness, say-
, "I cannot have you shouting at my nds in that manner." Her eyes op-d so widely that I could hardly keep face straight as she said, with child-emphasis, "Are they your friends?" re is one of the first lessons of true riotism, "Love toward all; malice tod none."

Wise was the day-school teacher who noticed a tendency to shun the timid little Mexican girl who had appeared at the school. Did she scold, preach, or threaten? No, at closing time she dismissed the Mexican girl and kept the other girls for a few moments. Then she smiled sweetly upon them and spoke of the little stranger and how certain she was that her girls would try to make the lone Mexican girl happy and contented in school. How powerful is suggestion, many times; the next day the girls were actually vying with each other in kindness although the day before they had only looked askance at the stranger. Is not an ounce of suggestion often better than a pound of preaching?—George W. Tuttle in Sunday School Worker.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 4

WORLD-WIDE PROHIBITION—WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY

Lesson: Psalm 101:1-8; Proverbs 23:29-35

Golden Text: I will set no base thing before mine eyes: Psalm 101:3.

Introductory

The psalm of the lesson is the prayer of a king, probably David. In it he states his purpose as to the conduct of his own life and the manner of servants whom he will choose. The pungent proverbs out of the book of that name, perhaps written by Solomon, present in unsurpassable pictures the beauty and temptation of the wine and the utter woe to which its use will bring men.

The Lesson

1. Slander, pride, deceit, falsehood—these does the king abhor. He will have about him none who practice such sins, but will destroy them. The faithful, "he that walketh in a perfect way," they shall dwell with him and minister unto him. Thus speaks the king of old—thus speak all men today of kingly minds.

2. Note the psychological approach by the man of wisdom: "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath complaining? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?" Not a lovely picture that he presents by these interrogations, but an impressive one, one which no man would desire to have as typical of himself. That is, however, a matter of individual choice. Such are they who tarry long at the wine, who go to seek out mixed wine. Then comes the injunction, the picture of the wine in its redness and brilliance, and the dire results of yielding to a temptation to partake—"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. Thine eyes shall behold strange things, and they heart shall utter perverse things." But upon awakening the man who has thus far gone on the path of drunkenness, does not realize the beast he has become; his higher nature has become dulled almost to insensibility—his first step is to "seek it yet again" and once more become a debased thing.

To Remember

1. "I will seek it yet again" is the saddest part of the sad picture—a man enchained by an evil habit. 2. Habits are the hardest things in the world to break, therefore form only good ones. 3. It is easy to repeat tomorrow what you do today and easier to repeat next day what you do tomorrow. 4. We have begun to realize something of the blessings of prohibition; but this is not the time to rest at our ease; the fight is not yet won.

The Home Of The Brave

Chapter VII. Prisms

IT was really Veronica who settled the whole question about 281 Mansion Avenue, when she came unexpectedly for a second tea-drinking. Patricia was out. She was always out! Now that the novelty of the old homestead had worn away she was tiring of the high-ceilinged rooms, the old black marble mantlepieces and the heirlooms. She was restless, and amazed at her own changeableness, especially since it was to the hitherto indifferent Richard that the ancestral sticks and stones had become so precious.

"Actually, I am happier here than in France," he said at luncheon, the day of Veronica's approaching visit.

"You are amazing!" his sister sighed. "We could hardly drag you across the Atlantic from your rose-gardens and your old Paulette and Pierre. But now that you're here in the squalor of a howling wilderness of immigrants, you're blissfully contented. You make a new friend a day. You're impossible!"

"I know it," he sighed contritely—but contentedly. "You see, I've just discovered that I'm a person of importance, that there's a job all ready cut out for me, and for a fellow who's idled away forty years of life that's a big find. I'm going to live in this old house all the remaining years of my life."

"Well, I'm not!" Patricia Bruce ejaculated. "In this neighborhood, Ricky! You can't, you simply can't. I must have had rose-colored glasses to think it could be possible. You certainly shan't stay here alone, and I certainly won't stay with you; so the sooner you get that notion out of your head the better."

"I have such a peculiar head," he smiled, whimsically.

She left him that afternoon, and he spent the hours in a tour of inspection, the first he had made with a special new idea he had suddenly conceived. He was amazed and delighted at the things he discovered, but the delight was curiously half-hearted: "I'd hoped to have Pat to help me swing the thing!" he caught himself thinking at every turn.

It was into this state of mind that Veronica came walking.

"Miss Brave is out," Hawkins had said, adding, with an indulgent eye, "but Mr. Bruce is 'ere."

She walked in.

"Where is he?" she asked.

Hawkins cleared his throat apologetically. "Well I couldn't say for certain, Miss, but 'e's been making a tour of hinspection, as you might say, and the last 'eard of 'im, 'e was in the hattics."

Veronica laughed. "I know those 'hattics,'" she nodded. "I'll run up and find him."

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"Ricky, oh Ricky," she called, when the fourth floor stairs were reached.

"Here!" he called. "Who is it?"

"C'est moi!" she answered, starting up the last steep flight to the old garret full of the most fascinating memories of her childhood.

Richard Brave was delighted to see her. "My dear Very, this is absolutely perfect of you. Do I or don't I, kiss you nowadays?"

Very lifted her veil. "Dear me, Ricky, why so polite? It's the fashion nowadays to take things, you know."

He took it. Her cool young cheek was just near enough. After all, he had helped bring her up, and she undoubtedly considered him a grandfather. It was this latter notion which colored his exposition of the situation between Patricia and himself.

"She abhors the whole place," he said, "and I love it. I love every stick and stone. I love every neighbor. I love every memory of every ancestor. But Patricia assures me that if I stay I'll be a flat failure. She thinks it's absurd—"

"Pat," said the young fresh voice through the gloom of the garret, "is an unmitigated nuisance. You make me sick, Ricky, indeed you do. Why in the world should you want Pat to continue to hang around? She'd be in the way every minute, she'd snub the lady neighbors and frighten the child-neighbors and abhor the gentlemen-neighbors. Pat's a Grand Lady and she can't forget it. What you want to find is some quiet, lively, friendly, open-minded, affectionate, beguiling, competent, all-round young woman to live here and run a sort of a social center for you. I know the very person!"

Ricky sat down on a trunk. "I'm frightened to pieces of those competent trained girls, Very. She wouldn't approve of me."

"She'd adore you," Veronica said tensely. "She'd follow you blindly through all the amazing adventures of running a Home of The Brave in the Land of The Free. She'd be a pillar and a pillow both. She wouldn't be so ultra-competent that you'd dread her. Oh, she'd suit. That kind of person realizes they have to!"

"But see here, Very, if I'm to be alone here I couldn't very well ask her to live here, too."

"Why not?" Very inquired. "It's a foregone conclusion that you'd marry her. Young, charming, competent, devoted to you, bored to death with everything else in life, why Ricky she'd gobble you up in the twinkling of an eye at your first proposal. She's been just waiting around for this chance, believe me!"

"Good gracious!" cried the startled man, "do you mean to tell me you've engaged her?"

"Oh, my, no," said Very in a suddenly small tired voice, "I thought you'd better do your own engaging, Ricky; but I prevailed on the creature to call on you and cry up her good points! You see, this is the kind of job she's always longed to tackle. And, of course, with you thrown in—"

Ricky was tremendously uneasy. "Very, are you or aren't you, joking, my dear? And when is this paragon going to pay her call?"

There was a curious silence. "She's here now," Very answered.

"She is! Then we mustn't keep her waiting—"

"No—o," Very whispered.

"Come on, my dear, let's go down and take a look at her."

Very led the way. The nearer they came to the library the slower she walked. Ricky, on the other hand, forged ahead. He wanted the absurd situation ended. He wanted this interfering, impossible applicant ejected. He swung open the library door and stalked in ahead of Veronica, the picture of dignity and business-like haste. The room was empty.

"Where is this young woman?" he inquired, looking over his shoulder.

Veronica breathlessly leaned against the closed door. "She's—here!" she whispered, clasping and unclasping her hands.

Richard Brave looked around the room. Then his eyes rested on Veronica—what made her so strangely breathless? Confused?

Artist Whim

BY CHARLES WHARTON STORK

YOU want me to be a rectangle
Of smooth plate glass,
Through which the outside world
Will print itself with undisturbed exactness.
But the trouble is, my friend,
I'm a prism,
Obscuring, distorting, topsyturvying
Your nice old commonplace world,
Splintering the light of fact and scattering it.
In sunlit gleams of many tinted spray.

—The Bookman.

"Here?" he asked, blankly.

"Oh Ricky, Ricky," she panted, "you dear old innocent!" And she clung to his coat sleeve desperately. "I—I—I—"

"My dear!" he gasped, looking at her with amazement, while all the grandfather in him died a sudden and entirely painless death. Did she mean.....?

She did!

Quite a while later she apologized for doing it. "Especially as it isn't Leap Year. But I couldn't help seeing from the way you've looked at me—"

"Naturally!" he sighed, with a contentment that transformed him.

"You see," said Veronica, sipping the tea brought in by the unsuspecting Hawkins, "you and I aren't panes of glass, Ricky, we're prisms; We reflect a dozen aspects of life, we're ablaze with the great white light that God only puts in a very few people. It seems to me that we ought to make quite a nice—chandelier!"

It was Patricia's entrance which stopped his ecstatic answer.

When the Great Balolo Came Up on Sunday

YOU do not know what 'balolo' means, of course, but if you lived in the Fiji Islands you would smack your lips at the very mention of the sound and wish with all your little Fiji heart that it was the "Little Balolo" in October or the "Great Balolo" in November, the only two days in the entire year when balolo ever come up to view!

For the balolo is a small sea-worm, long and thin, rather like the vermicelli which you mother cooks for you occasionally. Some balolo are fully a yard long, other about an inch. The worm has a pointed body and many legs, and lives in the deep sea near the Fiji Islands, which are in the ( ? ) Ocean—can you tell the name of that ocean? Of all curious creatures these are the "curiousest" as Alice in Wonderland might say, for they only come to the surface of the water twice in the whole year: in October just a few appear, so the Fiji Islanders call it the Little Balolo; they seem to know exactly when the worms are due by certain calculations about the position of the stars and the full moon. After that one day in October no more balolo are seen until some time between the twentieth and twenty-fifth of November, when the worms rise to the surface in such countless myriads that even "Great Balolo" hardly seems to describe the sight of the whole sea, to the depth of several inches, simply alive with these red, green, and brown creatures, which form one wriggling writhing mass and are pursued by shoals of fish of all sizes. For the fish are eager to share the feast with the islanders!

As for these islanders, they are the merriest persons you ever saw, for it is the one great wild exciting day of the year, and is looked forward to from one November to the next by everybody. For at midnight the people go out in their canoes and anxiously await the appearance of the first worms. There is a great struggle to secure these first ones which herald the appearance of untold myriads. For several hours there is the jolliest sport while every one bails up worms, trying to see who can fill his canoe the quickest.

Talk about noise! Scrambling! Excitement! And "don't rock the boat!" On that one day nobody thinks of anything but worms, for—would you believe it?—at daybreak these mysterious creatures with one accord sink down to their old home in the sea until by the moment of sunrise not a single worm is to be seen on the surface of the water; nor will another be seen for twelve entire months, when, true to its own peculiar festival, the balolo will surely return. Never, in the history of the oldest Fiji Islander, has the balolo failed to keep its date with the high tide of the full moon in November.

When the worms have disappeared, the islanders row back to shore, wrap their balolo in breadfruit leaves, cook them in ovens dug on the beach, and have a great feast. So enormous is the quantity caught that the supply generally lasts for several days, for they can be warmed up for new meals, and basketsful are often sent to friends who live inland.

Perhaps the white people do not appreciate this dainty, since all of us are rather prejudiced against worms as food, but when eaten with bread and butter it is said to be a very pleasant dish, rather like spinach with the flavor of the sea.

Now for two years it just happened that the full-moon tide occurred on Sunday morning, and of course the wicked little worms swarmed up to the surface of the water with their usual regularity. But—! But—! But—!

There had been missionaries at work in the Fiji Islands for years, and the people had gradually given up their savagery and barbarity to adopt the beautiful Christian customs which filled life so much fuller than they had dreamed possible. And one of the most precious of these customs was the keeping of Sunday. At that time there were 117,870 persons on the Fiji Islands, 100,864 of whom were Christians. So on that Sunday morning in the first year when the worms came up not a Christian was to be seen out in a canoe! Not one. The jolliness went on without them, the feasting on the beach had no Christians present! The second year the same thing happened, and you can imagine what a real thing their new religion was to these islanders to be willing to sacrifice their highly valued harvest of the sea in order to keep the Lord's Day holy.

Yet once upon a time an English earl who did not believe in God went to the Fiji Islands. He smiled in a superior manner when he saw the Christian natives so devoted to the Saviour.

"You are a great chief," he said to one of them, "it is really a pity that you have been so foolish as to listen to your missionaries. Here I am, I don't believe in God."

The old chief's eyes flashed as he answered: "Do you see that great stone over there? On that stone we used to smash the heads of our human victims to death. Do you see that native oven over there? In that oven we used to roast human bodies for our great heathen feasts. Now, if it hadn't been for our good missionaries, and the dear old Book, and the love of Jesus Christ which has changed us from savages into God's children you would never leave this spot alive. You had better thank God for the gospel; for without it here we should have killed you, roasting you in yonder oven and feasting upon your body in no time."

"Ah!" said the English earl. He, too, was impressed by the wonders which Christianity works in untamed heathen hearts.

We keep a cat to catch a mouse,

Minnesota Convention

The young people's banquet on Tuesday evening was attended by 350 young people to consider the prospects "For a Greater Summer Assembly at Mound."

Miss Alice Brimson of Chicago, Christian Americanization secretary, in her address asked women to obey the call "Go ye into all the world," by ministering to the women of all the world who are in our midst. Miss Anna Salquist, for twenty-six years missionary to China, told of "Baptist Opportunities in West China."

At the special conference on evangelism for pastors, Dr. H. F. Stilwell spoke on "What Kind of Evangelism Shall We Present?," followed by a discussion. Many pastors agreed to hold evangelistic meetings this fall and through the year.

On Wednesday evening Dr. Frank L. Peterson gave a report of the Stockholm Convention. The climax of the convention was in Doctor Padelford's address on the religious educational work of our denomination.

Officers for ensuing year are: Pres., Mr. F. K. Pratt, Minneapolis; vice pres., G. A. Hagstrom, St. Paul, H. C. Hansen, Minneapolis, Mrs. George E. Young, Minneapolis; rec. sec., Arthur F. Carlton; treas., J. A. Ridgeway, Minneapolis.

Young People's Work

New General Secretary of B. Y. P. U. of A.

The Baptist young people of this continent have called to one of their places of most responsible leadership, a young layman who rejoices in the work that his Master has given him to do. Mr. Edwin Phelps has been unanimously chosen by the executive committee of the board of managers of the Baptist Young People's Union of America as its general secretary to succeed Dr. James Asa White. Seldom has the hand of God been more evident in preparing one of his servants for a special task.

Edwin Phelps was born in Grand Rapids, Mich., in November, 1884, but the nature of his father's work meant many shifts during his boyhood from one part of the country to another so that all chance of provincialism was nipped in the budding years of his life. Mr. Phelps spent one year in Tulane University, New Orleans, and two more in engineering in Lewis Institute, Chicago; but early in his twenties he decided for the law, and identified himself with Rummler and Rummler, patent lawyers of Chicago, with which firm he has been connected for the past fifteen years, becoming a partner in 1916. He graduated from the Chicago Kent College of Law in 1918, receiving the degree of LL. B. His law practice since that time has taken him to many parts of the country.

Mr. Phelps was converted in a Methodist church in Evanston, Ill., in 1907. In 1908, on Thanksgiving Day, he was married to Miss Vernette Van Deusen, then a member of the Covenant Presbyterian Church, Chicago, and both were baptized by Dr. John Earl on the first Sunday of 1909 as members of the Belden Avenue Baptist Church, Chicago. When their first daughter Lois was eighteen months old, they bought a home in Wilmette, a suburb of Chicago. For the first three years of their residence there they worked in the Presbyterian church, there being at that time, no Baptist church in Wilmette. In 1913, Mr. Phelps became one of the five founders of the Wilmette Baptist Church in which in subsequent years he has served as deacon and Sunday-school superintendent. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps are now the proud parents of four daughters, Lois, Ora, Ruth and Gladys.

From the beginning of his Christian life, Mr. Phelps took an interest in B. Y. P. U. work. He was chosen treasurer of the City Union in Chicago in 1909, and in 1910 began a very successful work as publicity chairman for the Chicago association. During four of those years, he edited a paper known as the B. Y. P. U. Monthly. He was introduced to convention work as state transportation manager for the Toledo Convention. With three exceptions, he has attended every convention since 1912. He was chairman of the arrangements committee of the B. Y. P. U. of A. eight years.

For the last three years, Mr. Phelps has given himself to young people's assembly work in Illinois and Indiana, where he has conducted courses in B. Y. P. U. methods and in leadership, and has conducted a clinic in B. Y. P. U. work. He has also lectured on young people's work at the institutes held at the Northern Baptist Seminary, Chicago.

For the past six years, Mr. Phelps has been giving himself a liberal education in the field of literature and religious education and has assembled some very valuable material for his lectures on organization and methods of young people's work. He has been, throughout his whole Christian life, a man of three interests—his family, his law practice, and Baptist young people. He now drops one to give more time to that other which has been constantly growing in his heart. There is possibly no man on the American continent more practically conversant with the task he assumes than Edwin Phelps. Our young people will find in him, one who really understands them and is able to offer them a vigorous leadership.

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS: XI. "THE CHURCH PSALM." Ps. 84:1-12. (CONSECRATION MEETING)

By Charles Rufus Osborn

The mere thought of the temple thrilled the soul of the Psalmist. In the midst of a busy life he longed for spiritual fellowship and most of all to bring himself as near as possible into a vital contact with Jehovah whom he thought of as the living God. How would he find words to express himself today were he to enter one of our great cathedrals with all of their beautiful architecture and equipment? This brings us to another question far more potent. What mean all these church buildings of ours to the growing youth of today? Does the suggestion of them, or the ringing of the bell, awaken within them a desire to know more about God and his kingdom?

We may believe that God would awaken within our minds as great feeling of love for him at the mention of his house as was awakened in the mind of the Psalmist when he thought of the sanctuary. That gymnasium, if such our church possesses, is but a reminder that God is interested in the development of strong, healthy bodies in order that he may use them as his temples. "Ye are the temple of the living God." He would let us know at the thought of the fireplace and the reception room that he craves for each one of us the finest fellowships and rejoices in seeing us have a wholesome good time in his house. The mental picture of a class room should remind us that God is interested in our training and wishes that his following might be men and women who are mentally alert and well informed concerning the great world of need. Primarily the temple was for the Psalmist a place of prayer and worship; let us reflect upon the fact that such should it ever be to each one of us. That while we enjoy the gymnasium classes and the social gatherings, yet there is still greater joy for the one who has learned to be still and listen for a little time to that "small voice" that speaks to the hearts of old and young. We enjoy the fellowship of Christian friends in our class and church gatherings but we must learn early to cultivate a constant glowing friendship with Jesus Christ who has proved himself to be the greatest friend the world has ever known. And let us remember that if we do our part that friendship with him may become as real as any earthly friendship that we have ever had.

The great cry of the world today is for people to come and be entertained, excited, amused, but the first invitation of the church should ever be to come and worship the Lord our God. In this age when the temptation is for the church to enter into various forms of amusement let us as young people keep clear its first purpose and with consecrated lives make the church a place where men find God and are encouraged and trained in his ways. This is no easy task but demands the enthusiasm and persistency of youth. Verse eleven gives us assurance of the worthwhileness of such an effort: "The Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." Our consecration meeting will mean little to us unless we feel that we are the custodians of the greatest institution for righteousness that was ever known.

The Great Associations

We are in the season now of the associational gatherings. It was a natural growth when long ago the old, strong, Boston Association was divided into the "North" and "South." Then came later the necessary division of the North into the North and East, and the South into the West and South. Then we began to talk about the Old North and the Old South when we wanted to refer to ancient church history.

Any one of the four associations is now as large as the Old Boston was fifty years ago, and they still are growing. The meetings come at a strategic time, just after pastors and people return fresh from their vacation renewal. Immediately there is a gathering up to get ready for the association, and that is like a winding up of the mainspring for the year's work. From the angle of the average church, September and October are New Year's time—everything begins anew.

The attendance at the associational meetings will fluctuate according to the vital practicalness of the meeting. The old-time conventional program has gradually given way to a more unconventional scheme of things with more of the unexpected in it. And the unexpected usually takes the form of practical features—symposiums, debates, public classes, etc. It is not a hunt for popular features to draw a crowd, but of inspirational features that attract church workers and instruct them. After all, is not that what associations are for? The old-time convention and associational meeting with its annual hard and fast program that every one could anticipate is disappearing.

A Bomb of Facts

At our recent big Conference on Evangelism, Secretary Dolan in his valuable report for Massachusetts, undesignedly threw in a sort of bomb when he simply analyzed for us some recent past history in mass evangelism. Secretary Dolan is himself so sincerely earnest and good-natured, so far from anything like pessimism and fault-finding, that it made his facts all the more of a bomb when they came to us backed by his smile, and by his own continous evangelistic effort that makes him so welcome among the churches.

Some of the "glory of the good old days" seemed to fade out as he proceeded to give us the totals after the great Moody and Sankey, Chapman and Alexander, and Billy Sunday and Rodeheaver campaigns, then gave us the depressing figures that accompanied the immediate years of inevitable reaction that always follow great emotional excitements. He did not for a moment discredit anybody, or intend any reflection. He had just made a close study of church conditions before, during, and after the great campaigns, and faithfully gave us the results. Cold figures sometimes seem almost cruel, but it is good that they do.

His point was that a faithful study of fifty years of evangelism among the churches much impaired our complacency concerning the certain and lasting blessing of sensational mass movements, also that it conclusively proved the larger and more abiding blessing of the steady personal and pastoral evangelism that we are pursuing now. He declared that we are on the right road, and that the golden day of the church is ahead of us. When the full report of the conference is printed, read Secretary Dolan's study. Such literature ought to be circulated.

Something to Be Noted.

It is known to some of us that there is one disquieting element in the present denominational situation. Gifted young men, who either in college or before, committed themselves to the Christian ministry, when coming to face the present quarrelsome religious situation, have entirely given up their purpose. They say that they are willing to fight the world, the flesh and the devil, but as for fighting their brethren, that is a waste of their life which they do not feel called to make. Are they right?

Ford Hall Forum

This Boston institution, so well known throughout the country, begins its meetings Oct. 21. The first speaker is Prof. James I. Corrigan, S. J. of Boston College. His theme is "The Social Menace of Divorce." It is significant that we confidently look for a flat-footed and uncompromising deliverance on that burning subject from a Jesuit priest. Our Roman Catholic brethren are more solid there than we are.

There are some rather pungent items in the year's program. For instance, John Graham Brooks is booked to speak on "A New Definition of Hell." An unusual evening will be that of Nov. 25, when Dr. Charles H. Rust of Scranton, Pa., speaks on "A Christian's Appreciation of Judaism;" and Rabbi Bernard Heller gives "A Rabbi's Appreciation of Jesus." That good word "appreciation" ought to be deeply explored now, when so many in the realm of religion seem ready to discard it altogether.

Two Impressive Addresses

The first was by Dr. Albert Parker Fitch at the Social Union Oct. 1 on the prevailing attitude of college students towards religion. Twenty years of connection with two universities gave Doctor Fitch an opportunity for inside sympathetic study of the situation. He found the outstanding attitude among students was either pagan or radical, and gave a masterly analysis that was developed with faithfulness, yet with appreciation of present conditions in the world, that were unsettling and bewildering in colleges, just as they were everywhere. He claimed the inside of colleges was simply the outside intensified. There is more thinking about religion, more discussion of it, yet less certitude, because of the great wrench of everything by the great world conflict. For fifty minutes Doctor Fitch held those men as in a vise. There was not one syndicated joke, simply a swift, free, searching analysis of a matter that was considered by every hearer about as vital and worth while as it could be.

Bishop Slattery

The other address was by Bishop Coadjutor Slattery, of the Episcopal diocese, at the Ministers' Conference on the eighth of October. It was a welcome contribution to our conference discussion. He gave us impressions of religion in France received during a recent visit to that country. Of course, as was to be expected, he saw things quite from the liturgical point of view, but apart from that, he heightened our conception of spiritual worship. Particularly did he stress a large use of our churches for private worship, being impressed in France by the always open churches and the stream of people seeking them as houses of prayer as if to satisfy a spiritual hunger. He urged a more common opening of our churches in city and village, being confident that it would foster reverence and strengthen faith. Bishop Slattery is an eloquent preacher in the best sense. Unmistakably there is behind all a good man, devoutly earnest, seeking not to excite, but to convince and persuade. There was a large attendance, and a good meeting.

Kings Chapel

The old historic chapel is not one of the "dead ones" in Boston, so far as its open doors, frequent services, and free ministrations are concerned. Now there are daily noon and vesper services that will be continued throughout the winter, with eminent ministers officiating from England and America, and an occasional layman. The present week three laymen are to speak: Glenn Frank, editor of the Century magazine, Dr. John Farwell Moors, and Richard Billings of New York. Large congregations gather, and the discourses are compelling attention. There is plenty of plain speaking.

It is really noteworthy that down in the heart of a great city, on one of the noisiest corners, there should be a place so sacred and so quiet, and so frequented in the busiest hours of the day by attentive, intelligent, and reverent worshippers. It is true that world conditions bring bewilderment, but all the signs say that they also are bringing a hunger.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

The Detroit Baptist Association held its ninety-seventh session with the Royal Oak church Oct. 3-4. The Detroit Association is the remnant of the original Michigan Baptist Association, the first to be formed, while the state was yet a territory. The name was changed a number of years ago. The Royal Oak church itself dates back to 1839 and today is one of the most vigorous in the whole metropolitan area under the leadership of Rev. Geo. E. Dawkins.

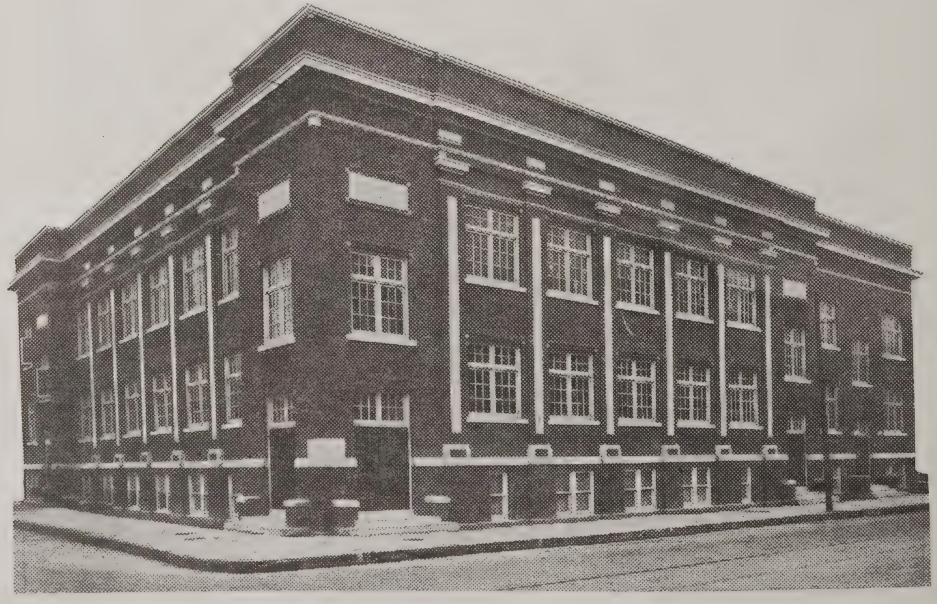
The associational meeting as a whole was of high class. The annual sermon by Rev. Arthur V. Allen was an able and deeply spiritual message on the joy and significance of the resurrection. Rev. W. H. Bowler, of New York, of the General Promotion Board, was present and made himself vigorously felt in committee conferences and before the larger body. Wednesday evening the band of the First Roumanian Church, Detroit, met Dr. M. S. Rice, of Detroit, at the depot and marched to the church. Doctor Rice has an international reputation as a speaker. He is pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. Church, Detroit, which is just building a $1,000,000 edifice.

The association and the Detroit Baptist Union have a working agreement whereby the one gathers the statistics of the churches and offers inspirational addresses, the union being charged with all missionary and expansion work. Their fields are coterminous.

Thursday it was voted hereafter to hold one-day intensive sessions. Rev. W. G. Coltman, pastor of the Highland Park Church, spoke on "Is the Prayer and Conference Meeting Essential to Modern Church Success." He firmly believes in the mid-week meeting. Then Dr. C. S. Knight, pastor of the First Church, Pontiac, gave a great address on stewardship. Officers elected: Moderator, Rev. E. Bond Griffith; Rev. Geo. E. Dawkins, vice-president; Rev. Magnus Burgess, clerk, and C. J. Netting, Jr., treasurer; preacher, Rev. H. H. Davis. Place of meeting, Jefferson Avenue church, Detroit. Rev. W. E. Bowyer, pastor of the Warren Avenue Church was the efficient moderator this year.

Friday evening, Oct. 5, at the Y. M. C. A. there gathered a company of nearly eighty pastors, laymen and laywomen, at the invitation of Doctor Bowler, of the General Promotion Board, and Dr. H. C. Gleiss. After dinner and the business matters before the board of trustees of the Detroit Baptist Union, Doctor Gleiss introduced the subject of the Detroit Bible and Missionary Conference to be held in the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church on Oct. 29-31. Doctor Bowler presented the plans of the General Promotion Board, the objectives and the impelling world challenge that comes to Baptists in this year of our Lord. His inspiring address was most cordially received and appointed committees began to function immediately. The general committee is made up of the following: Chairman, W. W. Smith; vice-chairman, Judge P. W. Marsh, together with the chairmen of the various committeees—prayer, Robert Ernst; registration, Albert H. Finn; deputation, W. P. Lovett; entertainment, A. F. Bassett; meetings, Doctor Northrup; dinners, C. J. Netting, Sr.

The Detroit Conference will cover the following associations: Detroit, Huron, Flint River, Wayne, and Lenawee.



It is planned to work for a registration of 3,000.

Muscatine Dedicates New Building

The new house of worship of the First Church, Muscatine, Iowa, was dedicated with appropriate exercises Sunday, Sept. 30. On the program were Dr. Benjamin Otto of Chicago and Dr. G. P. Mitchell of Des Moines.

The building was erected at a cost of $110,000. It is finished in antique face brick with Bedford stone trimmings. The windows of the auditorium are of opalescent glass. It is constructed along simple lines to meet the enlarging needs of all departments of the church, especially of the Sunday school. There are thirty-eight separate Sunday-school class-rooms provided with strictly modern equipment. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 750, and the balcony 250. Special provision has been made for the social life of the church, the two main features of this department being a large dining-room and a game room which can be used for a gymnasium. A uniform lighting system is installed. This is perhaps the first large building west of the Mississippi to use the indirect fixtures.

The church was organized Oct. 30, 1841 with six members under the leadership of Ezra Fisher, moderator. In 1843, after a series of revival meetings, it was decided to build a house of worship. A lot was purchased, and in 1848 the first church home of the new organization was completed and dedicated. The church grew rapidly in numbers and spiritual strength. In 1860 a lot was purchased and during the Civil War a new building was erected and dedicated Nov. 8, 1868. The continual growth made more commodious quarters necessary. Therefore, in March, 1922, a financial campaign was launched, the results of which determined the erection of the present edifice. The present membership is 1,220. The pastor, Rev. W. H. Rogers is now in his sixth year of service.

Dedication of Temple Church

The new building of the Temple Church, Chicago, was dedicated Sept. 16-23. Revs. Benjamin Otto, R. A. Mac-

WESLEY F. DISSETTE

Mullen, Francis C. Stifler, J. W. Hoyt and Dr. Geo. W. Taft all spoke during the week.

The architecture of the building is of modern Gothic style of dark pressed brick trimmed with buff Bedford limestone. The roof is made of dark red tile. A luminous cross adorns the east side of the tower. A parsonage adjoins the church on the west. The windows are of opalescent glass.

Temple Church began originally from a Sunday school started in 1862. The Sunday school was reorganized several times and finally in 1870 became the Coventry Street Church. In 1881 the building was moved to North Ashland Avenue and the name was changed to the North Ashland Avenue Church. In 1892, under the leadership of Dr. James P. Thoms, the building was moved farther west to Leavitt Street near North Avenue and was called the Pilgrim Temple Church. On Aug. 31, 1919, the Pilgrim Temple and Humboldt Park churches consolidated and the new body became known as the Temple Church. In the fall of 1920 the Pilgrim Temple building was sold for $25,000. The Humboldt Park structure was razed in August, 1922, to make way for the present edifice.

Rev. Wesley F. Dissette is the present pastor.

MAINE

GARDINER, FREE BAPTIST: The enthusiasm and the strong purpose for real service of Pastor Clark are proving contagious at Gardiner. On Rally Day 400 persons were in church and 322 in Sunday school.

THE QUARTERLY MEETINGS in the different associations seem to be taking on new life. The attendance is larger and more representative than ever before, and the programs contemplate real and immediate effort in all Christian service. The meetings at Vassalboro, Canton, New Limerick, Scarboro and Tenants Harbor set a new standard of excellence and power.

Bates College

The college year opened with the largest attendance in the history of the school. The total enrolment is 624.

For the third year in succession Bates has met Oxford University in debate. Two years ago Bates sent a team to England and a year ago the first Anglo-American debate on this side of the Atlantic was held in Maine with a team from Oxford. This year the Oxford Union again honored Bates with the first of a series of debates with sixteen leading institutions of the United States and Canada. President Coolidge, who happens to be an alumnus of Bates, and the Prince of Wales both sent messages of congratulation to President Gray because of the significance of this contribution to the furtherance of amity and good-will between Britain and America.

The new director of religious education, Fletcher Knollin, is receiving a hearty welcome as he begins his work. Mr. Knollin was graduated at Bates, took work at the Hartford School of Religion, Chicago University, and at Newton.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE COLLECTION OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Wakefield, for the Japanese relief amounted to $1,128. The church also recently contributed $120 for Red Cross work. Harvey J. Moore is pastor.

IN DR. ROSS'S RECENT ARTICLE concerning the Boston Social Union and the Ruggles Street Church, he referred to the enrolment of the school in all departments as being 600. He makes the following correction: "Six hundred is too high for the attendance and too low for enrolment of the school at the present time. For six months beginning January, 1923, the attendance of our school averaged 480 while for the same period the enrolment in all departments, including cradle roll and home department, was 1240. The attendance, therefore, of our school is about 33 per cent of the enrolment. We regret any false impression that has been made."

NEW YORK

R. M. PALMER OF CASTILE recently accepted a call to the pastorate of the Union Church, Pittsburgh. Mr. Palmer is a graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary and was pastor at Castile for six years.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

ON SEPT. 27 Dr. Henry Allen Tupper resigned the pastorate of the First Church after a successful ministry of five years. Since 1918 the church has received many more members into its communion than were on the church books when Doctor Tupper's pastorate commenced. At that time the church was giving for missions and other benevolences a total of $1,650, while the amount covering the same items for this year is $10,500. The total amount for all purposes in 1918 was $7,600 while the total of this current year is $36,000. The B. Y. P. U. has developed into one of the largest organizations in the city. Doctor Tupper has taken an active interest in the mission work being done by Baptist people in the District of Columbia, and as a member of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, he has taken a vital interest in missions across the sea. Last year, as a commissioner of immigration, by appointment of Hon. J. J. Davis, Secretary of Labor in the Harding cabinet, Doctor Tupper studied this important question throughout the Near East and his report was commended by President Harding. It is announced that Doctor Tupper expects to spend some time in revising several of his books and gathering data for a new work that he has in mind. This will take him, again, throughout many parts of the world. In these extensive tours, Doctor Tupper's resignation will be effective Oct. 31.

DR. J. J. MUIR, who recently resigned the pastorate of the Temple Church after a ministry of thirty-four years there, has withdrawn his resignation at the earnest solicitation of the church and will continue his fruitful work in that field.

AT CALVARY CHURCH, the work is opening up this fall with unusual vigor and promise. A reception was given Doctor and Mrs. Abernethy upon their return from Europe and the Burrall class of which Mrs. Abernethy is the teacher, was enthusiastic in its welcome. The morning service on Sept. 23 was designated as a service of appreciation and was a memorial to the late President Harding who, during his term of office, was a regular attendant at the service at Calvary Church. Through the courtesy of the Telephone Company, Doctor Abernethy's address was sent over the radio to thousands of listeners. A silver plate is to be attached to the pew which President Harding occupied while he was a worshipper at Calvary Church.

CAPTAIN MILTON J. HULL, for many years prominent in the United States Treasury Department and for thirty years a member of Calvary Church, recently passed to his reward.

THE INSTALLATION OF Ivan H. Benedict took place at the Blue Hills Avenue Church recently. A number of Hartford ministers assisted. The welcome to the city was delivered by M. W. Schuh, pastor of the Memorial Church. The welcome from Hartford ministers was given by Rev. Morris E. Alling, secretary of the Hartford Council of Churches, and the welcome from the Blue Hills Church by A. E. Tyrrill, clerk of the church. Following the installation, a reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Benedict was held in the parish reception room. Mr. Benedict comes to the church after four years as pastor at Branford, Conn. Previously he was engaged in war work with the Y. M. C. A. He was for a time pastor at Montpelier, Vt., and in Iowa City, Ia. He is a graduate of Colgate University, and did post-graduate work at the University of Chicago.

THE FIRST CHURCH, CANTON, announces an Echo Luncheon to be held at the church Nov. 7.

THE CENTRAL CHURCH, COLUMBUS, passed resolutions expressing its appreciation of the services of its pastor, William Pieffer, who recently resigned to enter the evangelistic field, and its regret at his departure.

Denison University

The opening of the college year at Denison University, Granville, was marked by interesting features. A procession of the faculty and students was an innovation, but added to the impressiveness of the first convocation. Led by President Chamberlain, with scripture reading by Dean Knox and prayer by Doctor Williams, the new year was ushered in with high hopes. Contrasts between the first convocation in 1831 and the present one of 1923 added interest.

The enrolment has passed all previous marks in all departments, and perplexity is experienced in classroom and dormitory accommodations. The increased enrolment in the upper classes is especially marked.

A number of additions have been made to the faculty. Prof. H. B. Jome comes from the University of Wisconsin for the work of economics and business administration. Miss Jessie Crawford, a recent graduate of the Boston School of Religious Education, becomes assistant in the department of religious education. Prof. Erie Shumaker is transferred to the college department of English. Miss Caroline Taylor becomes assistant in the department of zoology.

Never was the outlook for successful service in the field of Christian education at Denison more promising.

THE PROGRAM OF THE STATE CONVENTION announces a meeting at Muscatine, Oct. 22-28. W. H. Rogers is the resident pastor of the entertaining church. The program indicates an interesting meeting is to be held. C. W. Gilkey, Chicago, is to deliver a series of addresses before the pastors' conference, Oct. 22-23. Curtis Lee Laws, New York City, leads the quiet hour of the convention. P. H. J. Lerrigo, New York City; Edgar L. Killam, Chicago; and Secretary Wm. E. Chalmers, Philadelphia, are among the speakers from outside of Iowa.

THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS of Des Moines University for the first semester reveals some interesting facts. Eighteen denominations are represented in the student body. Baptists lead with the Methodists close at their heels; 81.04 per cent of the students are members of some church; 12.58 per cent give a church preference; and 6.38 per cent have no choice. Or, 93.62 per cent of the students are interested in the work of the church universally. To meet the needs of Baptists especially who are connected with the university, which is a part of the whole community of Highland Park, the University Church arranges its program so that it becomes a laboratory in which students of the university are trained to become real church workers when they go out into the world.

The work has been revived, a new site was bought in the very heart of the town, a building secured, and on Sunday, Sept. 30, it was dedicated to the service of God. Rev. O. C. Wright, superintendent of missions, was present to assist in the dedicatory service.

REV. J. L. BARNES is pastor at Marshfield, the metropolis of the Coos Bay country. Marshfield is a city of six or seven thousand population, the second largest port city on the sea.

NORTH OF MARSHFIELD lies North Bend, a city with thriving milling industries. A new Baptist church has been organized there which is growing by leaps and bounds.

ON TUESDAY, OCT. 2, over 100 men from Salem, Lacomb, Lebanon, Corvallis, Scio and other points, gathered in Albany for a men's rally. B. F. Fellman and his group of men were hosts. After the banquet, Drs. W. B. Hinson of the East Side Church, Portland, and O. C. Wright, superintendent of missions, gave inspirational addresses. On Wednesday, Doctor and Mrs. Wright led in conferences concerning missionary endeavor, and in the evening Miss Louise Hunderup, elementary worker, and W. T. Milliken met with the young people of the association.

ON FRIDAY, OCT. 5, Oregon City Baptists held their annual meeting. The year showed an encouraging increase in membership and in finance. This is one of the old and strong churches of the state, being, in fact, the first Baptist body in Oregon to erect a church building. The present edifice in the heart of the town finds itself too small for the congregation, so a new building is being

Attention Baptist Students!

The missionaries of The American Baptist Home Mission Society labor in nearly every state in the Union and in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Jamaica and Haiti. They go to the remote places of both old and new American frontiers, to the congested districts of great cities, and to the Indians, Mexicans and Orientals. They teach in schools for Indians, Negroes, Mexicans and many other racial groups; they are training a native ministry in the Latin American republics.

Students now in college and seminary classes will later find opportunities for Christian service in these mission fields and others will doubtless answer the call to pastorates in American communities. A distinct service can be rendered to the cause of home missions by these prospective pastors and pastors now in the ministry if they will advise their people concerning legacies, annuities and other special opportunities for giving. There are many people who wish information about the best methods of using their means for bringing the world to Christ. There are facts contained in our booklet "A Soun Investment," which will help in your education. Knowledge is power.

For information concerning ways of investing life and means in the varied and wide-spread work of this Society kindly address Secretary Charles L. White, 23 East Twenty-sixth Street, New York City.

A Big Revival

In June 1921, an evangelistic revival began in Sonta Bata on the Belgian Congo field of the Foreign Mission Society. It has continued without interruption for more than two years.

The following statistics covering this period have been furnished by missionary Thomas Moody.

For the year ending May 31, 1922, there were 32 baptismal services with 3,649 converts baptized.

For the year ending May 31, 1923, there were 26 baptismal services with 3,357 converts baptized.

This makes a total of 58 baptismal services in two years, with 7,006 converts baptized on their confession of faith in Jesus Christ.

Later reports from the field indicate that this revival movement is still continuing and another evangelistic harvest is anticipated.

LAYMEN OF PORTLAND have formed a city organization for the purpose of reinforcing Baptist work in the state. The president is Professor Calloway of Grace Church, and the secretary, Harley Hallgren of the First Swedish Church. Special meetings conducted by Evangelist Milo M. Bentley at a mission of the Grace Church recently resulted in eight accessions to the church. Twenty-one persons have been baptized into the membership of the church within the past month.

THE SCHOOL BOARD OF THE CITY of Portland has conferred upon the pastor of the Lents Church the honor of election to the position of lecturer upon patriotic themes to the schools of the city. Rev. E. A. Smith is pastor.

THE METROPOLIS OF SOUTHERN OREGON is the city of Medford. Rev. F. R. Leach and his group of workers are completing one of the most modern church buildings in the state, and expect to dedicate it the first Sunday in November. Building and equipment cost somewhere in the vicinity of $50,000. Departmental assembly rooms for all departments with separate classrooms, a gymnasium, social rooms, a large auditorium, and a pipe organ complete the equipment.

SOUTH OF MEDFORD lies the little city of Ashland. There is a live church under the leadership of Rev. B. C. Miller. The last year was one of spiritual uplift and ingathering. Eighty persons were baptized, thirteen received by letter, and thirty-five united with the church by experience and restoration. The present membership is about 250. One of the most interesting features of the church is a live young people's organization.

NORTH OF MEDFORD AND ASHLAND lies the city of Grant's Pass in a little valley among the mountains. Rev. C. M. Cline, and his band of workers are doing work which should be an inspiration to every other church in the state. Mr. Cline and his workers conduct services at Merlin, Hugo, Selma, Williams, Oak Grove, Provalt and other points, thus keeping Baptist interest alive in the entire county.

ON SEPT. 25 GROUND WAS BROKEN for the new $100,000 edifice of the First Church, McMinnville. The Bible school unit of the new structure will be built first and will cost $60,000. It will provide modern equipment for a school of between 800 and 1,000 pupils. A large auditorium with stage, stereopticon and movie equipment is provided for social and dramatic purposes. It is planned to make this part of the church building a social center for college and community. The building will be of red wire-cut brick with cut stone trimmings. The annual meeting showed an addition of 121 new members during the year. The church voted the pastor, C. L. Trawin, a $250 increase in salary.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

HAMILTON SQUARE CHURCH, San Francisco, recently tendered its pastor, Louis J. Sawyer, a reception celebrating the first anniversary of his present pastorate, and the twenty-first anniversary of his first pastorate. When he went to Hamilton Square in 1902 the congregation was worshipping in a small building; when he left in 1915 to accept a call to the First Church, Yakima, Wash., there was a thriving congregation and a substantial brick edifice completely adapted to the needs of a modern church. Harold E. Doty, a student in Berkeley Divinity School, was recently made student assistant. Mr. Sawyer was made moderator of the San Francisco Bay Association at its meeting Oct. 4-5.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE STOCKTON-GOULD EVANGELISTIC party is conducting a series of special meetings at the First Church, Pasadena, Oct. 8-21.

THE CHURCH AT BURBANK is only seventeen months old, yet it has a membership of 112 and a Bible school enrolment of 120. A new church building has been built and almost paid for since its organization. Ernest A. Main is pastor.

Rev. James Foster Wilcox the past winter resigned as director of brotherhood work but at the request of the board of managers of the Home Mission Society held the position until October. During the summer he conducted his third camp for boys at Camp Oswegatchie in the Adirondacks, as a result of which fruitage has been reported in the lives of the large group who were daily under the influence of their inspiring leader. When Mr. Wilcox accepted the position of director of brotherhoods at the invitation of the Home Mission Society, with the approval of the brotherhood council of the Northern Baptist Convention, which is the same group as that composing the conference committee of the Publication Society and the Home Mission Society, his influence was at once felt by the brotherhoods of which there were at that time about 100. During his years of service these increased to nearly 1,000, about half of which were men's classes. The Home Mission Society carried in its budget an appropriation covering salary, office and traveling expenses, and the work has been conducted under the department of social service. During these four years Mr. Wilcox became widely known, crossing the continent several times and delivering yearly 250 addresses before men's groups. This gained for him wide acquaintance in the denomination. Mr. Wilcox felt called upon to reenter the pastorate, and has accepted the call of the Roxborough Church of Philadelphia.

Before the Judgment Seat

not to agree with, not to pay compliments to, but to obey.

The other thing is this, there is the judgment of God.

How many of you have preached about the judgment? People used to preach about it. You have to eliminate about half the parables of our Lord from the New Testament if you are going to do away with the judgment. The work of the Holy Spirit was to convict men in respect of judgment. The apostles reasoned of righteousness and self-control and judgment. That great hymn of praise is based on Holy Scripture, "We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge; we therefore pray thee help thy servants, whom thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood."

We must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ.

It loomed up through the mists of his holy apostles, and they prayed for grace to meet it.

"What shall I, frail man, be pleading,
Who for me be interceding,
When the just are mercy needing."

The most rational thing in the universe really is the judgment of God. It is proceeding always. There is not a father anywhere, with any moral passion for his children, who is not always judging them, assessing them. And the judgments of God—of course one speaks with the utmost humility and reverence—the judgments of God will always be in accordance with divine charity, but always in accordance with truth. God cannot do wrong to save anybody. God cannot alter facts. Even in his mercy he can never alter facts. The Lord can never say the same thing about the man who wrapped the pound in a napkin as about the man who traded with it and made ten more. He can never say the same thing about Judas, who made money out of him, as Mary of Bethany, who brought him treasure and would have given the last drop of her blood for him.

The judgment of God is always according to truth. We must all appear as we are, all disguises stripped off, before the judgment seat of Christ.

And judgment, according to this verse about which I am speaking, was simply judgment according to opportunity.

It is not that Sodom was not worse than Capernaum at the flat rate of judgment; of course, Sodom was infinitely worse. But our Lord said, if Sodom had had the chances of Capernaum Sodom would not have been destroyed.

Some people ought to be infinitely better than other people. They have had better ancestry and better training. The same thing done by two men may not be the same at all. Even an earthly judge would take the antecedents and surroundings of a man into account. One man's mother was a liar, and his father a thief, and he was brought up in a corrupt moral atmosphere. The other man had a saint for his mother and his father was a man of honor. Mind you, one man might do things from which the other would recoil with loathing, and yet in the last analysis of character, taking all things into account, he would be the better of the two.

Our Lord does not often lift the veil that hides the future and the unseen from us, never sufficient to gratify our curiosity, and it is useless for us to try to lift it; but he lifts a corner of it here and there, and he shows us that there are degrees of retribution as there are degrees in reward, more tolerable for some than for others; a few stripes for one man, many stripes for another, according to opportunity and privilege. What really was the sin of Capernaum was saying No to Jesus; saying it politely, but saying No.

Are you, in your own neighborhood, breaking your heart that men will take your material benefits and turn away from your spiritual endeavors? Jesus Christ is with you, and your burden was his burden, and your perplexity was his. It is so easy to bow to his name, to bring compliments to him in the creeds, and to hold back your life from his obedience, which is the only thing.

I am always thankful because I believe that this evangelist was divinely guided, that these were not the last words to Capernaum.

We are to come to him.

These are the last words to us all. You are toiling along your own self-chosen ways to find rest, but you will be driven back to this in the end.

That is my hope.

Evil will work itself out, and men and nations will be driven back upon this, that there is no way of managing life and finding peace but the way of Jesus.

Why do you look upon death as a calamity? Why do you shudder at it? The loss of material goods is not the greatest calamity. You become immersed in ecclesiastical affairs, and lose sight of Jesus. You are burdened with theological problems or social difficulties. Hear his voice over all these things. "Come unto me and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you and learn of me. My way is the way of the cross, my way is the way of self-renunciation. Therein find peace."

What Stewardship Will Mean to Your Church

1. A positive acknowledgment of the Lordship of Jesus Christ by every member.
2. Trained church officials who know their duties and how to perform them properly.
3. A definite expectation that all members will be given proper care by a developed lay ministry to train them in worshipping, serving, witnessing and giving.
4. Active and joyous participation in the missionary plans and projects of the church.
5. A new zeal for Christian education in order to make intelligent our whole constituency.
6. Reaching the non-resident member and bringing him into participation in some local church near his present residence.

Our Book Shelf

La Parcelle 32, by Ernest Perochen. New York: Doran Co.

This translation from the French by Frances C. Fay makes quite interesting the story of French farm life during the late war period. The book depicts a number of typical peasant characters that are drawn by the author with a true understanding of their types.

Northern Neighbors, Stories of Labrador People, by Wilfred T. Grenfell. New York: Houghton Mifflin. $2.

A collection of sketches of a primitive people and stories of courage and adventure told in Doctor Grenfell's simple and direct style. He has lived for many years among these people, sacrificed for them and labored for and with them. Unconsciously he reveals much of his own big heart and becomes a warm and vivid personality to the reader. To see these Labrador people true to the life read "Northern Neighbors."

The Resurrection of the Body, by Wilbert W. White. New York: Doran. $1.

The book is written from the viewpoint of evangelical conservatism as opposed to "modernism" in its discussion of this basal fact of Christianity. It considers the questions: The nature of the resurrection body; how are the dead to be raised; the credibility of the resurrection, for and against. It is as sane, convincing, rational and able a treatment of the great subject as we have read in many a day, a "handbook" on the subject. The controversial parts in it are only incidental and always irenic. It is largely constructive and elucidative, and thoroughly scriptural. The student will find it not only charmingly written, but a convenient reference book from the author's viewpoint.

The Soul of Abe Lincoln, by Mrs. Bernie Babcock. New York: J. B. Lippincott. $2.

Mrs. Babcock became favorably known by her former novel, "The Soul of Ann Rutledge," a story of Abraham Lincoln's romance in which grains of facts served as condiment. The present romance is of kindred type—the ventures, solicitudes, disappointments and final realization of the great heart passion-love. The name and spirit, or soul, of Lincoln run through the warp and woof of its contents like threads of gold. The magnanimous and tender disposition of the great president and his appreciation by the South as well as the North is pathetically portrayed by the writer. Well-known facts and events in his public career are presented pulsating with life. The story of his death is presented with unadorned simplicity and grim realism. We are compelled to say that Abraham Lincoln on the title page would suit our taste better than "Abe Lincoln."

Ethics of Capitalism, by Judson G. Rosebush. New York: Association Press.

Capitalism is seriously challenged: so much is acknowledged. And it is admitted that past ethics of capitalism supply reason to the challenge. But Mr. Rosebush, himself a trained college teacher of economics and a capitalist of considerable experience, believes that the capitalist system is capable of moral self-renovation, is compatible with Christianity and is destined to prevail. His argument is temperate beyond the custom of these vociferous times, is simple and carries the strength of clear and elementary statement. He is frankly committed to the thesis of capitalistic empire under Anglo-Saxon supremacy. Nothing less than this seems to him quite respectable. Cooperation, public ownership, labor unions, soviets, the I. W. W., the Federal Council of Churches, are all smirched with the same heresies. The Methodist church is in effect "enrolled under the banner of sovietism." Industrial democracy as commonly understood is impossible to concede. Real democracy is not collective bargaining nor government by the people; it is opportunity for talent to rise, as at present under capitalism. The book covers most of the vital topics of the day in economics and politics, and presents a valuable cross section of the capitalist mind trying honestly to think in ethical terms. It sets the reader to thinking.

Tested Methods in Town and Country Churches, by E. des Brunner. New York: Doran. $1.25 net.

A book of concrete and definite facts showing just what is being done by a number of churches to meet their responsibility and serve their communities. Any pastor or church worker who wants to know what has been done in various situations will find plenty of suggestions and any amount of inspiration. The book is well balanced and deals fairly with evangelism and worship as well as with religious education and community service.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

COMMUNAL SINGING

WE are glad that a new expression is coming into vogue to denote congregational singing. The old one is getting to be a little bit tiresome. Not only does it lead to tautology, but it is, scientifically speaking, too narrow in its scope. In an interesting article on "Communal Singing" in a recent issue of Musical News, by Arthur S. Salmon, we are told a few things that may shock some church-goers, but which nevertheless must be reckoned with.

We read: "Personally I have no great faith in communism of any sort; its results are altogether too one-sided and disproportionate. We already have to share a community of noise in the streets and public places; that we should have to face an organized community of noise in our churches or elsewhere seems too unreasonable a demand on our forbearance.

"The notion, fostered by some zealous but probably unmusical clergy, and some equally zealous but possibly unmusical organists, is that our congregations should learn to sing in parts. They should assemble before service or at other times to practice hymns and psalm tunes. That is to say, the congregation is to become the choir—a proposition against which every self-respecting choir will commendably rebel. Surely this is an attempt to combine the incompatible. Good choir-music is one thing: a hearty congregational service is quite another. Both have their just claims. They are not so much antagonistic as essentially dissimilar. A congregation should sing with earnest heartiness, a choir must sing with ear and culture.

"It is not exactly a law of nature that singing from the heart should mean a nasty noise; but it is certainly a law of nature that of every hundred persons in a promiscuous assembly, at least 50 per cent will sing discordantly. What are you to do with that 50 per cent? The best thing is to give them a few simple tunes to shout at, and blank the consequences. They have a right to this much, and their fellow-worshippers of sensitive ear must put up with it.

"But our communal friends will say: 'Let us train them all: let us teach them to sing with the ear as well as with the heart.' It is a beautiful idea and it must remain such. It is entirely impracticable. In the best-laid schemes of congregational singing there is always the casual visitor or the persistently untunable voice to work ruination. Perhaps, as communism generally means an exercise of despotism, it is proposed to silence the untunable. Surely this would be to sacrifice religious zeal for a moderate degree of musical excellence.

"Can we shut out the worthy because they are unfortunately inharmonious? Most commonly the musically defective is entirely unconscious of his shortcoming. Conscious of it or not, he may feel that he has a right to sing. Charles Lamb told his readers almost with pride that he had no ear: Walter Scott spoke of his incurable defect of voice and ear. Would we expel Lamb and Scott from our midst? Or should we as delicately as possible suggest to them that they must not sing? What would the best of music be compared with such an outrage as that? Obviously it is best to leave congregational singing where it is; leave it to the congregation. They enjoy it in their own untrammeled way. We rise above matters of musical sensitiveness when we hear a large gathering let itself go in some well-known tune. But let us not call it music. Music is just what it will not be. We must give things their right names. We can have an emotional and hearty noise, and style it communal; in the best sense of all, it may be everything that can be desired. But we cannot convert a community wholesale into a musical organization."

We have here a tolerably strong defense of the laissez faire system of congregational singing—the only system, if the truth be told, that has ever produced great results. Communal singing of the Moody and Sankey and Billy Sunday type is spontaneous and untaught. It resembles a prairie conflagration. Light it and it takes its true name. "wild fire." The hard thing to do is to apply the spark to the right kind of tinder.

Communal singing in ordinary churches is a different matter; the spark is not always hot nor is the tinder always dry. Nevertheless, the laissez faire method seems to be the only one within practical vision. Theoretically speaking, part singing (if we could get it) would solve a problem that drives hymnal editors frantic. For, if we could stop bassos from trying to sing "the top part" we should hear no more of that worn-out precept" no tune should go higher than D."

The only chance that 80 or 90 per cent of school pupils ever get to sing with any degree of regularity after graduation is in church. To spend vast sums of money on the avoidance of unison singing in school, and to fail to follow up this training in Sunday school and in church does not seem to be the height of wisdom.—New Music Review.

Some Anthem Suggestions

This being the time of year when the many church choirs over the country are again assembling for the new season, I am taking this opportunity to answer some requests for new anthem material, and to anticipate other letters along the same line. All of the titles suggested are not strictly fresh from the press; but all are off the beaten path, have been tested and found of value, and are not too difficult for the average quartet or chorus. I have listed them under the names of the respective publishers—the type and subject of each number can easily be gauged from the title.

The Murren Conference

destroyed, war must be replaced by rational and moral forces. It holds that it is the duty of the church to declare that the goal of mankind should be universal peace. Moreover, the church is bound to insist that war even in defense of the suffering and the oppressed is a most deplorable instrument for achieving its aims, and that wars of aggression are both a blunder and a crime. The conference believes that wars can be most effectively prevented by the creation of a new moral atmosphere, and that in this question, as in all others, the only hope of improvement is in obedience to the Christian standard by the individual, the church and the nation. The conference strongly affirms its confidence in the League of Nations and appeals to all Christian people to support the League of Nations union and strengthen public opinion in support of this great movement."

The Church and Wealth

The conference devoted serious attention to the questions raised by the extremes of riches and poverty in the community, but in the time available it could not formulate a unanimous pronouncement. Rev. Walter Armstrong said the New Testament taught that wealth is a stewardship. The greatest heresy of the church today was its departure from Christian teaching in regard to riches. Many churches were dominated by wealth. Mr. Belden said that capitalists had three-quarters of the national income and labor one-quarter. The death rate of the wealthiest people was eleven per 1,000, and of the poorest people fifty per 1,000. Rev. Henry Carter claimed that life in its fullness should be available for every one. The Rev. C. Cheshire (editor of the Commonwealth, the Anglican monthly) suggested four ways in which the great and growing evils of modern wealth might be combatted: (1) More sermons on the sin of covetousness and avarice, (2) the creation of a Christian press, (3) winning the wealthy laity to make great acts of renunciation, (4) exclusion from the Christian community of lives which deliberately transgress the obvious mind of Jesus Christ. The Bishop of Bradford said that every man is bound to contribute to the community a larger amount of service than he gets from it. He is always asking himself, "Is it worth the world's while to keep me alive?" Sir Henry Lunn urged leaders of the Christian Church to create a conscience as to the way in which money is obtained. There were Christian ways of obtaining money, and non-Christian methods which were condemned by the words of the ten commandments.

And Industry

The conference voiced the deep and growing concern amongst Christians at the failure to secure a more thorough application of the teaching of Jesus Christ to the organization of modern industry. Whilst not entirely agreed as to particular methods of dealing with so difficult a problem, it expressed its determination resolutely to support every effort that may lead to a more Christian order of industry, in which the workers shall enjoy a larger share in its control, a just reward of their labor and greater security of employment. Rev. P. T. R. Kirk, director of the Industrial Christian Fellowship, condemned the wages system as making possible the sweating of the economically weak, as leading to an inhuman cash-nexus relationship between master and men, and depriving the workers of a proper interest in and share of the common industry. The fundamental objection to strikes and lock-outs was that they were appeals to force. Sir Donald Maclean advocated co-partnership, and declared that if the church stood aside, merely helping to keep the ring, working men would leave organized Christianity to its fate.

Betting and Gambling

On the subject of betting and gambling the conference took a strong line. Some months ago the government appointed a select committee to inquire into the proposal to tax betting as a means of raising revenue, and Mr. Isaac Foot, M. P., a member of the committee, who was present at Murren, expects the report to appear towards the end of the year and that a small majority will report in favor of the tax. But he thinks that this will have an opposite effect to that intended; public interest will be quickened, and there will be the opportunity of the churches. Sir Donald Maclean told the conference that the way to impress the government with the force of the churches' opposition was to present their case immediately the report was published. "Get your forces organized for the campaign," he said; "be first in the field." Mr. Foot spoke in similar vein. It is noteworthy that the two leading lay members of the conference seemed to be most conscious of the potency of a united church in national affairs, and should have repeatedly urged religious leaders to exercise their powers to the full. The conference unanimously appealed to all Christian people to use their influence to oppose any proposal to give state recognition to betting by licensing and taxing betting agents, or in any other way; and in order that the church might go into the impending contest with clean hands, it held it to be imperative that the raising of money for church or charitable purposes by raffles, sweepstakes, or any other doubtful means should be completely discontinued.

Marriage and Divorce

The question on which the conference was least united was that of marriage and divorce, and on this subject it did not attempt to make a collective pronouncement. The discussion was opened by a bachelor, Rev. Clement F. Rogers, lecturer in pastoral theology at King's College, London; who took up an extreme position. To show the alarming increase of divorce he mentioned that the ratio of divorces to marriages in the United States increased from one in thirty-four in 1870 to one in twelve in 1907; in 1910 in Kansas City there was one divorce to every four marriages; in 1910 in "the most popular county in the state of Washington" there was one divorce to every eight marriages. The professor startled many of his hearers by claiming that "there is no half-way house between the Christian view of marriage—that it is an indissoluble relationship—and free love." To allow divorce for adultery was, he said, to put a premium upon vice. Remarriage of either of the parties, innocent or guilty, meant adultery. Dr. Carnegie Simpson did not agree that marriage was indissoluble, but he held that it could not be broken without sin, therefore he was against everything that would facilitate divorce. But when a union, in both its spiritual and physical aspects, was broken, then the church should advise the state as to what to do. He appealed to the church to find a Christian principle—not a sliding scale. He submitted, as the needed principle, that marriage was not merely impaired but ended de facto, there was ground for divorce. Two things really ended marriage—adultery and final desertion. Dr. Poole, the only American at the conference, said that in California one marriage in every five was legally dissolved inside two years and two inside every five years. "But," he added, please do not deduce from this that the morality of the average American is worse than that of other people. Why are there so many divorces in the United States? Because in no country in the world has woman the place she has in America. There the dominant male comes up against a stiff proposition. The American woman does not feel that she has to take orders from a man simply because he is a man. She lives on a 50-50 basis, and if her husband wants to change it to 55-45 he will die in a spasm of unrelieved disappointment." Father Bull, of the Community of the Resurrection, declared himself absolutely opposed to divorce and would like to repeal the law which allows it. A stalwart young Free Churchman, the Rev. S. W. Hughes, Doctor Clifford's successor at Westbourne Park, indignantly protested against the position taken up by Professor Rogers and other speakers.

Warren G. Harding's Creed

"I KNOW my limitations; I know how far removed from greatness I am. But, be that as it may, I intend to approach every problem with good-will in my heart instead of hatred.

"If I am misunderstood, and another course is demanded of me, then I shall accept, as I must, what fate may have politically in store for me.. But I will not change my policy of good-will, even though it lead to my defeat for another term to the presidency and my relegation to private life."

Only Thus

THE sum of the whole matter is this, that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the spirit of Christ, and being made free and happy by the practices which spring out of that spirit. Only thus can discontent be driven out and all the shadows lifted from the road ahead.

Fresh from the Field

The First Church of Wilmington, Ohio, celebrated its seventieth anniversary Oct. 7-14 with an appropriate program.

Howard A. Vernon, pastor of Judson Memorial Church, Minneapolis, writes that the work there moves with much encouragement and for the first time in his ministry he is preaching to a crowded auditorium.

When women will there's a way. Unable to meet the price asked by painters for painting the Uniondale Chapel of East Hempstead, N. Y., the seventeen members of the Ladies' Aid Society donned overalls and knickers, and set about the work of painting the chapel themselves.

While in annual session at Oak Park, Ill., Oct. 15-18, the Illinois State Convention was presented with a $150,000 hospital at Robinson, Ill. Dr. A. W. Allen, of that town, who at one time had planned to study for the Baptist ministry, was the donor.

A request for clothing and money for the missionaries and Japanese Christians who have been made destitute by the earthquake and fire, sent out by the New England Board of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, was met with such hearty response that large crates of gifts were sent Oct. 6 by express. In view of the expense of sending by express and the slowness of freight, it is asked that each church send its gifts by parcel post addressed to Rev. R. A. Thomson, treasurer Baptist Mission, Kobe, Japan. Every parcel must be marked plainly "Japan Relief."

Dr. John Clifford writes: "It appears that some of our friends in America have been disturbed by the accounts of the "conversations" which have taken place between the Archbishops of Canterbury and of York and two or three Bishops of the Church of England, and several of the leaders of the Free Churches, on the subject of organic reunion between the churches represented. Permit me to assure our Baptist brethren that there is not the slightest need for anxiety concerning British Baptists. Nothing will come of these talks in the way of reunion. No Baptist church is committed to them; no Baptist assembly or council. Baptists may be trusted to stand fast in the truth by which they have been made free from sacerdotalism. To any appeals to compromise they will say with Paul, "To which we gave place by subjection—no—not for an hour—that the truth of the gospel may remain with men." Personally I am sure that whilst the Baptists of Great Britain and Ireland are eager for unity of action with all men for the maintenance of international peace and brotherhood, the suppression of the drink traffic, betting and gambling, and other social vices, they will be entirely loyal to the essentially vital principles of the Stockholm memorandum."

The Tenth Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio, has called Dr. T. J. Hopkins of Adrian, Mich., as pastor. Rev. H. O. Rowlands has ministered to the church for a year.

From Mrs. L. E. Gay, of Cuthbert, Ga., Mercer University at Macon has received a trust fund of $10,000, the proceeds of which will go to aid ministerial students of that institution in completing their education.

Among the new students at Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa., is Miss Sonia A. Frey, daughter of Dr. John Alexander Frey of Latvia; Miss Margarida Fralick Reno, daughter of Rev. Loren M. Reno, missionary of the Southern Convention and head of a school in Victoria, Brazil; and Mr. Charles BaThein, son of Saya U Tein Pe, professor in Judson College, Rangoon, Burma.

Want to Forget Birthdays

"Twenty-five years in heaven" reads a letter which recently came to our desk calling attention to the anniversary of the death of D. L. Moody. Can it be that we are to count our anniversaries in heaven? We sincerely hope not. It would certainly be a tedious task when we got up into the hundreds of thousands and then on and on. Just think of the candles it would take! Here we are all too frequently reminded of the passing years. Do you realize that you should be prepared to pay for another year's subscription to THE BAPTIST and Missions very soon. Perhaps you overlooked the reminder and that duty is overdue.

Killam's Kollum

Editor's Life Saved Again

How? Read the announcement of the committee on THE BAPTIST in this issue. We are human enough to like to hear nice things said about us, but we have sense enough to distinguish between a reason and an occasion. The reason for securing a new editor was not, primarily, that there was any danger to the present editor's anatomy, but that the committee felt that no one man can give the denomination the kind of a newspaper it deserves. And the committee is right. No one is in a position to know better than the editor of this kollum the conditions under which the paper has been made during the past two years. Four full-grown men gave themselves to the enterprise at its beginning and tens of thousands of denominational money were spent upon the production of the paper. For many, many months there has been but one man on the job and the paper has been published without denominational subsidy and at a slight profit. A former editor often spoke of himself as a "galley slave," and we also took upon ourselves his responsibility. No, kind friends, we are not "crushed." Like an automobile tire we can take long punishment and still keep running.

May Be Saved Further Strain

We are not yet quite sure as to the fate of this kollum. From things gathered at a recent conference it would seem that its life may be near its close. If it crumbles to dust, it will not be due to any malice on the part of the committee or the new editor, but solely to relieve the present editor of the physical, intellectual and spiritual strain of writing this page! Incidentally, it may also relieve the strain upon the sensibilities of some of the readers.

Editor One to Feel Loss

The readers will not miss the kollum as much as the editor will. He will feel a strange sense of loss. Here has been the one place where he has always felt perfectly free to tell the truth. We have long felt that some time we should like to become editor of a Baptist newspaper where every column should have the freedom of Killam's Kollum. Perhaps that is not feasible, but it is a fond dream. And some dreams do come true. Even the kollum crushed to earth may rise again.

stitute a combination of opportunities and of forces adapted to meet them that quicken my imagination and stir my blood each time I think of them."

Ralph B. Davis, pastor of the Second Church, North Grafton, Mass., has accepted the call of the church at Roxboro, Mass.

At a special business meeting the Pleasant Street Church, Worcester, Mass., voted to continue its own organization and not unite with the Newton Square Church. The Pleasant Street Church will remain in its present downtown location where it feels that it can render larger service to a larger number of people.

Rev. Henry C. Swearingen, pastor of the Hope Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn., recently declined to become general secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education. His reason for his refusal to accept this higher position is that he feels he can promote the general work of the denomination more effectively through the pastorate than through one agency.

The eighth anniversary of the ministry of W. F. Meyer at the Leominster Church, Mass., was recently celebrated. During Mr. Meyer's pastorate outside benevolences have increased from $1,000 to $4,000, extensive improvements were made on the building and school work has been greatly enlarged. The new $20,000 church school building for classes, social and athletic purposes will soon be ready for occupancy.

Rev. Moses B. Sloan, the nestor of the Pittsburgh, Pa., ministers, for many years the efficient chaplain of the Baptist Orphanage and Home of Western Pennsylvania, has resigned that position. In accepting his resignation, the board of directors have elected him chaplain emeritus. Mr. Sloan is now under treatment at Niles, Michigan, for cataract of both eyes, with every indication of a permanent cure. He was a classmate at Shurtleff College of the late James M. Stifler, and served with him in Company D, 133 Regiment, Illinois Infantry in the Civil War.

An interesting experiment in broadcasting a Bible class session will be conducted by the Radio Corporation of America, sending out from the WJY station, New York City, for three Sundays, Oct. 14 and 21 and Nov. 4. The session will last form 2:30 until 3:15. This undertaking was arranged by the Rev. Stanley Davis, New York secretary of the board of Sunday schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at the request of Mr. Charles Popinoe of the Radio Corporation of America. The lessons exposition will be taught by outstanding Sunday-school leaders of different denominations. The teacher for Oct. 14 was W. G. Landes, secretary of the Worlds' Sunday School Association. On Oct. 21, the teacher will be Rev. Otto F. Bartholow, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Mt. Vernon and the teacher of one of the largest Bible classes in the United States. On Nov. 4 the teacher will be Nolan R. Best, the editor of the Continent, the national Presbyterian weekly. Those interested are asked to listen in and respond by sending word to the Radio Corporation if they have enjoyed and appreciated the service. The company feels that if such broadcasting meets a demand it will doubtless be made a Sunday feature.

Mary Ella Graif, wife of Dr. Philip Graif, Seattle, Wash., died Sept. 28. Dr. Ambrose Bailey conducted the services, assisted by T. E. Summers and George V. McClure.

Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., thus far has raised $1,997 as a fund toward missionary reconstruction in Japan in response to the appeals of the two foreign mission societies. Doctor Abernethy feels that the amount will exceed $2,000.

Rev. Joe P. Jacobs, for four years treasurer of William Jewell College, recently resigned. Mr. Jacobs was especially instrumental in forming and carrying out plans for using chapel cars, and for years he was in charge of chapel car, "Messenger of Peace." He later became general superintendent of the missionary work of the Publication Society for thirteen states.

In this issue there appears a statement from the beloved John Clifford, which will be read with deep interest by American Baptists. Although he lacks only a few years of standing at the ninetieth mile post in his useful career, he still has a clarion voice that he lifts publicly and privately for those principles for which he has so long contended. American Baptists will unite in the hope that Doctor John Clifford, whose name is a synonym on both sides of the Atlantic for much that is best in our Baptist history, will enjoy his youthful enthusiasm and optimism for many years to come.

The purpose of the general visitation carried on by the members of the Temple Church, Los Angeles, is stated in the calendar of that church which proposed to make 1,500 visits during the first week of October. "This is to be purely a fellowship visit. You are urged to do the following things: 1. Go with a cheerful heart and a smiling face. 2. Make the call one entirely of good fellowship and friendship. 3. Invite those you call upon to come to the rally service next Sunday. 4. If the member you are calling upon is not active in the life of the church, invite him or her to attend regularly the services on Sunday and also on Wednesday night. Urge the importance of every member taking some part in the organized work of the church. Explain the importance of every one being loyal to Christ and the church. If Temple Church is to do its work, then it must have the cooperation of every loyal member. It is hoped that this fellowship visitation will get our big membership better acquainted with one another and result in a heartier and more enthusiastic cooperation the coming year than ever before in the history of our church."

Doctor Earl, Editor

WE have long felt that it is asking too much of Mr. Killam to leave him to carry both the business and editorial responsibility of THE BAPTIST. He has done it well, at heavy cost to himself. Few among us could have borne the burden so long and so successfully. We cannot afford to take the risk of crushing him. The Administrative Committee has therefore authorized us to enlist a colleague.

We are glad to announce that Dr. John A. Earl, pastor of the First Baptist Church of St. Paul, Minnesota, has accepted the position of joint editor, and will begin his work at an early day.

JOHN A. EARL

Doctor Earl has had a rich and wide experience of active service. As pastor, as president of Des Moines College and as evangelist he has come into close personal touch with a very large number of our people. His expositions of the Sunday-school lessons have been a constant help to a multitude of our workers. By his genuine spiritual experience, his conviction of positive truth together with irenic and fraternal spirit, he has won the confidence of a very wide circle of our fellowship.

We anticipate that Doctor Earl and Mr. Killam, in collaboration, will make THE BAPTIST a still more potent factor in our work for the kingdom of our Lord.

Interpreter of Jesus

EARLY and uncontradicted tradition declares that Mark, the author of the second gospel, was "interpreter of Peter." There is some diversity of opinion as to the precise meaning of the expression in this instance, but good authority assigns to it very much its customary signification, that of one who makes a speaker's message more intelligible to his hearers, or who translates a writer's language into one more familiar to the reader, or perhaps one who serves as does an oriental dragoman, functioning as guide, interpreter and business manager for the traveler in a strange land.

It is a fascinating thing to follow out in Mark's gospel the many incidental confirmations of the uniform tradition that Mark is in the main giving in his basic gospel the world's supreme story as it fell from the lips of Peter, whether in his public discourses or in the intimate privacy of his relations with John Mark whom he affectionately calls "my son." And it is an affecting and stimulating thing to note how Mark, who had made a partial failure of his first attempt at public Christian service, so splendidly recovers himself and not merely becomes the intimate companion and helper and the mouthpiece for all ages of the great apostle Peter but is reinstated in the esteem of the still greater apostle, Paul, who had earlier decided that young Mark was a failure.

But what concerns us more closely is the fact that the Christian minister, and indeed every Christian, may and must become an interpreter of Jesus if the world is at all to understand him.

Jesus needed no interpreter when on earth. He himself was the supreme interpreter of the heart of God and of its message to the heart of man. That is the meaning of the incarnation. What no writing however profound, precise and logical could accomplish and no demonstration of divine power in nature could prove, Christ coming in the garb of humanity was able to do, namely, to interpret God to man, and to reconcile man to God. But after Christ's departure from earth and especially now that nineteen centuries have passed and the circling world has changed its customs and ways of thought almost beyond recognition, Christ and his gospel need an ever-fresh interpretation to the hearts of this age which has journeyed so far from Galilean days and first-century ways in everything except its sin and its need of God.

And Jesus provided that he should never lack an interpreter. It was first to be Peter and the others who had intimately known him, who after Christ's brief personal ministry was ended were to interpret him and his gospel to humanity. And then those who caught the fire and glow of the transformed life from Peter and his companions were to kindle it in other hearts and they in still others down throughout all time. It is not the church nor a priesthood nor a creed which is primarily charged with the great duty and high honor of interpreting Jesus; it is the individual men and women and children who have been redeemed through him who are to interpret by their lives to the world the meaning of Jesus.

In an important sense there is to be a perpetual incarnation of Jesus in the lives of his true followers. If it became essential that God incarnate himself and his supreme message to mankind in a human life it has never ceased to be essential that redeemed human lives should be the media through which chiefly the message and transforming power of Jesus Christ should be passed on to other souls all down through time. It is not a mysterious prerogative of the church as a great institution; it is not some mysterious authority conferred upon a priestly class by the touch of bishops' hands in an unbroken episcopal succession from Peter down; it is the function of each redeemed soul to interpret his Redeemer to other souls who do not know him. That is the genetic principle of Christianity.

THE authoritative record of Christ's life and message are found in the New Testament. We are to translate the whole sacred record into its permanent terms and to deduce the principles which guide humanity in the changing circumstances and unforeseen emergencies of each age; it will never fail us. But for the bringing of individual human souls into acquaintance with Jesus and his transforming power the supreme method involves the touch of a human hand, the sound of a human voice, the beating of a human heart. "How can I understand the Scripture except some one shall guide me?" was the Ethiopian treasurer's pathetic appeal to deacon Philip. And just as the early church found that its deacons were useful not merely for serving tables and settling grievances but to mediate that profoundest of human experiences, the saving acquaintance of a soul with Jesus, so our deacons today and all our laymen, and our women and child-Christians too, as well as our pastors, must become interpreters of Jesus to those who have never really known his face or understood his voice. This is the meaning of the laymen's movement, of our successive evangelistic goals, nay—of every least church of Jesus Christ and of the Great Commission under which we exist and do business.

Doctor Earl, Editor

ON another page will be found the announcement of the committee on THE BAPTIST with reference to the new editor of the paper. For a year and a half the efforts of the committee have been centered upon this difficult task. Many plans have miscarried, and it was with a sense of relief that the committee came to a unanimous decision in the matter of inviting Dr. John A. Earl to assume the position of joint editor.

For a period approaching two years, the managing editor has been editor, editor-in-chief, business manager and office boy, as occasion demanded. He will, for the present, remain with the paper.

Doctor Earl has many friends and with his experience in various phases of denominational life and with opportunity to devote himself almost exclusively to editorial work, he should be able to produce the better paper which the denomination deserves. From our own experience we know that the new editor will have the sympathetic support of a great host of devoted readers who love THE BAPTIST for its works' sake. Doctor Earl has resigned as pastor of the First Church, St. Paul, and will begin his new work Nov. 1.

A Lack of Knowledge

THE membership of the average local church has not been sufficiently educated in spiritual things to enable it to fill a worthy sphere in the Christian enterprise of today. We recently heard a prominent church leader say that about 10 per cent of Baptist church members might be able to define the principles that commonly distinguish a Baptist, but 90 per cent of the membership was so ignorant of the real Baptist position that they would glibly say they joined the Baptist church because they believed in immersion. Under such a statement they might just as well have joined a number of other Christian groups that follow this practice. The fact that we practice immersion because we believe the Bible to be the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice is quite outside their ken. This misapprehension ought not to be. Another leader made an assertion at the same time that startled us. He said that by far the larger part of our church members did not know that the giving of money was not a matter of voluntaryism to a Christian, but was an absolute mandate under the Lordship of Christ and our consequent stewardship.

It is certain that many church members give as they please, and many of them please not to give at all. If the individual Christian is a steward and knows it, there could be only one result and that would be some definite and loving response to the desires of our Lord and Master. Many a church member declines to give to the missionary enterprise at home and abroad on the ground that he does not believe in missions. To a regenerated soul the great matter of moment is what his Saviour and Lord believes and tells him to do. Once he knows this, there is nothing left but to do it whether it pleases or displeases him. We have thought a great deal lately about the large number of latent and non-participating church members and have come to the conclusion that the reason for this is a lack of knowledge on their part. Their lack of knowledge is the result of inadequate methods of education in the local churches. We, therefore, commend heartily this year's program of the Board of Promotion which calls for a real advance educational movement in the knowledge and practice of Christian stewardship. The hope for a victorious future lies in the realization of our indivdual stewardship.

Love in Action

LOVE expressed is love deepened and increased; for love grows not by locking it up in your heart and life, but by using it whenever possible. Christianity is love for God through faith in Jesus Christ, expressing itself in a ministry for all mankind. Christ Jesus died to save lost souls. To accomplish this salvation he works in three main ways—through the word of God, through the spirit of God and through saved people.

The importance of the work of the Christian is easily apparent if the great plan of salvation is to be made effective, for we are to be the main carrier of and witness for the word of God and the power of the spirit to convict of sin and to convert. To profess love for God and then to fail to love our fellow men so that we are willing that they should be lost in trespasses and sins is to belie our every profession. To love our fellow men enough to help save them is a fine proof that we ourselves are hidden with God through faith in Jesus Christ. That is love in action. It is a fine exposition and demonstration of real Christianity. But there is another aspect of love in action that concerns us just now. It is a very wise and wonderful provision that our Father has made in the organization of a family home and a church home. Home life and home loves are rich and lasting for a family circle. The church home was meant to be equally as rich and lasting in its expressions of love in action between the like-minded who voluntarily sought membership in its spiritual circle. In the early days of Christianity in those church households of faith, the love in action caused the world outside to marvel. That is not always the case now and sometimes it would even seem that love had gone out of action in many a local church. Our non-resident membership is mostly nothing but a failure of love to act for the good of those far-away brothers and sisters who will die if some do not love them enough to save them from their life of absenteeism and unfulfilled fellowships.

Our non-worshipping and non-giving members are another example of the failure of love to get into action. People voluntarily join our church home and pledge themselves in all love to help the household care for each other, but in too many cases the pledge is the end of the matter. Love in action will save 85 per cent of these people and will reveal the unsaved condition of the others. Let love get into action at once.

Child Labor

THE following comment on the proposed child labor amendment to the federal constitution will be recognized as clipped from the Literary Digest of a week ago. It is a matter upon which Christian people should be thoroughly alive.

"It may startle people who think child labor is a thing of the past in America, or is confined to a few dark districts, to learn that it has spread to all parts of our land and is growing rapidly under the present demand for labor. The beet-fields, the cotton-fields, the factory, the mine, and piece-work in the home are claiming, we are told, a large number of distorted little bodies, vacant minds and starved souls, despite the fact that for twenty-five years organized effort has been directed against the extravagant grinding of America's "seed-corn." Twice has Congress passed remedial legislation for the silent army of child workers, now numbering more than a million, and as many times has it been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now a baker's dozen of religious and social welfare organizations, including the American Federation of Labor, and backed by powerful press support, will seek in the next Congress the passage of a resolution to amend the Constitution so as to give 'at least a minimum standard of protection for the child worker.' "

Not Pleased by This Flattery

A CORDIAL article in the Saturday Evening Post about foreign missionaries was no doubt read with gratification by thousands of Americans who believe in missions and missionaries. The author manifestly had a keen appreciation for the devotion and the character of these agents of religion. But the particular thing that he chose to praise them for is quite outside the objects for which the churches maintain them abroad. The great business value of missions for the promotion of American trade was what aroused the enthusiasm of this writer. Sam Higginbottom in India, whose enterprising introduction of better farming methods has resulted in the sale of enormous quantities of American agricultural machinery to Indian purchasers, was naturally the article's outstanding illustration. And the whole tone of the discussion was highly complimentary to him and all his kind. Yet we are quite sure that the Epworth Herald is right in saying that the missionaries themselves, when they see the article, won't like it. Says Dr. Brummitt, the Herald editor:

"Missionaries do not care to be known as trade promoters. They are glad to be recognized as teachers, as preachers, as doctors, or in whatever capacities they may serve. But it is always difficult to convince the people that missionary work is unselfish work and make them understand that the missionary has no ax to grind. Strange as it may seem to us, the more thoughtful men in non-Christian lands have no great hankering that their countrymen shall fall in love with the contents of American mail order catalogs. It is a perpetual effort for the missionary to keep himself free from suspicion as a drummer for American trade. To proclaim him as an advance agent of America's export business is to pay him a doubtful compliment and subject him to a great deal of native criticism which cannot easily be refuted. It is all the more distasteful because it obscures the real work of the missionary. He is dealing with invisible and intangible values."—The Continent.

Need to Know a Saviour

THE American Israelite, a widely circulated Jewish weekly, says:

"Christianity may truly be said to consist of two parts, Jewish and pagan. What Jesus actually taught was the Judaism of Moses and the prophets. That which was added long after his death by his disciples and followers, now accepted as fundamentals by the churches, is paganism, pure and simple."

When a representative paper speaks editorially in this manner it throws some light on the problem we face in seeking to evangelize the Jews. The difficulty should not keep us from earnest, prayerful efforts to help these folks to know Jesus, not only as a teacher of Moses and the prophets, but as Saviour and Lord.

Christianity and the Pioneer

THERE is the religion which is a shelter from the stormy blast.

There is the religion which sends a man out with pulses bounding to face storm and danger.

It is fortunate that in this strenuous world of ours we can retire within the veil, go into the silence, feel the calm and peace and happiness of the retreat.

But the essence of religion is pushing out into the unknown realms of God. For that God put us here. Clinging to the cross of Christ, as Dr. Peabody has told us, does not express all of Christianity. Taking up and bearing the cross better expresses it.

And the pioneer who knows both the cross and the crucifixion knows also a peace which passes all understanding.—Universalist Leader.

Take Care of Your Brain

DR. JOHN TIMOTHY STONE writing in the Continent says: "One of the finest tributes paid to Robertson Nicoll was; 'He made every one think who read him.' Recently a friend wrote from San Francisco: 'I have taken up again going regularly to church. Life now means more to me and our minister is helping me think straight and strong.' Such a church or preacher is a power in any city or community because it has this influence on the individual.

Our minds have been wandering Arabs too long. We cannot live in the desert; we are in the city and town, and the problems of human society which we must help to meet need the best brain as well as best brawn in the world.

The Minister in His Relations outside the Church

The personal experience of Russell H. Bready as told by him at the Detroit preachers' meeting, June 4, 1923.

THE minister may discover his greatest power in his relations outside the church, and he may discover his greatest dangers. Many a minister in his efforts to get away from the monk, and the traditional parson, has thrown away his real crown and scepter in his frenzy to qualify as a good mixer. The average preacher, instead of sitting on his throne, is sitting on committees, on boards of directors, of chambers of commerce, and noon-day clubs, lodge offices, community drives, to say nothing of a score of committees in the church, until most of us are liable to die of committeeitis. When we ascend the throne on Sunday morning, when we ought to be prepared to sound Gabriel's trumpet, we shoot a popgun, and when we ought to be wearing the golden crown of the ambassadorship of the Son of God, we have a tinfoil crown representing about twenty-three committees.

It is easy to theorize but I have passed through an experience, that, so far as I know, no one else in our ranks has passed through. I am a member of at least six lodges. During my time in Pontiac, I have been a director in the Chamber of Commerce, president of the United Community Fund for three years, serving my third year as city commissioner, and for two years of this time mayor pro tem. It seems that this might qualify me to speak with some degree of authority on the question of the relations of the minister outside the church. If after this experience I can be any help to any of my brethren in the ministry who have grown discontented with their work, who have been influenced by the taunt that we are narrow men, single track men, idealists, and help them to see that they already have the greatest task in the community, that they are already on the greatest throne, and that the ministry is in itself such a unique, sacred office representing such delicate relations that no office in their city can add anything to their power and influence, but that it will rather subtract from it—if I can help any body to attack the problems of the world and the sin of the world from the standpoint of the ministry, then I shall be satisfied to have suffered all the penalties that I have suffered in this unusual experience.

The Unusual Man

The minister is the last man who ought to occupy any public offices. I even exclude lodge offices. We have fallen for a lot of foolish jabber about the minister being just like other men. I have discovered that he is not to be like other men. He must always be the unusual man. It is argued that he must dress just like other men, and that, getting away from all clerical appearance, he gets closer to the common people. Now we have ice-cream trousers in the pulpit, red neckties, belts, colored shirts, golf shoes and business suits. It is a doubtful question to say the least, but there is some loss in that the minister is now lost in the crowd. Some ministers go to lodge, they indulge in the same kind of stories as other men, and smoke with them, and it is all to gain that title, "a jolly good fellow with all the rest of us."

Then we say that the ministers are not practical; that they are idealists. I have indulged in this criticism in the past myself. The minister must be an idealist. If the world loses all of its idealists—men who dare to announce principles ahead of the day, who dare to get in advance of the procession, then the world will come to a standstill. Jesus Christ announced ideals that after 2,000 years the world has not reached yet. If we announce and proclaim these same ideals we must expect to be called impractical idealists.

I am a firm believer in the minister getting a relationship everywhere he can. Let us raise at once a very practical question: What about the minister's relation to lodges? I am in favor of the minister being a member of the lodge, providing he will remember that when he crosses the lodge threshold he is still a minister. Any pastor who goes into a lodge room, and merely takes it for granted that because he is behind the four walls of the lodge he has a license to divest himself of the dignity of his office had better keep out of lodges. Any minister who just floats with the current of the lodge room is wasting his time in being there at all. I can say some things to men in the lodge room that I could not say to them outside. I have known ministers who divested themselves of all they are on the outside when once inside the lodge room. I mean by all this that a minister has no right to forget his mission in the lodge room. The lodge room presents a fine opportunity to meet men, to be perfectly natural with men and to have a genuine good time with them up to a certain point. But I have seen preachers who have imagined that they were doing a lot of good by playing the buffoon in the lodge room by such acts as throwing biscuits at men sitting at other tables.

"WE Americans can only do our allotted task well if we face it steadily and bravely, seeing but not fearing the dangers. Above all we must stand shoulder to shoulder, not asking for the ancestry or creed of our comrades, but only demanding that they be in truth Americans, and that we all work together, heart, hand and head, for the honor and the greatness of our common country."—Theodore Roosevelt.

I do not mean that a minister ought to go into such a place as if he had one foot in the grave and the other one on a banana peel. It is entirely possible to move in such a crowd, and scatter sunshine, to be a good story teller. The men despise a minister who tells a vulgar story. It is possible as a member of the order, if the minister has the right kind of backbone, to hammer home some great truths, as a man outside could not do. But the minister who thinks, because he is alone with a crowd of men, that he will win that crowd and do more good by divesting himself of his ministerial office and the dignity that men expect of his office, is neither a credit to the lodge nor to the ministry.

A pastor makes a great mistake in accepting office in any lodge. A minister had better divest himself of all secret society emblems when he enters the pulpit. He is then on the throne of the most sacred institution on the earth; if he wears any emblem at all, let it be only the emblem or the flag of the faith, the cross.

Lodge Office

The minister ought not to hold a lodge office because there are other men who desire that kind of training and opportunity, and the minister does not need it. He ought not to spend any time learning the ritual of any lodge. He has too many tremendous tasks on hand. If he holds a lodge office he is under obligation to be there with regularity; this all tends to make a certain class of men feel that if a lodge office is important enough for a minister to fill every week, the lodge is important enough to serve them as their church.

We represent so much of two worlds, so much of the reconstruction and redemption of human society, that whenever I see a minister filling a lodge office it seems very much to me like a fire department rushing along the street toward a great fire, but stopping to watch a baseball game on a corner lot.

I object to the pastor holding a lodge office on still another ground—all his people in the church have equal rights in him. They have no right to impose their individual opinions on him. He has a perfect right to be a member of the lodge; that is his own business. But when he assumes office, and wears the emblems in the pulpit, that means that he has become so absorbed in that fraternity that people who do not like the lodge have a right to feel, even recognizing his right to be a member, that their pastor ought not to flaunt it in their faces. The men who belong to the lodge know full well that he is a member, but the less the minister flaunts and advertises it to the people the better. To them he is pastor and minister and not a lodge man at all.

After having served as a director of the Chamber of Commerce, I should advise against that, though not as strongly as against a lodge office. Over the country the masses of the people are prejudiced against the Chamber of Commerce. They look on it as an organization of aristocrats, of men whose interests are very largely against the interests of the laboring men. This assumption is false; no city can thrive the way it ought to, without a thriving Chamber of Commerce. However, the sentiment I have described prevails. God knows that there is already enough false propaganda that the church is the organization of the classes, that its interests are entirely with capital, without our doing anything to confirm that false doctrine. The fact is that the directorate of the average Chamber of Commerce is composed largely of bankers, manufacturers and professional men. The outside world says their interests are entirely with capital. I contend that the minister ought to be a member of the Chamber of Commerce and show the interest of both himself and his church in the material welfare of the city. There will be times, when, if he is a member, he can utter with good grace—not from the standpoint of a knocker, but as a booster—the warning that there is as great danger that a city lose its soul, as with an individual, if its program of development is only material—more factories, more population, so that we can be a bigger city.

The minister can be a clarion voice, but he had better keep off the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, for he will lose the confidence and respect of hundreds of men who have these false ideas about the organization. It is their opportunity to say that he "trains with the wealthy, with the manufacturer and the banker, he is not one of us." Many a gateway of service will be closed to lives that are just as precious in the sight of God as the souls of the men sitting at the board of directors' table or the Chamber of Commerce. Again I say to pastors, have your relation outside the church in the Board of Commerce. It will help to keep you in touch with men, their troubles and their problems, it will help to develop you, and keep you a regular red-blooded man—but keep out of office.

Civic Office and the Minister

How often it is said to me, "what a great thing it is to you, and for the city, that as a minister you sit on the city commission." Many add "We have so long tried to get good men to go into office, this is the kind of thing we must have." I can now prove that the minister is the last man who ought to occupy civic office, not alone for his sake, but for the sake of the church, and, yes, for the sake of the city itself. I have yet to find the first person to deny it after I have stated the facts as I now know them.

It will surprise you when I am frank enough to say that I am not the power for civic righteousness in office that I was out of office. The reason for this is I have discovered that in office, when I set up certain ideals of civic righteousness, the reaction on the part of the people is, "Do not talk about it, go and do it!" They even begin to demand the impossible, because of the dual relationship. They expect a minister in such an office to erect the pearly gates, and build the golden streets clear across the city.

Knowing that all that I say is robbed of its power, unless I make the superhuman effort to put all the civic ideals into operation, therefore the tendency is not to say it at all. The great duty of the minister is to be the prophet of the law, and not the administrator. Civic office will rob his pulpit of its power, because after the minister is in office, he knows the real obstacles in the way of putting all the principles he preaches into actual operation. He even knows that he cannot, so he gradually finds himself giving up the ideals and settling down to that basis of the man in office, figuring out what can be done to handle this issue for the present.

The minister must never be content with conditions as they are; he must struggle for, preach for, pray for conditions as they ought to be. He must go ahead of the officeholders of his day, saying, "Prepare ye the way," proclaiming that this is what must be tomorrow, setting up ideals that are higher than the prevailing ideals of the day in which we inspire men to do this, rather than to actual responsibility of the law.

The supreme business of the minister must not be the law and the power of office, but it must be going on ahead declaring grace and redemption and regeneration of society, and let those coming on behind do the chores of the mere offices of city hall and legislature. They will do them better if the prophet and the priest and the preacher are at the head of their high ideals. Civic office changes the man in the pulpit from a prophet and a creator of ideals to a mere dealer in the stern realities of the present day. It is more effective to clean the cistern than it is to whitewash the pump, so it is more effective for human good, to help redeem society, to transform its ideals, to change its affections, than it is either to make laws or directly enforce them. It is the business of the minister to inspire men to do this, rather than to do it himself.

Embarrassing Conflicts

Again it is more serious for people to have trouble with the minister than for any other man. Think of the disappointed office seeker; if the minister had anything to do with his disappointment, it is a serious thing for that man's moral and spiritual welfare. Think of all the lines that must be crossed in the question of taxation, building a city budget, in the administration of parks, police and fire departments, city hospital, water works, administration of traffic, the decisions concerning the paving of streets, and the granting of franchises to the public corporations. Just imagine the opposition that is aroused, the ambitions and the plans that are frustrated. People are in trouble; if a minister is in office he is the one they will appeal to. If he sees that he cannot grant their plea in accord with justice they never forgive him. It is better for any person to have this kind of conflict with any other man, rather than the minister.

Take as an illustration, this street upon which the people are divided concerning its being paved. The feeling is intense. The residents of that street crowd the city hall insisting that it shall be paved, or that it shall not. Here is a man who wants his taxes rebated; he is denied. It is a great mistake for these people on either side to come to church and find in their pulpit the man who is involved in their controversy. Such people in the congregation cannot rise above their hurt, and the help that ought to come from the hour of prayer cannot come because the entire civic trouble is centered right there in the pulpit.

One day there was a committee of citizens in the church, protesting a pavement. The conversation was intense; their plea was impassioned. It was intense for me and in the midst of that I was called to the city hospital where a soul was hovering between two worlds. The transformation was too sudden, I could not shift gears quickly enough. The privilege of helping to smooth the pathway between the worlds for a soul is greater than helping to build all the pavements in the city.

No man can be the right kind of a pastor and occupy civic office. Over and over and again, I have been defeated in a home. It is wonderful how many people have complaints. It is strange how many think that their taxes are too high, and when I have entered the home on entirely another issue, it is their chance, to tell me what they think, and it results in my real mission being defeated. The office makes it impossible to pass around the city, in and out of the homes, as a minister.

This kind of relation not alone makes the minister less effective with his church but he is not as effective as other men for the city. We do not want men who are tied up to the public corporations in office; they cannot be elected because the public will not trust them—they fear that they will serve the corporation first and the public second. I have found that there is a sense in which a minister is in the same position as a corporation man. It is such a prime principle of Americanism, the separation of the church and the state, that whenever a minister is in office, many people think that he represents the church more than he does the general public. With the masses of the people outside all the churches and then with the masses of people in all the other churches, there comes at once the feeling that the particular ecclesiastical system represented by this clerical politician has an undue advantage, and he finds that certain prejudices begin to combine their power against him. People will combine more quickly at this point than at any other.

Civil Power vs. Spiritual Power

There is one great historical truth that stands out in all history. Any attempt on the part of the church or its clergy to sway civic power has always resulted in the loss of spiritual power. If the Roman church only knew it, the greatest blessing that ever came to it is the downfall of its temporal power. Temporal power and spiritual power will not sit on the same throne. I have discovered this to be true in a literal way. In just the proportion that my civil power rose in the city, my spiritual power went down. As I took the power to make men do certain things by police power, then the spiritual power over these same men ceased.

Take the man who must be removed from office; no matter how right it may be, if the minister is related to it there will never be again any moral or spiritual power over that life. I now feel that it is far more important to perform the real mission of the gospel than it is to straighten up or out any police force. The world will never be redeemed by police power, but by the power of the cross. Any man who becomes entangled with the administration of police or civic power cannot administer with the right spirit that kingdom that is not of this world. It is a fundamental law that the minister of Christ must keep free from the administration of temporal power.

With all this we want the minister to be a regular man, easy to approach, interested in everything that men are interested in, human enough to play golf, to fish, to be a baseball fan, to have relations in all the great organizations where his voice can be heard at times. He must take a deep interest in political affairs; he must help good men to be elected to office; he must let good men in office who do their duty know that he is for them.

One of the greatest lessons I have learned from my present office is the real secret of why so many in office do not do their duty. Three months ago, I made the move that closed all gambling in Pontiac. At once the bees began to buzz around my head. I was threatened, anonymous letters came. Men who are interested in the gambling business talked to me and protested the policy of law enforcement. I was the marked man. After I had been under this fire for one month I appeared before the Pontiac Pastors' Union, and made the statement, that at that hour, I had not heard from one church, nor from one men's Bible class, nor from one minister, saying, "Fine! We are with you, go to it, we will see you through." The pastors saw the situation and felt very badly about it. Resolutions were at once passed.

The next Sunday in the pulpit, I told my own congregation that by actual count more men had protested the enforcement of the gambling law personally to me, than had the people of my own church said, "Fine! We are with you." Of course that morning the chancel was filled with people, taking my hand, saying they knew that I knew where they stood, and they knew that I would go through all right. If I had stood in the city hall and advocated a wide-open city, every pulpit in the city would have opened fire on me the next Sunday. My own church would have risen in arms. But when I did my duty, there was supreme silence. Step on sin and it squeals, but the saints are quiet.

If I were looking for further political office this is where I would be: If I strictly enforced the law, I would have the bitter opposition of the pool room element, the gang that is calling for the modification of the Volstead Act and the Sunday golf crowd. I have learned that the church vote is not particularly appreciative of an official who stands for civic righteousness. The tendency of church people is to jump on the official who displeases them, but when he does his duty he does not even get a letter from them. The only letter I have received during the gambling crusade is from one citizen I had never met. But the other gang saw to it that I received letters.

If I were a politician looking for further honors, I could see that I could hold the church vote just by the general fact of being a church man. Also that if I did get into a hard fight with the liberal crowd, they would let me fight it alone.

I have had a Gethsemane, but today there is not a punch-board in Pontiac, the slot machines are gone, dice cannot even be shaken for the cigars. Fine as this is for the great moral and spiritual influence of the church and the minister, it would have been a thousand times better if a stalwart Christian layman had started this and I had backed him with the power of the pulpit. As it is now the mass of the people whose gambling amusements have been interfered with, think of me as having forced this because I am a minister, rather than because as a civic official I took an oath of office to do this. They cannot imagine any other reason for my doing it except that I am a preacher; so they hate the church in the wrong way.

Redeem the Time

TIME worketh, let me work, too,
Time undoeth, let me do.
As busy as time my work I ply
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

Sin worketh, let me work, too,
Sin undoeth, let me do.
As busy as sin my work I ply
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

Death worketh, let me work, too,
Death undoeth, let me do.
As busy as death my work I ply
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

Altar the Redemptive Force

In conclusion, I want to see the minister in every good and decent place, where there are people. Like the Master let it be said of us, that we eat with sinners. Break bread at the lodge table, be present in the school meeting, be interested in the Chamber of Commerce, attend a couple of times a year the sessions of the city government, be present twice a year at the opening exercises of the public schools, go to the meetings of the laboring classes, speak for them if you can get the chance. Let us have an overwhelming passion to take all the relations outside and connect them with the church, and with Christ. Not by might, not by force, not by office but by the Spirit, go everywhere incarnating Christ. We cannot do it by the power of office.

The pulpit is the throne; the altar is a greater redemptive force than is the government. The pulpit and the altar are the fortifications of our homes, our schools, our free press, our ideals of marriage. On the other side beat the waves of bolshevism, of radical socialism. If the altar and the pulpit break in this country, the waters and the floods will rush in and sweep away our civilization. The pulpit and the altar depend, so far as earthly power is concerned, on the ministry, on a special class of men, called of God and ordained for one cause and one kingdom.

The minister cannot get his power from office, for he has been given the keys of the kingdom, and on this ring of keys there is the key that will unlock every door of every problem of the world. We are not to allow the world to furnish us our keys, but we are to take the keys of the kingdom, not to go into seclusion with them, or behind monastery walls, but to go everywhere with them—into the lodge room, the halls of commerce, to the desk of the capitalist, to the forum of the laboring man, into the halls of learning, to the bedside of the dying, to the marriage altar, to the open tomb, into social service, so that all social service workers shall learn that the only real social service is redemption.

The church in any city is greater than the city hall, the ministers in any city are greater city builders than any city government. They do more to protect life and property than any police force. They keep more people away from the need of social service than any social bureau. If the voice of the church is ever silenced, the world is lost. No matter how imperfect the church is, it has always been the whitest light that has shone in any age. We are the successors of Moses as he ascended the mount to receive the law of God, and of Peter as he received the keys of the kingdom from Christ. We keep the ten commandments alive in the world and we carry the keys of the kingdom. We represent ultimate and final authority in the commandments and in the keys. The office of state and of municipality, or of Chamber of Commerce, or of fraternal order is to the office of the prophet and the priest and the preacher like a foothill in comparison with Mt. Shasta.

After my unusual experience, with a new conviction, I now know,

"Happy if with my latest breath,
I may but gasp his name;
Preach him to all, and cry in death;
Behold, behold the Lamb."

David Lloyd George on the European Situation

As heard by radio.

THE great English statesman delivered his greatest address in the United States before 12,000 persons assembled in the mammoth Dexter Park pavilion, Chicago. Thousands could not gain admission and these blocked the streets outside the "yards."

"Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen: It fills me with despair when I see such a gigantic gathering and when I realize that it is quite impossible that my feeble voice should extend over such a vast gathering," said Lloyd George.

"We hear you fine," responded a voice far back in the audience. (Laughter.)

"We did hear him fine"—the thousands of radio hearers. His clear, deliberate speech made it possible for the editor seated in his own home to record this vital address by the interesting Welshman, who for years has been "the greatest figure in the world's eye." David Lloyd George is also a member of our Baptist brotherhood.

"I WANT to say a word about the situation in Europe. I will state in as calm, unemotional, unrhetorical and fair a manner as I can this situation. Frankly, it is discouraging that five years after the great triumph Europe should be in such a condition of fear and disturbance. It is a matter of the greatest importance to business that Europe is in this state. Your country of vast resources is more independent of other nations than any other land under the sun. After all, even your rich country suffers because of the European situation. Two days ago I met representatives of the farmers who are suffering from the impairment of the purchasing power of Europe. This purchasing power is almost less than it has ever been. Europe is like a ragged man standing outside a well-filled show window. He's more in need of food than the well-fed who go in to purchase. He is more in need of clothes than the well-groomed who are able to pay. He cannot buy because he cannot pay. Why is it? The war has been over five years. In all the countries of Europe are frugal, hard-working people. Why is it that they are unable to buy and pay?

"First, Europe is exhausted after the most terrible war ever waged in the whole history of mankind. A summary of our losses shows that between ten and fifteen million of the best men, the picked men in prime of life were slaughtered on the battlefield. An almost equal number died as the direct results of this devastating conflict. Between forty and fifty thousand million pounds sterling was the cost in money. Currency, exchange, arrangements of business men, built up through centuries, are gone. Old methods of trading are gone. Hunger and plague still stalk through Europe. Bread riots are a common occurence and due to the efforts of men to secure bread for themselves and their hungry children. How many children have died no one can tell. The recording angel is keeping strict account of every little head that droops. It will take years if conditions are favorable to rebuild Europe; but they are not favorable. Often in the case of recovery from illness, local irritations retard convalescence. There are local irritations in Europe, the first of which was the Russian revolution, a great menace and a great peril. The Russian situation is improving and the fact that Russia met the nations at Genoa last year has had a quieting effect. They have kept their pact, but the irritation due to this situation is still grave.

"The second local irritation that has retarded the recovery of Europe is the question of the German reparations. Let me give you a word about that. What is the British view as to reparations? First, it is a traditional view. 1914 is not the first great war in which Britain has been engaged during the centuries. Britain fought Louis XIV; and Napoleon for over twenty years. In all these cases Britain emerged victoriously but in the dictation of peace terms has been a moderate and moderating influence. She has always opposed any effort to impose humiliating terms on the vanquished. Louis XIV was surprised at the moderation of the peace terms and after the battle of Waterloo, Wellington opposed the conditions which were humiliating to the vanquished. Britain takes her traditional position of moderation in victory. What is her stand?

"First, Germany having wantonly inflicted damage on her neighbors ought to make up the loss. By every law she is liable to damages to the limit of her capacity. That capacity must be reasonably interpreted. How does Britain interpret it? Let us illustrate by reference to the matter of Britain's debt to America. It calls for the transference of four thousand million dollars. It's not an easy matter to pay a debt of that magnitude, but this debt is not one-sixth of the sum assessed against Germany. It is of no use to say that a country has great assets, forests, mines, factories, railroads; these cannot be transferred from one country to another. The first obvious method must be to restore the credit of Germany. That is the British view. Great Britain has every interest to collect the German reparations. One-fifth of the vast sum has been allocated to her. Eight million tons of British shipping is at the bottom of the sea. Twenty-two per cent of the German reparations, according to agreement, is Britain's share. She is interested in the matter of reparations. If she takes a moderate view, it's because she knows it's the better way to gain her end. The cost of the war to Britain was more than forty thousand million dollars. We advanced eight thousand million to the allies. I am sorry to say they are in no hurry to pay. Our tax is the highest in the world. From the first we determined first to pay our way and to pay our debts. It's a costly habit. Not only is the taxation in Britain the highest in the world, but we pay our taxes. We have 1,300,000 unemployed. This situation costs the government four hundred million dollars annually to keep these workers from starvation.

"Why, therefore, do we not join in these expeditions to force Germany to pay? Our answer is, you get lots of trouble and no cash. Now, if Germany were shamming insolvency, if she pretended inability to pay, that is one matter and she should be made to pay. But is she? That's the question. Let us look at the situation calmly. Her iron, her coal in the West have been handed to France. Her potash to France; her coal in Silesia to Poland. She's a beaten country. Her prestige and her credit is gone. Her reparations are three times those assessed France in 1871. Can she pay? You cannot examine ledgers with bayonets. There are, however, ways. If she can pay, she must pay. It is to her interest to be done with it. Secretary Hughes in his New Haven address proposed a practical method to determine Germany's capacity to pay. It was a perfectly safe, sane and practical suggestion. Something happened to the Treaty of Versailles down in Washington. Why either France or Belgium should object to Secretary Hughes' suggestion, I cannot understand. When we find out the extent of Germany's ability we can then march together and compel her to pay. It seems to me to be the only way to settle the troublesome question. Sixty million people in Germany are being driven to despair. This is a fatal mistake. We want reparations but a revolution is not the way to get them. There is an old proverb that men to escape fire will jump into boiling water. There are movements to the right and to the left in Germany which fill us with concern. We want peace; we want reparations. The question of the invasion of the Ruhr has been faced before, and I regret that the wise policy followed in the past has not been adhered to. Justice as justice, is temperate; justice is always patient. Vengeance is justice without wisdom. That we want to avoid. I never will forget the high hopes of the first Armistice Day when the troops of all the allied countries marched through the streets of London. I regret that after these years these troublesome questions should darken our outlook. We have seen the dawn; we have not yet seen the dusk. Storm clouds are gathering over Europe. Great wisdom is needed by those who guide the ship of state."

The Authority of the Church

A Communion Meditation.

BY PHILETUS H. MCDOWELL

NO social custom is safe save under the sanction of religion.

Sanction—"Solemn and final confirmation by supreme authority; the sanction of the President and of the Senate gives validity to treaties."

Ancestral worship is safe as a social custom in China because it has the sanction of the national religion of China. The heart of Confucianism is worship of ancestors.

The caste system holds as a social custom in India against the world tides of socialism, democracy, equality and brotherhood because this rigid system of separation with its iron hand of taboo is at the very heart of the holy religion of India-Hinduism.

Students of sociology, ethnology and psychology unite in this solemn finding—no social custom is safe save under the sanction of religion. Therefore the frantic cry of so many students and writers of present day civilization, "Give us a religion or we perish!"

The tour of President Harding, his last; the speeches of President Harding, his last, turned out to be deeply religious and so much so that the president became, in his last days, a lay-preacher. Former President Wilson has broken the silence for the first time since the hand of paralysis stifled his powerful pen. In the August issue of the Atlantic Monthly let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: "The sum of the whole matter is this—that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it survives spiritually."

Take from the home the sanction of religion and you stab the home to death at its heart. When marriage becomes wholly civil and the home purely a social institution the family falls apart, lust rules instead of love, and the devils in hell declare a holiday.

Take from Sunday the sanction of religion and you have a weekly holiday, but no longer a holy day.

Back then to the conception of sanction. Back then to a new appraisment of and to a fresh proclaiming of authority. Here in this house of worship—"the authority of the church." Here before this communion table, with its precious burden bodying forth our crucified Redeemer—"the sanction of the Christ."

Religion is the holiest thing on earth. Religion is at home in the highest in man and has its realm in the deepest in man and therefore its command is absolute. The cry of the hour and the need of the hour is for the sanction of religion and for sanction in religion for the authority of religion and for authority in religion.

To be the pet of society and to be lionized at pink teas you must be broad; to be polite and to wear the chaplet of popular praise you must be liberal. These be the shibboleths "broad," "liberal" of present-day culture and civilization shaken to its very foundations!

To believe everything is to believe nothing. To accept all religions is to rob yourself of a religion. To believe that everything and everybody is good is to believe that there is no good. The man with many gods is a man without God. A man boasts there is no devil and proceeds to prove it by going to the devil. A man shoots the Ten Commandments to pieces by which he proves that he is himself shot to pieces in his own morals. Men laugh in loud boast that there is no hell and clinch their argument by raising hell on earth. New York City is the bragging bootlegger's paradise, and the governor seems to delight to have it so.

Learn now, before it is everlastingly too late, that broadness can easily become the maid servant of badness and that liberalism tends to looseness as naturally as the cutting of the anchor cable tends to drifting.

It is therefore altogether fit and proper to think and speak of the church of Christ in terms of authority. Indeed one must needs do this, and on the authority of Christ himself. In Matthew 16:13-19 and 18: 15-18 in the recorded teaching of Christ he used the word church. In each passage the church is set on high, given great honor and clothed with great authority. "I will build my church—the gates of hell shall not prevail against it—if he neglect to hear the church—whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." The church has the greatest honor of any institution on earth. The church has authority greater than that of any other organization on earth. The church has the greatest responsibility of any organization on earth. The church, Christ's own body, is unto honor and is clothed with authority.

I plead that we should take the church of Jesus Christ out of the classification "optional" and out of the catalog of "electives." The church is not left to choice, is required and is not an elective, is essential and therefore not optional. To make the church of Jesus Christ a matter of choice is to make it a matter of contempt. Bolshevik Protestants there are who treat the church as a door mat and who by their conduct spit upon it in the face of the community. Sunday is my day and I will use it as I will—and God and his day and Christ and his church—well, let them shift for themselves. My body I will serve, and my soul can go chase itself! The church—I attend if I please, and I give what I please, and I belong if I care to and when I choose to. Hands off! I am free!

We reap the harvest of our sowing. We have made the church too cheap, too easy—a thing wholly optional. Too long and too often we have taught that the church belongs to life's electives. We spread the Lord's table but we say of the communion, in our careless treatment, "Take it or leave it"—and they leave it! Another great branch of the Christian church says of the communion, as celebrated in the mass, "Take it, or go to hell"—and they take it!

Clothe the church with the authority of Jesus Christ and live with the sanction of the church on your life. Back, back! Back to the sanction of religion and to sanction in religion. Glens Falls, N. Y.

Frank Nickels' Last Message

By Mrs. F. J. Nickels

MR. NICKELS died in China on April 29. As stated in this letter, written by Mrs. Nickels at his dictation, he was anxious to tell the laymen of the denomination what he had seen, the impression it had made and the purposes which had been formed. Mr. Nickels did not live to speak his message, and we are glad to print this letter.

YOU have probably heard from time to time of the very interesting trip Mr. Nickels, Horace and I have been having since the first of July, and likewise of Mr. Nickels' serious illness. He feels that his friends will be wanting to know something of our experiences and has asked me to write to you.

Our visit to mission lands had been long anticipated but frequently deferred by untoward circumstances. So it was with peculiar gratitude that at last we started on our journey. Delayed sailings to India gave us a longer time in Europe, Egypt and Palestine and afforded us an opportunity to see all the outstanding things of interest in these countries, including Christian activities. Our hearts were greatly touched by the brave struggle of the little Baptist church in Paris. Only as one watches the thoughtless Parisian throng can he fully appreciate the yearning appeal of their young pastor M. Jean Caudron, "Pray for us, dear friends. Our field here is so very difficult, our laborers so few. We need much your prayers."

As we visited the noble cathedrals of the Continent the static formalism of their ministry seemed to us to promise far less influence in the lives of the people than the struggling little evangelical churches. We were, of course, greatly interested in the Methodist missions in Italy, and in Egypt the work of the United Presbyterians is magnificent.

November found us in India and after visiting the Isabella Thoburn College and some of the other Christian activities of Northern India, stopping at Serampore for inspiration of Carujs' life and labor, we at length reached our own Baptist mission fields among the Telugus.

From Darkness to Light

Having known personally so many of our missionaries, and since childhood having been devoted readers of our denominational and missionary magazines, we had felt ourselves fairly intelligent concerning our own missionary work. But our anticipations were a thousand times more than realized. Who can comprehend, without seeing for themselves, the wonder of the transformed life "out of darkness into light."

How our hearts burned within us as we visited the various stations at Bapatla, Ongole, Ramapatnam, Kavali, Nellore and Madras. I can scarcely convey to you the joy that was ours to see with our very eyes the fruits of the labors of the Cloughs, the Downeys, the Bakers, the Ellmores, the Fergusons, and all that blessed company of noble souls who have poured their love and sacrifice into that wonderful country. And how the people of Telegu land love the American Baptists! Their faces are radiant as they tell of their sense of gratitude to those who have sent them the gospel.

We spent Christmas in Rangoon and such happy times as we had with the Marshalls, the Wiatts, Helen Hunt, Dr. Maw Saw Sa and the other friends, those following days. Burma, the marvel of all missionary endeavor, how can I in this brief message convey in the slightest degree the thrill of those experiences.

Our visit to Doctor Nichols was a memorable one, our hearts fairly overflowing with joy in the wonderful work among the Karens at Bassein. To hear a thousand of these students sing the songs of Zion is a foretaste of heaven itself. One of our mountain-top experiences was when we made a pilgrimage with my life-long friend, Julia Stickney Cochrane, Mr. Ernest Griggs and Mr. Hinton to Ava and Augbingle, the scenes of the Judsons' sufferings. This was indeed holy ground. As we met hundreds of fine Christian men and women, the fruit of this sacrifice and of those others who have been counted worthy to suffer with him, over and over again Mr. Nickels would say, "Oh, the glory of the triumph of Jesus Christ in the lives of people! There has been nothing in our months of travel as we have seen the greatest productions of architecture, the rarest collections of art, the places of intense historic interest, the grandeur of scenic beauty, nothing that has compared in wonder to the transformed lives through Christ the Saviour."

The "before and after" of Christianity in the Orient is an absolutely convincing argument for Christian missions.

The first of January Mr. Nickels began to feel badly. He had a heavy cold from which he seemed never to fully rally and toward the latter part of January when we were visiting Canton Christian College he became quite ill. In spite of increasing weakness he was very happy in the long anticipated visit to Shanghai Baptist College.

As Baptists we have reason to be very proud of the growth and influence of this splendid institution. Its record of Christian experiences among its student body is remarkable. This is due in no small measure to the high Christian ideals of Doctor White who has been so wise a president. The faculty is most vitally Christian and there are wonderfully organized groups of personal workers composed of faculty and students who interest themselves in every student entering the school and college. The present senior class of the college is 100 per cent Christian. How does that compare with our American colleges? We spent about a week in Shanghai meeting various groups of faculty and students and were profoundly impressed with the constructive Christian character of the work being done.

I cannot overemphasize our growing appreciation of the value of Christian education. Of all others it seems to us the greatest evangelizing agency in the Orient.

Horace and I had to visit Wayland Academy at Hang Chow and Gingling and Nanking universities without Mr. Nickels. There is not time to tell you of our favorable impressions of the work and the people. It was so good to see the Cresseys, the Latimers, Doctor and Mrs. Charles Keen, the Deckers and all the other good friends along the way. On the advice of various physicians we came on up to Peking Union Medical College to find help for Mr. Nickels. We had looked forward with interest to a visit to this institution little anticipating how sorely we should need its ministry. After various tests which showed need of immediate operation, the physicians attempted to operate on Feb. 9 only to find a growth so involved it would have been fatal to perform on it. Since then Mr. Nickels has made a most valiant fight for strength to finish our journey. He had so eagerly anticipated seeing our work in Japan. Doctor Axling and the rest of our Baptist family, as well as other friends, were planning an interesting program for us and then we were to start home. Mr. Nickels was full of our precious experiences and had so much he wanted to talk over with you all.

The Solvent of World's Need

So impressed has he been with the value of Christian missions as the only solvent of the world's great need, he had determined to give his entire life in trying to foster the interest of our laymen in this great work. He is so very weak these days that we sometimes fear he may not be able to speak to you in the flesh as he is still hoping he may, and lest he should not be able to give this message which he has so yearned to do, he has asked me to write you these things that are on his heart. He says with all the thrilling stories that the missionaries have brought home to us, "the half has not been told."

Speaking of the missionaries, we cannot refrain from an expression of personal appreciation of these blessed folks all along the way, and now in our great sorrow they have been thoughtful beyond conception. Here in Peking where we scarcely knew a soul, they have rallied to our comfort in a most splendid way. Mr. Nickels says he always thought missionaries were the salt of the earth, but now he knows it. Letters come pouring in from all over China and Japan to know what the friends can do for us, and one of the best friends we have in the world, Mrs. Guy Converse (Y. M. C. A., Japan) has come over to be with us during these trying days. So you see the dear Father does not leave us comfortless. Through all this perplexing, heart-breaking time we are very conscious of his love and grace, and our hearts are full of thankfulness for the privilege of this trip together. In spite of this sad experience we are trusting that somehow in his providence even this Gethsemane may prove to have a part in the upbuilding of his kingdom.

As we look back over the way we have come, and think of the seed-sowing we China, we catch a vision of the oncoming have seen in France and Italy, in Egypt and Palestine, in India and Burma, Siam and the Straits Settlements and here in throngs of those who love and serve Jesus Christ as their Lord and Master. As we have seen the world in all its confusion and restlessness, reaping the inevitable harvest of war, we have become more convinced than ever before that the only solution for its great need is Jesus Christ as their Lord and Master.

Just a personal word concerning Mr. Nickels. I am hearing constantly that his patience and cheer, his absolute submission to whatever may be the will of God, is a great inspiration to everyone these days. He has always so fully trusted whatever betides that the triumphant faith in the valley is a fitting climax, and I am sure the dear Heavenly Father will not let our blessed trip through the mission fields be in vain.

Desperate Position of the German Baptists

By J. H. Rushbrooke

As I write, there lies before me on the table a German note whose pre-war value was 250 pounds. At the rate of exchange when I entered Germany yesterday, 916 of such notes would have been equal to one penny; at the rate of exchange this afternoon in Berlin 1,666 of them are the equivalent of one penny! Such facts are but a symbol of the confusion now prevailing. The cabinet crisis may or may not issue in a temporary accommodation: it is certainly symptomatic of a situation more desperate than Germany has ever yet faced. She is confronted by economic, social, political, and national issues of the very gravest nature; revolution, disruption, anarchy, are among the possibilities of the next few days and weeks. Vigilant reactionaries are eagerly watching the opportunities which French policy has opened to them, and every group that hopes to snatch some advantage from social overturn is gathering its forces for a bitter struggle.

To write at length on the political situation as reflected in newspapers of all shades of opinion is tempting; but I have only a few hours here in the course of a journey to Russia, and have taken up my pen for another purpose. This morning I conferred with a leading German Baptist who not only gave me a general view of the condition of the denomination, but produced detailed and specific evidence for all his statements. To one who knows the fine organization of the Baptists in this country, its years of efficient working, and the remarkable self-denial with which the church members have always supported it, today's facts are heart-breaking. The deaconness enterprise, one of the most characteristic and beneficent ever undertaken by any denomination in any land, is now in many towns unable to maintain itself. The foreign mission committee found itself on the first day of this month confronted with a deficit of 5,000 million marks. The German Baptist Union was not able to pay its colporters their salaries due at the beginning of September; it has just now succeeded in doing so through the generous response which the impoverished churches made to an urgent appeal. Arrangements are being made to set up food kitchens in connection with a large number of congregations, to keep the members alive through the winter; but the outlook even for this is black. Though money were available, in many districts food could not be obtained. How grave is the financial pressure is illustrated by the arrangements connected with a recent emergency gathering of the executive committee of the union to consider the crisis. The committee is not large; yet in order to economize traveling expenses, it was resolved that only one-half the members should attend: since these were unable to pay for food and lodging as in happier times, the mission house at Neuruppin was used for their accommodation. In spite of all these measures, and notwithstanding that several members traveled fourth class, the strain was severe.

What of pastors and other church workers? From official figures published by the state it appears that the amount needed as a bare minimum for existence has during the past three months averaged 400 million marks per month; over 80 per cent of the pastors and other workers have received stipends below this minimum—in most cases far below. Mr. Simoleit showed me figures demonstrating that he needs 120,000 million marks per month to augment the salaries to 350 millions (i. e. fifty millions below the minimum). The state's contribution for an unemployed family with two or three children is 216 millions per week.

All I offer in these brief notes is a "snapshot." This is the position of the Baptists as it appears at the moment. But it is not stationary; it is rapidly worsening. And what I write of Baptists is true, mutatis mutandis, of other groups of religious workers in Germany. Britain and America have sent some help, yet unless and until the political conditions are stabilized no help can be really effective. Can the churches of the world do nothing? Must we have on hand another Austria? Are the conditions in large parts of Germany to worsen until they resemble those of the Volga and the Ukraine during the late famine? Are the moral resources of Christendom exhausted?

Berlin, October 3, 1923.

Into 655,000 homes the Goodspeed New Testament is going daily through its publication by fourteen metropolitan newspapers in various sections of the country.

September receipts of $1,700,237 for the Methodist Centenary Movement are $180,860 below September, 1922. Receipts eleven months this year $8,409,778, or $1,272,826 below same period last year. Year's receipts 1922 were $13,907,746. This means that to equal last year's receipts Centenary payments this October must be $5,497,968. Receipts in October, 1922, were $4,225,141. Seriousness of situation requires drastic action says Morris W. H. Ehnes, treasurer committee on conservation and advance.

One of the many ways by which the Divinity School of the University of Chicago has sought to make its exceptional facilities available to meet the need for more adequate religious training is by means of a church workers' institute, which has enrolled hundreds of students in classes for the study of the Bible, religious education, church organization and administration, missions, etc. This institute, meeting on the campus, was organized at the earnest request of many pastors. It begins its fifth year this autumn, on Thursday evening, Nov. 1, and continues for six succeeding Thursday evenings. A course of public lectures on "The Teachings of Paul" will be given by Dean Shailer Mathews at 7:30. At 8:15 three classes will be held. Courses in religious education, missions and church administration will be offered by Miss Georgia S. Chamberlin of the American Institute of Sacred Literature and Professors Baker and Holman of the Divinity School. This institute provides an unusual opportunity for any large body of volunteer workers in churches, Sunday schools, and other church organizations, to obtain instruction at the hands of competent specialists in their various fields. The institute is a gift of the university to the churches. The members of the faculty give their services free. No charge is made for the use of the university lecture-rooms. The registration fee of $1 is used to meet promotional and administrative expenses only. All persons interested in the study of religion and church methods will be cordially welcomed.

The New World Movement

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matthew 28:19, 20.

If We Love Our Neighbors

By Albert L. Scott

The Epistle of James is a good book for us to be reading these days because James places great emphasis on works. That is just the emphasis we need to show. During recent months and years, we have been thinking deeply, seriously and to our great profit, on questions of belief. Let us not forget that there is also before us the great question of works, which involves what James calls "the royal law according to scriptures, thou shalt love they neighbor as thyself."

If we love our neighbor as we say we do and think we do, our neighbors in China, in India, in Burma, in Japan, in the Philippines and in Africa; if we love our nearer neighbors in our great cities, in Porto Rico and Cuba; if we love even our neighbors in other churches who may not agree with us on some questions of greater or less importance, then we must show by our works that we love. We may deceive ourselves but we cannot deceive God in this matter.

In its essence, the New World Movement is an attempt to express our love for all mankind and our faith in God by our works. Let us remember for our encouragement, that we have already expressed ourselves in works—in so far as dollars are works—in a more effective way than Baptists or any other great denomination have ever done. We should not feel depressed, we should rather feel elated at the great things God has done through us. Now, however, is the time for us to finish the task we have set out to perform.

The final year of the New World Movement has come and we need $12,161,521.67, to meet our missionary needs and pay our debts. A carefully prepared program of activities has been set out, elaborate plans for telling about the needs of our work have been made and all the organization that should be required has been established. Every Baptist who does not run away from his opportunity will hear the story and will be told what his church needs to do. But no plan, no program, no organization can succeed if the spirit of giving is not in our hearts.

Let us reason together about this matter. All Baptists believe in their Lord and in the Great Commission to go and teach all nations. If any do not they are not Baptists. Therefore, we believe in preaching the gospel in Asia and Africa and to the new Americans. We believe in raising up Italian preachers or in telling the gospel story to the Indians. We believe in an educated ministry and in Christian training for our Baptist boys and girls. Of course we do.

A Cycle of Prayer

"Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud; and he shall hear my voice"

Special topic for emphasis during October—Stewardship of talents, time, mind, money.

Our Work and Workers at Home

27th day—Europeans.
28th day—Rural and Mining Communities.

Our Country

29th day—National Government.
30th day—State and City Governments.
31st day—International Relations.

Our Church

1st day—The church as a force for righteousness in the community.
2nd day—The Pastor.

Then we should ask ourselves whether we are expressing these beliefs and whether we are obeying the great commission in our denominational activities? Are our foreign mission societies making disciples among the nations? Do our home mission societies and our schools and colleges carry on the work of our Lord? The record of their achievements is a sufficient answer.

These facts being true then, it is evident that as individual Baptists the best way and the only comprehensive way, we can do our part in this great work and can express our love for our neighbor the world over is in giving. Your money goes to foreign missions, home missions, education, city missions and state missions, in as equitable proportions as fallible men and women can determine.

Let us not listen or be influenced in our giving by this or that innuendo or charge against some of our membership. God never intended that Baptists should believe alike or he would have tried us out in some more closely knit ecclesiastical organization. "So speak ye and so do as they that shall be judged by the law of Liberty." Questions of belief do not seem to be so important as questions of life. I do not agree with many of my brethren on questions of theology —probably because as a layman, I know so little theology—but I do know that we have the commandment that we love one another and that we are warned not to judge one another lest we ourselves be judged. Let us be done with this criticism of each other. It is not of God, nor according to the spirit of our Lord. Let us believe in one another and provoke one another to good works.

You believe the gospel of Jesus Christ should be preached in China and Japan and other foreign lands. Then give.

You believe in preaching the gospel to the immigrant, in raising the negro out of ignorance and in working for the salvation of our home land. Then give.

You believe in the work of our women's societies, for the women and children of America and in foreign lands. Then give.

You believe in taking care of our old ministers and missionaries and in the work our ministers and missionaries benefit board is trying to do. Then give.

You believe in educating ministers and in higher training for our boys and girls. Then give.

You believe in your state convention and in your own city mission society. Then give.

When you have given to these things you have given to just the enterprises that the New World Movement stands for. It stands for foreign missions, for home missions, for the state conventions, for city missions, for education. When you give to the New World Movement you show by your works that you love your neighbor and you are expressing that love through the best vehicle our denomination has yet developed.

Let us not think we are doing God a service by refusing to cooperate with our brethren in this great adventure of faith, because some man, some organization, some school, possibly does not accord with our views. Perhaps we may be wrong. It is better to give and to do our part in this great enterprise even though we do not agree with every detail of the program, than to withhold our gifts under the delusion that we are serving God when we deliberately refuse to go forward with our brethren.

God is speaking to us as he did to Moses before the Red Sea—"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

By one of those unexplained coincidences there is an earthquake, a fire, a typhoon and another quake in Japan just as thousands of churches are getting ready to study Japan. The stereopticon department had anticipated the study classes and had two new lectures ready. The calls in September made it necessary to make four additional sets. These two lectures "Nearest the Sunrise" and "Fighting for Character in Japanese Cities" were both prepared by G. Douglass Haring, one of our missionaries. They need no revision in view of the earthquake except that the property destroyed needs to be listed.

State Conventions in Annual Session

Nebraska

By R. R. Coon

THE fifty-sixth annual meeting was held in Omaha, Oct. 10-14, in Calvary Church, Rev. H. C. Whitcomb, pastor. The day preceding, meetings of committees and the state board were held, thus avoiding the long night sessions of these bodies that long have taxed strength and tried patience of their members. Important items of business were thus made ready for convention reports.

The ministers' conference was held Wednesday afternoon, Rev. George Van Winkle presiding. President J. M. Wells discussed the topic: "The Minister's Habits of Study," illustrating it by incidents drawn from the lives of J. R. Miller, Phillips Brooks, and C. H. Spurgeon. It was an excellent piece of advice to ministers, and needed today. "The Parish in its Relation to the Community" was the subject of a paper by Rev. W. F. MacNeill, of Omaha. The work of the church is to save men, personal work is the method and today furnishes the crowning opportunity. Full discussions followed each paper. Two hours seem a meager time for ministers' meetings. We used to have two full sessions.

Mrs. J. D. Collins presided at the women's meeting, held at the same hour and participated in by Mrs. W. W. Cornell, Pawnee City; Mrs. E. M. Owings, Grand Island, and by Rev. Fred Young, Fremont, who gave the devotional address.

Double Number of Nebraska Baptists

An organ recital and musical program opened the first session of the convention—a fine exhibition of the new organ of the new church in which we met—a beautiful, attractive commodious house of worship. Mr. John L. Kennedy, of the Presbyterians, welcomed the convention to the city. "Today the church has the opportunity to come again into power," he said. The pastor voiced the welcome of all Omaha Baptists who are now engaged in improving Baptist plants in the city at an expense of a half million dollars. To these words Mr. Oak E. Davis, of Lincoln responded, suggesting that while this is the center of a section within a hundred miles the richest in the country, we should soon make our 20,000 Nebraska Baptists 40,000 Baptists. The president's address was given by A. B. Newell. This was a plain statement of Baptist conditions in the state, some reasons for the same, and strong urging to greater faithfulness in the future. Dr. W. O. Lewis, Baptist commissioner to Europe, gave one of the great addresses of the convention. European affairs were graphically portrayed, as well as the growth of Baptist principles there. When Waterloo was fought no Baptist church was in continental Europe, now large numbers, one Polish church of 1,000 members, the largest on the continent.

Thursday morning Rev. F. W. Ainslie, new state secretary, gave a general view of the work in the state; its relation to the Home Mission and Publication Societies and city mission work in Omaha. He spoke also of the industrial school at Beatrice, which the convention has just acquired. These items were emphasized rather than reading a long report. A short symposium on "The Rural Church" brought out three live addresses by pastors on the field—Revs. W. C. Miller, Maxwell; J. C. Briggs, Palestine; W. T. Dodd, Liberty. Rev. F. W. Benjamin also spoke about the remarkable work at Arnold, heroically begun by Rev. P. O. Silvara, who planned great things now being carried out. "When finished it will be the finest community church in the country," the speaker said. Addresses by F. A. High on the temperance question, and J. A. Leavitt, on "The Friendless" and the devotional address by Rev. J. F. Catlin, of Council Bluffs, closed the session.

Missions and evangelism was the subject for the afternoon meeting. Rev. G. L. Sharp presiding. The usual service of introducing new pastors and convention representatives was conducted by Rev. E. M. Owings. Then followed greetings from the Swedish and German conferences and the New Era (colored) Association, and an address on "Evangelism" by Rev. B. H. Ward, newly-elected state evangelist.

Now was given the delegates a rare and interesting privilege. Rev. Ezra Duncan—give him a salute—had planned a "Sightseeing Trip of Omaha Baptist Work." So for two hours and a half we were taken on a ride of thirty miles through business, park and rural Omaha in about forty autos furnished by city friends and others. It was remarked that the "grave and reverend" state board adjourned that its members might take this informing joy ride; and they did well.

Thursday evening after another inspiring organ recital, Dr. W. T. Elmore, of Lincoln, preached the annual sermon: Text, Gen. 26:18, "And Isaac digged again the wells of water." In an original and forceful manner the speaker supported the Bible representations of a man's existence. Instead of coming up, up, up, from lower forms of life, "God created man in his own image; . . . and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." In the world of morals also we need to dig again the old wells. And in methods of work great improvement may be made.

O world, thou choosest not the better part!
It is not wisdom to be only wise,
And on the inward vision close the eyes;
But it is wisdom to believe the heart.
Columbus found a world, but had no chart
Save one that faith deciphered in the skies.
To trust the soul's invincible surmise
Was all his science, and his only art!

Friday morning, Dr. George Sutherland presiding, business of the Northern Baptist Convention was considered. In the absence of Doctor Aitchison others took his place. State Secretary Ainslie first reviewed the work of the Promotion Department in Nebraska. Dr. P. C. Wright, New York City, presented New World Movement interests, and discussed the "Future Denominational Program" in general conference. "We did reach our goal after all; 50 millions in cash and 50 millions in faith," he quoted from Doctor Aitchison. Dr. F. W. Padelford closed the session with scripture reading and prayer.

The Educational session was held Friday afternoon, Rev. A. C. Hull presiding. The "M. and M. Board" was the subject of an address by Dr. P. C. Wright, treasurer of that fund. He also held conferences with groups on the working of the society. Baptist work among state university students was presented by half a dozen students, and "Baptist Young People in State Normals" was considered by Rev. D. I. Coon, of Kearney, Mr. W. N. Delzell, of Peru, a representative from Chadron and Rev. F. K. Allen, of Wayne. President Wells described how Grand Island College had steadily increased its attendance since the closing of the school a year during the war; the number of pupils now being over 200, with 144 in the college classes; and the future is most hopeful. Dr. F. W. Padelford gave an address closing a most impressive educational meeting.

Banquet Night

Friday evening was banquet night. Women met in the dining room of Calvary church, where music and short addresses gave added interest to the banqueting table. Men met, 250 strong, at the First Baptist Church. Mr. Oak Davis was the ready toastmaster. Beside several talks from laymen, including a short sermon (!) from Judge Freeman, of Denver, Dr. H. F. Stilwell, of Cleveland, talked to men on lay evangelism.

The Saturday morning session was given chiefly to state convention business. Resolutions by Rev. E. E. Shoufler, Hastings, chairman of committee, were presented, including one endorsing our publications, Missions, Watchman-Examiner, THE BAPTIST and Nebraska Messenger. The committee on place of next meeting, Rev. E. K. Allen, chairman, named North Platte. Rev. R. R. Coon read the obituary report, mentioning as passing away during the year Rev. J. L. Blakeley, Rev. David Eller and Rev. C. F. Barrett. Dr. George Sutherland reported officers nominated for election: Pres., Oak E. Davis, Lincoln; first vice-pres., H. D. Rhodes, Omaha; second vice-pres., Mrs. Jeff Yelton, Lincoln; third vice-pres., Charles Frisch, Glenvil; rec. secy., Dean Firth, Grand Island; asst. rec. recy., Mrs. J. D. Collins, Lincoln; treas., W. E. Rhoades, Omaha; historian, R. R. Coon, Grand Island.

Mr. A. B. Newell, retiring president, wished some other to take that position. Only one other, C. A. Schappel, had served in that capacity longer. For six years Mr. Newell had given freely time and effort in leading convention affairs, especially during the New World Movement era. Rev. B. B. Braden gave an address on "Stewardship," and Mrs. Osgood, of Chicago, closed the session with a devotional talk.

Religious education was considered Saturday afternoon. Director J. D. Collins gave the first address; an earnest appeal for greater advance in this department of work. "What is Religious Education?" was discussed by Dr. Norman E. Richardson of Northwestern University.

The B. Y. P. U. banquet was held Saturday evening, Mr. J. M. Sorensen, of Fremont, presiding. A banquet was also held at the Swedish church, where Secretary Ainslie dwelt on the plans for completing the N. W. M. campaign; and Dr. W. H. Main gave an outline of the program for the centennial of the Publication Society, next year.

Sunday morning Dr. Main preached in the Calvary Church; other ministers filled pulpits of the city churches. At the afternoon meeting President Wells spoke briefly and Doctor Richardson preached on the "Grace of God."

The closing service Sunday evening was deeply impressive. The young people's devotional hour, the musical program by the Calvary choir, the inspirational address by Dr. W. H. Main made a religious service that fittingly closed a great convention.

South Dakota

By Roger J. Lloyd

THE South Dakota Convention met with the church at Aberdeen for its forty-second annual gathering Oct. 3-7. The almost ideal weather brought nearly 2000 delegates and visitors from over this inland empire. One can appreciate the efforts put forth by some of the delegates when one realizes that South Dakota contains 77,000 square miles, making it necessary for some of these folks to drive two days to get to the place of meeting.

Where such effort is made to attend a gathering of this kind there is bound to be a great fellowship in Christ. Some of the men on our fields never see a brother pastor except at the associational or state convention meeting. A finer body of young men cannot be found anywhere than among our pastors. We have several older men in point of years, but they will never confess to being old. Men don't grow old in this country.

The report of our general superintendent, Dr. S. P. Shaw, and of the missionary pastors, reveal all departments as being in a growing condition.

We had with us some old friends whom it is always a delight to hear and have fellowship with, such as Dr. Frank Peterson, the dean of preachers in this great Northwest; Dr. H. F. Stilwell of Cleveland, our convention pastor, who has the pastor's heart and the pastor's message; Dr. Peter C. Wright of the M. & M. Board, energetic, zealous, always working at his task. Mrs. Anna M. Salquist of West China; R. O. Jasperson of the Laymen's Council, and Dr. W. O. Lewis brought messages from their respective fields.

Several conferences conducted by the pastors of the state were of great benefit.

Much credit is due to Aberdeen Baptists and their faithful pastor for the success of the meeting.

Indiana

By C. M. Dinsmore

THE Indiana State Convention, which met this year at Lebanon, Oct. 9-11, was preceded by a profitable pastors' conference. This conference discussed the various questions connected with the order of worship in the local church and the matter of non-resident members. It was agreed that church letters should always be sent to the church and not to the individual, for church membership is not private property. It was also agreed that church letters should be sent at the time a member leaves, in harmony with the church covenant. A committee drew up a form of church letter which was later brought before the state convention and adopted as a suggestion to the churches of the state. This letter will tell the truth concerning members and will aid the pastor receiving them to be of larger help at the right time.

The convention was considered by those present to be one of the best ever held in Indiana. A large registration and splendid spirit contributed largely toward this result. In addition to the large number of interesting addresses, two features stand out as special this year. One was the men's banquet in the high-school gymnasium Wednesday night at which about 400 were present. Doctor Agar spoke on stewardship and Dr. F. E. Taylor followed by an address on the importance of personal evangelism. The other feature was the entire Thursday afternoon meeting. The Crawford Industrial School brought to the convention about fifty of its children who gave a program. This was followed by the introduction of ten of the workers in the two Christian centers in the Calumet District and twenty-three children from the two houses. They presented something of the daily routine at Brooks House and Katherine House. This was an exhibition of the product of our work in the Calumet District and the delegates felt that it was labor of which they should be proud.

The convention closed with a look at the Stockholm meeting with the assistance of Harry E. Myers and an address on "Baptists and World Progress" by Secy. J. C. Robbins. It was a gathering that inspired us all to undertake larger things for the glory of our Lord.

Illinois

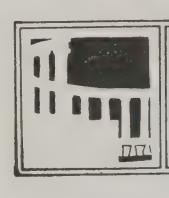
By D. O. Hopkins

THE annual meeting of this convention has come and gone. It came to Oak Park, Oct. 15-18, it has gone to the hearts of the Baptist membership of Illinois. Delegates arrived unusually early this year. The visit arranged by our women to the various Baptist institutions in and around Chicago brought a large number early on Monday morning. And some even on Sunday. Transportation facilities make Chicago and Oak Park easy of accessibility. Many came by autos over the hard roads, others by steam cars; city people made liberal use of the electric. We heard of none who dropped down from an aeroplane.

Oak Park Baptist Church, the place of gathering, was worth the visit. A spacious building of the finest type gave the vantage ground to the convention. This building cared for all the committee and board meetings, fed the hosts, and housed all the interests of Baptists. The welcome given by the genial Doctor Case and people could not be excelled.

The general superintendent, Dr. A. E. Peterson, is a member of this church and a resident of this city. To him is large credit due for the rich program presented. Outstanding men and women of the Northern Baptist Convention poured out their hearts to the delegates. In fact no stronger appeals to the Baptist task have ever been made at our national gatherings. The program itself was carried out practically to the letter of the printed schedule.



A helpful added feature was the arrangement of several twenty-minute devotional sermons at the beginning of each service. This accomplished two things: They brought the people to the auditorium on time and they prepared our hearts for the rest of that session. Carstens, Sayers, Johnson, Cozad, Abbott, Jackson, Howells, Jensen, and Tunison drew from the well of their Christian experiences and refreshed our souls by their messages.

We are also indebted to the Oak Park choir, girls from the training school, men from the Northern Seminary, and the Austin choir, for the music which was furnished at each evening meeting. Seldom have we had the privilege of such quality of music in these conventions. The response of the people to these soul-stirring anthems was marvelous.

As usual, former classmates of our educational institutions banqueted together, reunited their loyalty and purposes and deepened their friendship. Shurtleff College and the University of Chicago people enjoyed these repasts.

The mental and spiritual feasts, however, excelled everything that was offered to the body. Mrs. Montgomery showed us that "it is a great thing to be a Baptist at a time like this." She illustrated her points by concrete facts gathered in Europe this last summer. The inimitable Agar stirred our hearts and disturbed our church complacencies by revealing naked facts about our in-

ISAIAH'S PLASTER OF FIGS

In the book of Isaiah we have a record of denunciations of religious hypocrisy, appeals for repentance, comforting words for God's people, predictions of a coming Saviour, revelations of Jehovah's protecting powers in the destruction of the hosts of Assyria. It is a book of history, of prophecy, of poetry, so that Matthew Arnold said that parts of Isaiah furnish illustrations of the world's best literature, giving to us lofty views of Jehovah, his person and his teachings. There is the record of a very commonplace event, the making of a plaster of figs for Hezekiah's recovery. Hezekiah, spoken of as good king Hezekiah, a man of fine character, was sick nigh unto death, the gloom of the grave was settling upon his mind. He appealed to Jehovah for life, for a longer life that he might worship him in the land of the living. There came the answer in Isaiah 38:5: "I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears, behold I will add unto thy days fifteen years." purpose into fruition. Alongside of Jehovah's promise to add fifteen years to his life, there is the statement that Isaiah ordered a plaster of figs that Jehovah's word might become a reality. It was faith in Jehovah that led Hezekiah to pray. It was faith in God's love and remedies that led the prophet to make use of a common household medical treatment. It would have been an act of impiety for Isaiah to have made use of the figs and relying on the laws of nature decide not to look up to the living Jehovah. It would have been an act of equal impiety to have neglected the use of agencies that God had established for use in such cases. This lengthened Hezekiah's life fifteen years. I have known pious people who out of reverence for Christ and with the desire to know his love and healing powers have thrown all healing remedies out of the window. It was, in their judgment, dishonoring to the Saviour to place any material remedy alongside of the personal healing power of Christ. Isaiah was a God-honoring man. Knowing the healing power that Jehovah had stored in the fig he made use of Jehovah's agency to carry into effect God's promise. A one-sided faith cure, throwing aside remedies that God himself in kindness and wisdom had provided, is not a God-honoring act. For Jesus to have thrown himself down from the pinnacle of the temple would not have been an act of faith, but of unfaith, of daring, of presumption, not of trust. Nature's laws would have crushed him had he thrown himself down headlong trusting to Psalm 91:11 to save him instead of the steps provided for getting down. Dr. John Gill in scholarship and in knowledge of a systematic theology was vastly the superior of William Carey, brought up on the cobbler's bench. Doctor Gill thought it was dishonoring to God's promise and sovereignty for man to interfere with God. He was able to carry out his own plans and therefore missionary societies were God-dishonoring organizations. William Carey was a wise man and built upon the plan of Isaiah—God's announced promises call for man's cooperation. God works, but works upon and in and with and through men who are willing to be God's hand and voice and agent. Paul affirms the union of the divine and the human in Philippians 2:13. It is God works in us to will and to do that men on their part may work out in outward life what God has implanted in the heart. George Eliot makes Stradivarius say that God needed him to make the Stradivarius violin. In like manner God made use of the plaster of figs and William Carey to work out his purposes. When we pray that in 1923 we may have bigger and better Sunday schools, may raise the twelve million dollars for the New World Movement, that we may largely widen the kingdom of God in the earth, we must contribute to God's command and desire our joyous cooperation in giving our money and ourselves. Jehovah's adding the fifteen years of life was dependent upon Isaiah's making the plaster of figs.

THAT ROGER WILLIAMS SPRING

Doctor McGuire has disturbed me by that little article concerning the impurity of the Roger Williams spring. This is not right. I find that Elder Brewster's spring at Plymouth is "still very delicate and refreshing to the wayfarer, although today he quaffs it from a bubbler." Why should the Congregational spring be "very delicate and refreshing" and the Baptist spring so contaminated as to make it foolhardy to drink therefrom? Would it be unscientific and narrow to think that modernism has made that spring dangerous? Has Brown University done this thing? Or is it due to the fact that Romanism predominates in Rhode Island? Or is a failure on Rhode Island's part to ratify the eighteenth amendment to the constitution the cause? Doctor McGuire is under obligation to do some research work and clear up the matter, otherwise it will have to come up before the Northern Baptist Convention and perhaps the denomination be split.

Is there not need of a prophet to go forth with a cruse of salt, chemically pure and cleanse the Roger Williams spring and make it safe for Baptists? If this cannot be done, ought not the thing be plugged up and a fountain pure and undefiled opened up somewhere from which Baptists may drink without danger?

RUNS GAUNTLET HEROICALLY

Congratulations from "down in Dixie" on the ever-increasing value of THE BAPTIST. I have read every issue and note with pleasure the improvement in form and content.

The stewardship number was delightfully free from the obnoxious and untrue Jewish basis for Christian using of the Lord's materials held by his people. Doctor Agar's phrase "the minimum of a tenth and use it for gospel purposes" is a far step from the old "robbing God if you do not give to him as much as the Jew did under the law." The emphasis on real stewardship, the consecration of all we are and all we have to kingdom service, was quite refreshing. We could wish that all the contributors to that issue had made this emphasis, omitting the "legal" tithe.

Of course many regret the references in the "Baptist Message" from the World Alliance making the Jewish practice so prominent and some of us had hoped that there would be no further allusion to the Jewish tithing system. Indeed, the report of the layman's committee at the Southern Baptist Convention in 1923, in Kansas City, used the word "tithe" but once and that was in connection with past activities. The "tenth" as a minimum was presented. So there are signs of improvement all along the line. We rejoice and long for the day when nothing but the ideal, the whole life and property, no fractional Christianity, will be the slogan by every leader. When we eat, drink, play, dress, rear families, own autos, go to conventions, conduct business, educate and do all for the glory of the Master. Then, indeed, the churches' work will prosper and Christians will find a new joy in every phase of individual and family activity.

THE BAPTIST is running the gauntlet heroically. We believe you are trying to let the Bible say what it means instead of insisting that it means just what it says. It seems, in "spots" at least, that you are not afraid to let Baptists be Baptists and really put into practice their principle of freedom in interpretation.

No paper can take the place of THE BAPTIST. You must represent all the people, as a denominational agency, and no "private interpretation" can find place in your editorial columns. May the campaigns of our brethren "across the line" prosper abundantly and the Northern Baptist Convention find its glory in spreading the "good news" throughout the wide, wide world.

Practicing Good Will

Frank is a boy of ten. He was born in America, but of foreign-born parents. If one asks his name, the reply is "Frank." This is to impress the fact that he is an American citizen. If one wishes to know his last name it is necessary to ask a second question about his name. Perhaps it is Greek or Italian. Indeed it might be a name applying to any one of twenty odd nationalities, for he lives in a community where that many different nationalities are represented.

The other day Frank was making his way across one of the crowded thoroughfares of the Chicago Loop. We greeted him in a friendly manner and passed on, not knowing that we had ever seen him before. Two minutes later and Frank was again at our side. His boyish face was radiant with smiles as he said, "Say, Mister! Didn't you visit our vacation school on Morgan Street?" We were comrades at once, for we had met him before. He was one of 600 happy boys in attendance on the day of our visit.

Frank felt that he had a perfect right to make himself known to one whom he had met in such happy circumstances. He had no doubt exhibited the same spirit of good will when he met others connected with the school—the boys and the girls, and especially the faithful teachers and workers with whom he was in such intimate contact for so many days. In this same school on Morgan Street there were representatives from practically all the nationalities of the neighborhood, thus constituting a center of international good will. This school was only one of many others of its kind.

Reports are not all in as yet, but it is conservatively estimated that 30,000 boys and girls participated in the 200 and more daily vacation Bible schools held in Chicago this summer. The various activities of the season were directed by some 2,000 teachers and workers, many of whom attended the training conferences held at the Northwestern University Building while the schools were in session.

"In moral training the major keys of pleasure must predominate," writes Prof. George A. Coe. An experienced public school teacher of standing in her profession reported as follows concerning her school of 100 boys and girls in a residence community of good homes: "We are just as happy as we can be. We are having the best time." Her explanation of the success of the school was in terms of happiness.

"Last summer," said a father, "our children were singing 'Peggy O'Neill,' this summer they sing 'Onward, Christian Soldiers." The daily vacation Bible school substituted a religious hymn for a ragtime song and at the same time ministered to the pleasure of the children in a wholesome way.—Chicago Church Federation Bulletin.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 11

SOME MISSIONARY TEACHINGS OF THE PSALMS

Lesson: Psalms 47, 67, 100

Golden Text: Let the peoples praise thee, O God; let all the peoples praise thee. —Psalm 67:3.

Introductory

God, as Ruler over all the peoples of the earth, is the motif of Psalm 47; through the blessings conferred upon man the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, is the dominating thought of Psalm 67; a paean of praise and thanksgiving is Psalm 100.

The Lesson

"All ye peoples, clap your hands....For Jehovah is a great king over all the earth. He will subdue peoples under us, and nations under our feet.....Sing praise to our king, sing praise. For God is king of all the earth.....God reigns over all nations."—There is no local God suggested in this singing extract from the forty-seventh psalm—a God to be known throughout all the nations—but "how are they to believe in him of whom they heard not? And how are they to hear without a preacher? And how are they to preach unless they are sent forth?"

"Mighty one of Israel: he that giveth strength and peace to the people." "The Lord is among us...he bears our burdens" —Not a mighty ruler to come one day to take possession of the kingdom. It is his kingdom today; the whole earth is under his rule, whether or not its inhabitants have acknowledged that sway.

"Shout to Jehovah!" chants Psalm 100. "Serve with gladness; come before him with exultation.....He it is that made us and we are his...give thanks to him, bless his name." Were Christians to enjoy their heritage to the full, realizing God's ownership of them, whom he has made and so they are his, and were such songs of triumph to issue from their hearts, their missionary message to the world would be a magnetic one.

Leading Thoughts

1. "Sing praise!" "Sing Praise!" "Sing praise!"—not once but hundreds of times are we told this in the psalms—the missionary message is a joyous one. 2. "God is to us a God of deliverance. He is a father to orphans and a judge of the widows—" a practical God, an ever-present help in time of trouble is another message of the psalms. 3. The breath of the psalms is prayer, deliverance from troubles, faith and praise—of this knowledge should the earth be full.

The Self and The Sabbath

By H. Lawford Nichols

At the request of a public school official (a Baptist) I have put into writing the substance of a conversation for his personal use. It occurred to me that other teachers and leaders of young people might find it useful because of its ground of appeal.

The aim of course is to scatter the foolish and poisonous idea that a Christian Sabbath is a blue day by a review of the beauty and suggestion of the evidence from the features that entered into Christ's own day.

Question: What is a Christian Sabbath?

Christ's own program, proved by what he did.

Consideration: Christ's program should be a sane norm for Christian conduct.

Digest of Christ's program:

1. Worship: Luke 4:16—"As his custom was he entered into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and stood up for to read."

2. Taught (Sunday-school teaching): Luke 6:6—"Also on another Sabbath . . . he entered into the synagogue and taught." Mark 1:21-22 indicates the character of his method.

3. Healed (Primary Scout Law): Luke 13:10-13, whole passage. John 9:14—See verse 16 and whole incident.

4. Walked (went for a walk with his friends): Luke 6:1—"Went through the corn fields," second verse and incident. Mark 2:23—See the nature of conversation.

5. Enjoyed the hospitality of a friend: Luke 14:1—"the home of one of the chief Pharisees"—See incident.

6. Approves of necessary work in care of animals: Luke 13:15—"Watering, etc." Matt. 12:11—kindness to animals—Whole passage germane.

Christ's personal program therefore includes: Worshiping, teaching, helping, exercise, social contacts and the care of dependent creatures.

Note: The spiritual, the intellectual, the physical, the social, the humane interests of life are all provided for in the sanity and balance of this program.

Contrast this with the aimlessness, uselessness and sheer idleness or crass self-indulgence or selfishness that marks so many of the life currents of our American Sabbath.

One of two courses is open to each and every life and influence:

A. Just drifting in the common currents—that's easy!

B. Having a constructive share in promoting the Christ following (Christian) norm—that's joyous!

The latter course is undoutedly patriotic because provocative and preservative of the best, while consistent with the pursuits of happiness.

The Home of The Brave

Chapter VIII. The Candle in the Window

FRANKLY, Miss Patricia Brave was astonished. To think that so charming a girl as Veronica Antisdale wanted, actually wanted, to marry Ricky, so many years older, so surprisingly possessed of absurd notions! Notions which Veronica shared with a heartiness not to be disputed. Without being positively rude to both parties concerned the poor lady hardly knew how to express her dismay—and her delight. It was a load off her hands, in one way—but a load on her heart, in another way.

"I might as well tell you, Very," she began, "the neighborhood is really impossible! The most excruciating noises come in the window, the most nauseating smells of garlic and goodness knows what else assail you the minute you walk on the street, and of course the sights—well, the sights—"

Very laughed softly. "Pat," she said, reassuringly, "I was born with a silver spoon in my mouth, and I've been trying to give it away ever since. I simply adore this kind of living; I always wanted to go into social service work but I was afraid I'd become one of those cool, proficient creatures known as social experts. I don't want people—plain everyday people—ever to become 'cases' to me; I don't want to pigeon-hole them neatly into their proper places; derelicts, right hand file; dependents, second row, right hand file; delinquents, here; etc., etc. I shall perfectly love being just 'neighbors.' I'll love asking them in to a meal, I'll love all the little helpfulnesses that can become so every-day; I'll love borrowing their babies every day while they work, with Anne Trevor to watch over them; I'll love the parlors used of an evening for parties and small tête-a-têtes. Pat, I want to be like a candle in the window, to invite people in, to light them to something in America which they haven't had before."

Patricia Brave took the girl's hand: "Very, you see it all now, glorified by Ricky's love and Ricky's enthusiasm. But candles burn away, my dear. You aren't strong enough to stand the daily roughness and the daily disappointments. There'll be uglinesses you will want to close your eyes upon—"

Veronica stopped her. "Of course there will be," she said sensibly. "That's what I'm here for, silly! Do you suppose I'm just another mere Carol Kendicott of Main Street fame to try ineffectual 'stunts' to lift these neighbors? Of course, I know that it's going to be an experiment; of course, I know there'll be disappointments; of course, I know the candle will be blown out and burned out—but this is going to be a Home of the Brave in the midst of other homes of the brave—the brave poor! I'm too enthusiastic over the plans I have to sleep. I'm going to be married in the little corner church, darling, and then—don't faint!—the reception's going to be in this house, a house-warming! And every neighbor for two blocks in each direction is going to be invited. Won't it be—a little bit of heaven?"

Miss Patricia Brave did not trust herself to say what it would be like, in her estimation. She was too horrified!

"Do you mean to tell me, Veronica Antisdale, that your mother and father will countenance any absurdity like that? To be married in a dingy chapel? To hold your wedding reception in the groom's home? Why, it simply isn't done in good society. You'll be the talk of the whole town! I can't think what people will say!"

"Neither can I," laughed Veronica, merrily. "Pat, I'm so sick of being a puppet; strings pulled here, and I do this proper thing—strings pulled there, and I do that proper thing. Simply spending money, spending money, spending money, mimicking a lot of empty-hearted idle rich; and all the time America's full of brave folks and real folks, Mansion Avenue folks, in ugly homes of the brave, looking at all of us spendthrift folks with savage covetous eyes. Oh, I know! I know! Young girls copying us with tawdry imitations, putting on airs, trying to be as Vere de Vere as any Vere de Vere on the boulevard. It's all nonsense. I'm ashamed of us all. I'm going to kick over the traces and have a perfectly normal natural wedding, without any pomp or disgusting display or society nonsense. An adventure in democracy if there ever was one!"

"I can't believe my ears," poor Patricia Brave lamented.

But her brother took it differently. Now that the wonder of Veronica's wish had lost its newness he seconded every suggestion, and added many of his own. The making over of the Home of the Brave was perhaps the most interesting task he had ever done: the 'nursery' on the second floor—those fifteen spotless cribs! The 'game room," with its frieze of knights of old on horseback, and its bookshelves underneath with books for little modern knights—and ladies! The little parlors, with their gold-shaded lamps and little alcoved corners! A hundred times a day he walked around and looked with unbelieving eyes at all he saw, a dream come true.

But the strangest trips of all were to the houses on the nearby blocks, asking the names of boarders, "renters," residents, etc. To each of them the mail in due time brought a curious invitation, surely the most unusual ever engraved by the select firm entrusted with the order:

"Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Osgood Antisdale request the honor of your presence at the marriage reception of their daughter Veronica and Richard Brave
on the fifth of November, from eight to ten, at the "Home of the Brave," 281 Mansion Avenue, which will thereafter be informally open to all its neighbors for their free use."

Well!

It was a bomb in the neighborhood! Everybody talked about it. Everybody knew everything about it. For Sophie, the laundress's daughter, was going to be a flower girl, and the "madonna of the kitten" another flower girl! Everybody knew that the bride's dress was of white silk costing one ninety-eight the yard—my word! and hadn't Minna Abramovitch paid all of four-and-a-quarter the yard for hers! Yah! "And I got it on good faith that old Miss Graper is making it—very simple!" Minna Abramovitch said it made her feel foolish-like to have dumped so much good monies into weddings for one day only, when now if there wasn't coal and food and winter flannels and babies and everything. . . .

The wonder of it grew. You were not

A Candle's Beauty

By Anne B. Payne

THE beauty of a candle touches me:
It is so softly gay—
So steadfast and so careless of itself,
Giving its life away.

With waxen body, slender, white and still,
Melting as snow or ice,
It is a spendthrift with a soul of flame,
Offering sacrifice.

A little space of moments and of hours
In which to shine and glow—
A candle's beauty touches me, oh, more Than anything I know.

to dress up for that reception-business. Just Sunday best was plenty good enough, the word went around. Hordes of people stood all day on the sidewalk waiting before the corner chapel to see the florists bring decorations—didn't society brides always marry in "a bower of floral loveliness?" Toward four o'clock the florist's wagon arrived: three palms and four pots of lilies. . . . But arranged correctly they made a lovely group. Simplicity.

As a spectacle, the wedding failed. But as a festivity of friends, it could not have been surpassed. There stood the slender little bride, in her simple wedding gown—she took everybody's hand: "You are my neighbor now, you know! I hope that you will come to see me often. Maybe you will find books you'll like to read, or an open fire you'll like to sit by!" A light glowed in her eyes that could not be mistaken. It was friendship, nothing else.

And that tall whimsical man, with the staunch hand-shake, was popular, too. The young men listened to him with reverence, as he told about his years in France, his heading the refugee work afterwards in that section of the country. They, too, had been in France. "I have some pictures I'd like to show you, if you'll drop in some night," Ricky said in the most natural tone in the world. "How about tomorrow?"

People loved Ricky. He was so casual about his invitations—they got accepted without the guests suspecting any ruse. The refreshments were good. Ample. Unbelievable, to the very young neighbors, who had third, fourth, and even fifth helpings. Come again? Well, yes! Yes!

When the door closed on the last guest, Veronica rather wearily performed a little rite which was to be symbolic of the years to come: she put a lighted candle in the window. It was Ricky who lighted it.

"And that's the way it should be," she said, "always! You lighting me on and on and on. A little light in this part of the world known as the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave."

The Hat That Cost a Sweet Potato

By Margaret T. Applegarth

IT was raining cats and dogs! You might almost think that a kitten and a puppy were landing on the window sill, the rain came down with such a thump and bang. Indeed, the noise grew so loud that finally it dawned on Flossie that it really was some one at the door, so with her heart beating like a trip-hammer she went over and opened it an inch: just wide enough to let her dear little black nose poke out, and one startled eye be seen.

"Anybody there?" she asked in a trembly voice.

"Somebody is!" answered another voice, "Oh, do let me in!" and there appeared before Flossie the wettest lady she had ever seen in all her life: rivers of rain ran down her cheeks, niagaras of rain plunged off her hat, smaller waterfalls of rain splashed from her shoulders, brooklets of rain trickled from her shoes—oh, she was very, very wet, and when she came indoors she left a little lake wherever she stood on the cabin floor.

"I'm not only wet through, but I've lost my way, and I'm simply starving!" she laughed merrily, as she began trying to dry herself before the hearth where a jolly fire was snapping busily. "Isn't this the best fire? And am I not the forlornest sight? Just look at this poor old hat, soaked through till it's limp as a rag. One thing is sure, I can never wear it again."

Quick as a flash Flossie had her big idea: "Please, missy, I'd admire to buy it off you, only just this minute there isn't one single sol'tary penny in this here log cabin. But oh, I'd just admire to buy it off you!"

The Very Wet Lady smiled all over her very wet face; "I can't imagine what you want the old thing for, my dear, for it's simply ruined, but you can certainly have it—for nothing! Unless you'd like to give me something to eat, for I'm simply ravenous. . . ."

Flossie rolled her eyes every which way to see what she could find that was eat-able and drink-able, but not a crumb or a drop of anything could she discover. Then suddenly she remembered the fire on the hearth—again and again mammy would put a sweet potato in the embers to bake, so Flossie poked the fire with the broom-handle, and oh joy! a sweet potato came rolling out.

"Missy, would you-all take one measly, spindly li'l sweet 'tater for that puffeckly scrumptious-grand hat?" she asked, hardly daring to hope; but the Very Wet Lady smilingly said that she was more than willing to sell her very wet hat for such a nice hot potato, so the exchange was made, and while the lady munched her potato, Flossie twirled that precious hat round and round in her fingers before the fire to dry it.

"Nebber in all my born days did I 'spect to own a really-truly hat with pink flowers and green ribbings looped all over it," sighed Flossie blissfully, "even mammy nebber had a hat. So when I dries it off, I 'spect folks will want to borrow it a right smart lot, so I'm going to hide it away and save it up and save it up and save it up. 'Deed I am! Nobody round these diggings ain't never going to see me wearing it—not much."

"But that's what hats are for—to wear; so why should you 'save it up'?"

"Save it up for Spelman, of course," said Flossie with bated breath. "What for would I need a hat round this old place? But by'n by I'm aiming to go to Spelman all the same as Mary Lily, and that's why I got to save it up. See?"

"No, I don't see at all," laughed the Very Wet Lady, "for I never heard of Spelman or of Mary Lily, so I can't imagine saving up a hat for them!"

"You nebber heard tell of Spelman?" gasped Flossie in stunned surprise. "Why where-all do you live not to hear 'bout Spelman, missy? It's the grandiest place. It's the biggerest, beautifullest place. It's packed jamfullest of girls of any place in this here country. 'Deed it is! Black girls. And no matter how poor you are, or how little you know, they take you at Spelman. 'Deed they do! And Spelman helps you earn the money. Spelman teaches you all those things you don't know. I guess there's no place you ever heard tell of quite like Spelman. Mary Lily knows, for she's been there! 'Deed she has And vacation-times when Spelman sends her home to rest up, you don't catch Mary Lily resting. No ma'am! Mary Lily, she comes over here and learns me my a, b, c's and how to read from primers and how to add and multiply and not get fooled when I drive to market with pappy. Mary Lily is the reason why I talk all the same as you, and not like lots of negroes round here who nebber had 'vantages, 'vantages like Mary Lily fetches home to me from Spelman. And not only to me, but Mary Lily learns all the kids. 'Deed she does! She shows the old grannies how to knit; she shows the men folks how to plant seeds so they'll come up better'n seeds ever come up before. She even learns the mammies how to wash the babies and keep the sun out of their eyes. Every blessed thing that Mary Lily learns at Spelman she teaches in this li'l village. See?"

The Very Wet Lady was beginning to see, of course; but she still had at least twenty questions to ask: What was Spelman exactly? Was it a big place?

Flossie laid down the hat that cost a sweet potato (ah so carefully!) and began tracing patterns on the little cabin floor: "Spelman is a seminary," she explained, "and Mary Lily says it's the beautifullest place in the world. 'Deed it is! Trees that riz way up in the air and wave their arms real gentle-like. Grand driveways that curve this way and that between those trees. And there are more buildings than you could shake a stick at: for in some of those buildings Mary Lily sleeps at night; in other buildings Mary Lily goes to classes in reading and 'rithmetic and joggerfry. In other buildings Mary Lily learns the proper how of cooking and sweeping and sewing. In other buildings Mary Lily even learn to teach. Yes ma'am, a lot of little kids come every blessed day and Mary Lily learns to teach them: that's how she could start in on me so grand and quick. Then there's one building specially for Mary Lily to be sick in, and any sick black person near Spelman dast go to that building and be just as sick as they want to, and for as long

COURAGE NEEDED TODAY. FOR WHAT?
John. 1:1-9.
(ARMISTICE DAY)

By Charles Durden

1. The Need of Courage.

The Hebrew poet has described youth as the period of great ambitions when men soar on wings as eagles; midlife he calls the time of entire efficiency, when men run and are not weary; age is still triumphant if it can continue to walk and not faint. As life goes on most of us come to see that it may call for greater heroism to walk and not faint than to soar on winged hopes or run on tireless feet. In the life of Sir Walter Scott each of these periods was experienced in turn. He had his winged period, when life was easy, popularity was given him and the world was within his grasp. Building fame and fortune he came into his second period, and records the ease with which he produced his most popular works. But disaster came. In tragic downfall, he is heavily involved in debt. It was in this third period that he refused defeat, defied ill-luck and toiled valiantly on. The aged, heroic, toil-worn Scott is infinitely greater in his fine courage and manly battle than the brilliant Scott of brighter days.

Our supreme need is courage, for courage in some form we must have if we are not to be trampled under foot. It is for the coward alone that defeat is final. The man of courage ever has a glorious future, however greatly defeated. This is the lesson of all great lives. Take at random a group of biographies, and they are alike in this, whatever be their dissimilarities, that they are documents of human courage. Always in their hearts the undying flame of undaunted courage burns. Courage is the heroic temper which defies the untoward events and marches on to victory.

2. A Bird's-eye View of the Task Reveals the Need for Courage.

(1) The condition of the world summons us to courageous service. Strife and class divide us. Self-interest builds barriers of hate. War is always imminent. Dogmatism on one hand assumes unbrotherly attitudes and menaces fellowship, while wideness of sympathy and liberality of spirit often becomes supine and superficial.

The challenge of the open doors of the wide world calls for courage. The bigness of the task bewilders and overwhelms us. The far-off world, the near-at-home call us. Orient and Occident alike, the need is for brave hearts, prepared minds, loyal spirits.

(2) The work of the local church demands courage. The basis of success in the larger task is in the work of the local church and union. The vision of the world-wide work can grow only as the vision of the home task becomes clearer. The prosaic duties of faithful church membership must be courageously performed, even if they lack the glamour of the far-away.

The stream of missionaries and ministers and secretaries and assistants for churches flows out of the local B. Y. P. U. Courage to overcome obstacles in training them; courage to send them to the places of preparation; courage to give them to larger fields, fill their places at home and carry on—courage aplenty is needed.

Then, too, life is complex, crowded, hurried. Work falls upon the few. The spirit of indifference seeps in. Disloyalty to the local church takes the heart out of the leaders. The very need of this hour is a compelling challenge to all young people to stand by, lend a hand and right the ship.

3. The Demand For Courage is Personal.

Self-conquest is the most difficult part of it. We must conquer ourselves if we would conquer mankind for Christ. And that calls for courage. The modern child is inoculated at birth with a greed of money. His choice of vocation or profession is controlled, not by ideals, but by rewards. It takes courage for him to learn to be himself, to defend his own rights in himself, to be bold enough to live life in his own way. Let him survey his own life, look squarely at his own failings, inventory his weaknesses—he will discover field enough for conquest. Courage discovers opportunity. Courage does not obey circumstances, it creates them. The uncourageous man falls into his narrow groove, and blames the injustice of life for his misfortune. The courageous man gets out of the groove, takes up arms against adverse circumstances, faces risks with cheerfulness, and conquers. Faith is the supreme courage. It is soul-courage. It is an easy and cowardly thing to deny; it needs supreme courage to believe.

Endings and Beginnings

The B. Y. P. U. Trumpet of Emmanuel Church of Schenectady, N. Y., contains the following editorial by the president, Everett S. Lee:

The year just ended has been one wherein Emmanuel B. Y. P. U. has shown progress in its aims and ideals. This is because of the loyalty of the individual members. There is no one of our 100 members who cannot look back and say, "I did something to make the society better." Where such a spirit exists progress is inevitable.

The incoming officers will find themselves leading a strong virile organization eager to do things. And there are many things for the society to do. The Sunday evening devotions, an hour for praise and testimony to the glory of Christ as we find him in our daily lives, ought to be augmented as richly as possible by group prayer meetings and personal conversations with those who have not yet given themselves to Jesus Christ. The missionary endeavor of the society ought to be crystalized to even a greater extent by more active participation in the Young People's Missionary Society, giving an evening a month to mission study, and an equivalent or more of helpful work. The ringing need of the hour is found in these two branches of our work—more Christianity ourselves, more for others.

The largest committee of the society should be the membership committee—for every society member should feel an obligation to bring in new members. If you find our society fills a need in your life, bring others in that they may share of the bounty, and your share will thereby be increased. Be a helper to the membership committee.

The large and active membership of our society puts upon us an increased obligation in our work for others. When called upon by the western district of our association, or by our association, our response should be generous. Though our activities may be many, and in some respects the interests of our members diverse, we should not forget these obligations, for the hardest lot can best be assumed by the strongest.

Two new activities of the past year need our thought in the days to come. Our B. Y. P. U. paper, the Trumpet, a romping youngster, must grow on. More important even than the enjoyment we ourselves get from its pages is that which has come to our alumni members from its monthly visits. Let us all resolve to do that which will keep the Trumpet with us, whatever the future shows it to be. The second new activity is our participation in the B. Y. P. U. national convention. This year seven of our number went to Boston; next year Denver is the convention city. The gain to our society ought to be great from convention participation.

And so another year begins as the past year ends. The outlook for our society is bright, our hopes and our expectations will be realized in proportion to our application of the talents which we have.

The B. Y. P. U. Ontario and Quebec is thoroughly organizing for the winter's activities. The first vice-president will superintend all matters relating to associational B. Y. P. U. work, the second vice-president, the daily devotions and life service leagues and the third vice-president, the trained leaders or Christian culture course and the tithers' league.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

The Scotch evangelist, Samuel G. McNeil, of Philadelphia, so widely and favorably known, has been preaching in special meetings at Temple Church, Rev. Llewellyn Brown, pastor. This was not his first appearance—this was a cordial come-back that was much appreciated and fruitful. Rev. C. A. Boyd, director of religious education for Wisconsin, becomes the assistant pastor in this great church and leader of the educational and church school life.

Beulah, the beautiful, Rev. Herman Lang, had a great rally day Oct. 7, when all services were crowded and the Bible school broke all records. Not satisfied with that, the people with great rejoicing laid down over $900 to apply on the church debt. It was Beulah that entertained the recent evangelistic conference.

It takes our negro churches to show the way to real giving. The old Second Church is a wonderful people. Pastor Bradby has this week been celebrating his fourteenth anniversary as pastor. Their modern edifice is altogether too small for the audiences that gather. Two services are maintained at the same time, Assistant Pastor McNeil preaching in the overflow meeting and then hundreds are turned away. An additional plot of ground has been purchased adjoining the present edifice and the twenty-ninth of September the membership laid down over $7,000 in cash toward its purchase.

Jefferson Avenue, under the inspiring leadership of Rev. Arthur Vincent Allen, is enthusiastically meeting the challenge of its wonderful field. The church building has already proved too small and the fourth floor has now been completed, with its gym, etc., which helps to meet the Bible school and social needs of the church. Sunday, Oct. 7, was rally day, with over 600 in the church school.

I have already referred to the new European group that the Detroit Baptist Union has taken on a ministry to—the Ukranian. A council, recently held, recognized the new church and also approved the ordination of the pastor. Ordination services were held on Sunday, Oct. 7, when the pastor, Rev. J. P. Zinkiw, was ordained to the gospel ministry. Steps have already been taken to secure for the congregation a permanent place of worship.

A successful week-day school of religion is being inaugurated at the Liberty School in Highland Park, across the street from the Conley Memorial Church, of which Rev. Wm. R. Shaw is pastor. Rev. B. T. Leonard, director of religious education of the Detroit Baptist Union, and his faithful and capable wife, have had much to do in its inauguration and teaching. Three grades are reached in its program. Principal McLaughlin and Superintendent Knapp of the Highland Park schools have been most cordial to the new endeavor.

The Woman's Missionary Union Annual

The Woman's Missionary Union of the Detroit Baptist Association met for its annual gathering at the Northwestern Church on Friday, Oct. 12, for an all-day conference of three sessions. There was a large attendance and a fine spirit shown. The morning program included addresses by Mrs. H. C. Gleiss and Mrs. M. F. Sanborn, with a domestic science demonstration by Misses Lund, Shepherd, Bistor and Cooper. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Pres., Mrs. H. Whitaker; vice-pres., Mrs. H. Lang; sec. and treas., Mrs. Ruth Conley McGregor; leader of World Wide Guild, Mary McDonald; literature sec., Mrs. Miller.

The principal speaker of the afternoon was Miss Ina E. Burton, organization secretary of the Women's Home Mission Society. Miss Alice Brimson and Mrs. Chas. H. Brennan also gave addresses.

At 6:30 was the girls' rally and dinner, followed by W. W. G. parade and an address by Miss Burton on "The Girlhood of Europe."

This is the efficient organization that works as a woman's auxiliary with the Detroit Baptist Union. Its annual reports are published with the Detroit Baptist Union.

Burma

By J. Herbert Cope

Retrenchment is the vogue in government circles as well as mission. There is a provincial committee at work and it has not lacked for advice. If the suggestions offered by the reform party should be accepted there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth among the higher officials. But the fact seems to be that the government has about reached the limit of taxation, and subtraction not addition, must govern future governmental activity.

The Mitchell Memorial Hospital recently graduated its second class in nursing. There were the same number as last year and as then, the whole four have been promptly placed. The need for nurses will not be met for a long time. The schools are conducting health activities among the pupils. Doctors have made careful examination of entire schools and their recommendations have been drastic. In one, a large number of pupils were found with enlarged tonsils which really mean some operations, although it probably will not be done. In another, hook-worm was found to be prevalent. One missionary was called by his advisory body of natives to explain why there was so much sickness in the school. The government is advocating this method and the missionaries are cooperating.

The spiritual welfare of the children is not being neglected. The evangelistic committee has published the dates for the campaigns in the various schools. Ten days are given to each, with two speakers from other stations or cities. Some missionaries are conducting campaigns with their own staff. Of course Doctor and Mrs. Thomas are busy at some of the schools, but it is necessary to call in the Burman and Karen workers to supplement.

Educational work is growing to the point where it is felt a special conference should be held for the exchange of views and the discussion of vital matters. As in the case of the N. B. C., the regular sessions of the conference are so full with matters which concern the mission as a whole that it was felt necessary to have a pre-conference conference on education. There are 800 mission schools with 30,000 pupils.

Missionaries are being urged to attend the conference this year to meet the deputation from the women's board. These visits are most helpful. We wish there were more of them. In this day of easy travel and western convenience, one can reach all but a very few of the mission stations by rail, river or motor. The secretaries no longer have the experience of bumping and jolting along in ox-carts. The hardships of the missionaries are not what they were at one time. In fact, at the present time I guess the concensus of opinion would be that the greatest trial is a 25 per cent cut in appropriations with the necessity of keeping the work going.

Upon the news of the death of President Harding all offices throughout India and Burma were closed for the day and flags flew at half-mast. It was a thoughtful and striking tribute. Our British cousins know how to do things.

Doctor Milan Lester Ward

An Appreciation

Baptists, especially those in Kansas, will feel sorely the loss of Dr. M. L. Ward, who departed for his heavenly home Aug. 4, 1923.

Born in Meredith, N. Y., Dec. 24, 1829, his life-span stretched across almost three generations. Over fifty years of his career were spent in the teaching profession. Thirty-five of those years were spent in Kansas, and twenty-five were devoted to Ottawa University. Since 1905 he had been professor emeritus of mathematics in the latter institution. During the years spent in Kansas, Doctor Ward was active in Baptist affairs. He rendered valuable service as secretary of the state convention, and later as its president. But his chief work lay in the establishment of a college wherein Baptist young people could be educated. Six generations of college students in Ottawa University felt the warmth of his personal interest in their welfare. Ottawa University will long thrill to the name and work of Doctor Ward.

On his ninety-third birthday, a reception was given him in the college gymnasium, when citizens, alumni and students joined in honoring the "grand old man" of the university. This recognition of his services was timely. The appreciation of those who benefited by his labors was expressed while he could yet hear the words and feel the hand clasp.

The Chandler-Ward Bible class was his chief local undertaking. To it he gave his attention during the last years of his life. Up to within three months of his death he continued to serve the class, yielding up his work only when increasing weakness compelled. On Aug. 4 he answered the roll-call of the Great Teacher to continue his studies in the Book of Life.

An Appreciation

By George L. White

Rev. E. R. Hermiston, who was our missionary on chapel car "Grace" died very suddenly at Modesto, Calif., Thursday evening, Sept. 27. Mr. and Mrs. Hermiston began chapel car work with the American Baptist Publication Society twenty years ago. They have rendered continuous service first on chapel car "Immanuel" for twelve years and then on chapel car "Grace" for eight years. Upon the day of Mr. Hermiston's death they lacked but nine days of rounding out twenty years of chapel-car service. During this time they have organized large numbers of churches and Sunday schools and have erected about thirty-five church buildings. Many thousands have professed conversion and have been gathered into the churches.

Mr. and Mrs. Hermiston have gone to the most difficult pioneer fields in Montana, Washington, Idaho, Oregon, California, Nevada and Arizona. No one can estimate the good accomplished in our western states as a result of their efforts. Thousands of people mourn Mr. Hermiston's departure and sympathize deeply with his wife and daughter.

Mr. Hermiston was born in Kingston, Ontario, May 4, 1871, of Scotch parentage. Although in his work he was constantly struggling with the most difficult situations he always radiated good cheer. He presented the gospel of Christ clearly and with a fervent and effective appeal. It may truly be said of him as of his Lord that "he went about doing good."

Why Register?

Hundreds of Baptists all through the convention field are being asked to register for the Bible and missionary conferences this week. Should they do it? Why?

The following "Reasons for Registering," prepared by the Rev. J. F. Ingram, conference secretary in Portland and Bangor, Maine, give seven good reasons:

1. This conference is the biggest and best in our denominational history.
2. The teams of speakers are exceptionally strong.
3. Every Baptist needs the spiritual uplift of this conference.
4. The conference needs every Baptist's support.
5. This conference gives every Baptist an opportunity to become acquainted with and to participate in city, national and international denominational problems and activities.
6. This conference, in three days, will give every delegate present a wider and more intelligent interest in Baptist world affairs than four months of reading could give.
7. This great gathering will prepare all Baptists to enjoy their Christian heritage.

We mention only seven good reasons why every Baptist should register for the conferences, but anything supported by seven good reasons is worthy of our united support.

Do it now!

President Faunce of Brown University delivered the address on Oct. 12, when the town of Wrentham celebrated the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its founding. At that time a bronze tablet was erected in West Wrentham containing the following inscription:

This stone formed a part of the foundation of Williams Academy, Wrentham, which was founded in 1773 by the Rev. William Williams, graduate in 1769 of Rhode Island College, now Brown University, and pastor of the First Baptist Church in Wrentham in 1776. Among its students was Horace Mann. Here more than 80 pupils were prepared for entrance to Rhode Island College, among them Dr. Jonathan Maxcy, its second president. From 1777 to 1779 when the college building was used as barracks and later as a hospital for French troops the Rhode Island College library was brought here for safe keeping. This tablet is placed by the citizens of Wrentham, 1923. Williams Academy stood 60 feet southwest of this spot.

There will be a committee of three in each of the ten associations and the chairmen of these committees will constitute the state committee. King, secretary of evangelism for the New England District under the Home Mission Society, helped in forwarding the interest of evangelism throughout the state.

RHODE ISLAND

NEW YORK

Edward Bleakney, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Utica, was appointed a representative to the Citizenship Conference at Washington, D. C.

Cook Academy opened its fiftieth year with seventy-three boarding and seventy-two day students—a total of 145. The quality of students is of an unusual grade and promises well for a strong scholastic year. The faculty comprises twelve teachers, nine of whom are men. All are well trained. The denomination can feel justified in putting money into the work, for the entire program of the school is Christian and ennobling in purpose. Strong Bible instruction is given by Rev. Walter C. Mason of the local Baptist church, who is also a member of the academy faculty. Every teacher is an active Christian and helps in the student Y. M. C. A.

NEW JERSEY

The Mt. Pleasant Church, Newark, has purchased a brick parsonage about two blocks from the church property. All departments have begun the fall work with enthusiasm. Sidney W. Powell is pastor.

VERMONT

Vermont Academy, John B. Cook, principal, has 181 students enrolled, the largest number in either the old or new academy for more than thirty years. The greatest need at the present moment is a new dormitory which it is hoped will be erected early next spring.

The seven associations were held recently with unusual interest and more than average attendance. The speakers from outside the state were Miss Abbie Sanderson, a returned missionary from China, and Rev. York A. King, superintendent of evangelism for New England. Dr. W. A. Davison presented the future program, including the securing of new pledges and the collecting of the pledges already made to the New World Movement and also the plan of the denomination beyond the New World Movement. This program was heartily received and approved. Hon. Henry Bond spoke at six of the associations on evangelism. Mr. Bond is chairman of the state committee, and a member has been secured from each of the different associations to act with him as a state committee. The associational chairman has in almost every case secured a representative from each church who will cooperate with the pastor in organizing prayer groups, laying plans for special meetings and in every possible way winning souls to Christ and the church.

The friends of Rev. and Mrs. A. S. Buzzell, formerly at Putney, North Troy and West Halifax, regret to learn of Mr. Buzzell's decease, Aug. 5 while at the home of his daughter in Winchester, N. H.

William B. Chase, who has been pastor of the Ludlow Church since 1919, has closed his work on that field and become pastor of the First Church, Houlton, Me.

The First Church, Richford, Rev. George Pomfrey, pastor, in cooperation with other churches, held a daily vacation Bible school for three weeks during the summer. There were five classes with a registration of 136. Pastor Pomfrey recently received a call to the pastorate of the church at Claremont, N. H., which he declined, desiring to remain at Richford and in Vermont. The Baptist and Methodist churches are now in the midst of a series of evangelistic meetings, with Doctor and Mrs. Reese as assistants.

The Randolph Church, Rev. R. G. Greengrass, pastor, has a live mission band which recently cleared $36 through a food sale, $25 of which was sent to the state office for missions.

The West Halifax Church called Rev. Walter I. Van Wickle to the pastorate. He is now established on the field.

The Fair Haven and Hydeville churches recently secured for pastor Rev. C. F. Bleakney of Bridgewater, Mass. He is already established in the parsonage at Fair Haven.

The Poultney Church met with a severe loss in the death of Mrs. E. M. Bixby. Mrs. Bixby was a returned missionary, and therefore especially interested in all the plans and work for foreign missions. Her husband, Deacon E. M. Bixby, one of the oldest and most faithful church members, has the sympathy of friends in the affliction and loss that has come to him.

The Loyalty Luncheon for the state is to be held at Burlington on Friday evening, Nov. 9, and Saturday morning, the tenth. Mrs. George W. Peck of Rutland is the state leader, and Mrs. W. A. Davison is the chairman of the entertainment committee at Burlington. It is hoped to have at least one representative from each church in the state at the supper Friday evening. Lodging, breakfast and lunch will be furnished free by the Burlington ladies. Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery and three other speakers of prominence will be present.

Dedication of Petworth Church

A new Baptist property was dedicated Sept. 30. The Petworth Church was organized eleven years ago with approximately forty members. The first meetings were held in a private house that was rented for the purpose, and in 1914 the Sunday-school building was dedicated. Rev. F. Paul Langhorne was called to the pastorate in 1916 and has been with the church ever since. During this pastorate the church has taken a strong hold upon the rapidly growing community and the membership has grown from forty to nearly 400. The Sunday school has increased from an average attendance of seventy-eight to an average of over 300, with an enrolment of over 400.

The new edifice is in keeping with the Sunday-school house and has a frontage on Randolph street. The auditorium will seat between seven and eight hundred persons. The adult department of the Sunday school will be on the ground floor of the new building, with a seating capacity of 600. The Sunday school equipment is strictly modern and furnishes ample provisions for separate classrooms. The auditorium is lighted by large wrought iron lanterns, and the pipe organ is the chief decoration of the front of the building. The cost of the new edifice is about $70,000, and that, with the Sunday-school house adjoining, represents a property worth $100,000.

The services of dedication began on Sept. 23 and lasted through the following Sunday. The opening sermon was preached by H. W. O. Millington, executive secretary of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches. Monday night was observed as denominational night. Greetings were brought by Mr. E. Hilton Jackson, Dean William Allen Wilbur, and by several of the pastors, closing with a sermon by J. J. Muir. Tuesday was community night. Wednesday night was observed as church night when, in addition to brief addresses appropriate to the occasion, a sermon was preached by H. A. Tupper. Thursday night was Sunday school and young people's night and at that time C. H. Woolston of Philadelphia made an address. Friday was music night and an organ recital was given by Prof. Louis Potter, organist of the Calvary Church. This service represented the dedication of the new organ. Sunday, Sept. 30, was dedication day, and in the morning the sermon was preached by Samuel G. Neil, Bible and field secretary of the Publication Society, and in the evening the sermon was delievered by Milton G. Evans, president of the Crozer Theological Seminary.

Another Account of Japanese Earthquake

BY CLARA A. CONVERSE

MISS CONVERSE went out to Japan about thirty-two years ago and has become widely known for her work in the Mary A. Colby School. In her own words, the story of the earthquake is told, written on Sept. 3, two days after:

"I went to Yokohama Saturday, Sept. 1, to do some shopping and had taken a kuruma to return by way of the post-office. It occurred to me that I was near the Japanese Advertiser's office, and so just stopped to order papers sent to us. My message was short, but before I was quite finished the quake came. I was on the first floor, near the entrance, but I could not stand, just crouched in the doorway, which is always the safest place. It was about 11:55 o'clock.

"The air was immediately black with soot and dust. The building I was in was a strong stone building—and the place where I crouched is still standing, though the inside of the building is burned out. Soon fire broke out in different places and though the streets in every direction were piled high with debris, we climbed over it—all bricks, timbers, stones. I just followed the others.

"As we were climbing over the debris we could hear the groans from those buried beneath. Every house was down. There was no street, the road being filled with debris. Finally I saw whither we were hastening when the park came in view. By this time fires were blazing in every direction. We reached the park and stayed there until the next morning. It was literally packed. At night we could not lie down except to do so in turns, for lack of space. One of our graduates who was in an office, and another gentleman, saw me and called me to them. They were Kanagawa people. As soon as it was light we went to the Bund, the street by the seashore. To get there we waded through muddy water up to our knees, for we could not go the usual way. We saw people from Kanagawa and found that we could pass and so started to walk, reaching there about eight o'clock in the morning. It was about three miles. All along the way houses were down, or if frames were standing the insides were completely burned out.

"The experience in the park was indescribable. Encircled by roaring flames on every side, the heat was severe and the smoke stifling, but we put our faces close to the earth and so could breathe. This unbearable heat was not, however, for so very many hours. The wounded were by us and one man died very near me. When we went through the street to the Bund, and also along the way to Kanagawa, the corpses were lying everywhere.

"I heard that the school was safe, but I knew they would be in great anxiety, so I hurried as fast as I could. I had eaten nothing since the morning I left and had only two swallows of water out of a big pail. A well was drained. When water was brought during the night the demand for it was pitiful.

"When we reached Kanagawa, at the foot of the hill leading to the school, a Japanese smilingly handed me a Japanese pear. This pear is full of juice so it was fine for quenching thirst. It was a boon.

"As I came near the school I met a graduate, not now in school, and she greeted me and hurried to the house to get me a drink. They say that the cry, 'The principal has come,' was shouted again and again, and one came in with milk and another with water and there was great rejoicing.

"A Japanese friend went, it seems, to the park the night before and to the bluff, but though he called my name. I did not respond. There were so many calling that it is not strange I did not hear him and that he did not find me. He came at a great risk, for fires were blazing everywhere. They say he searched from eleven o'clock at night until five o'clock in the morning.

"Of course my first thought was as to the safety of the people. One of the Bible women and three of the pupils were all that were in the house besides the cook and her boy and two servants with their families. All these were safe.

"Our foreign house, the recitation building, the chapel building, with recitation rooms, and the gymnasium do not seem to be specially demolished except that the plastering is everywhere off on the floor and over everything. The dormitory is badly broken. Repairs will require a great deal of money. Many of our pupils are burned out. How many are alive we do not know. Everything in Yokohama is gone, it would seem from reports. Our two missionary residences and the church in the same compound are in ashes.

"The Fishers and Gressitts were away for the summer. Mr. Gressitt himself came home Saturday morning and went to the boat with a friend. While there the earthquake came. There were people in the house, and when he was here yesterday he had on a white suit which looked nearer being black. That was all he had in the world, he said.

"The public buildings, the fine large Memorial Hall—built on the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the country to foreigners, postoffices, county house, city house, many schools—perhaps all—four railroad stations, churches—everything wiped out. The work of fifty years, just celebrated, in the twinkling of an eye, wiped out."

The foregoing was written by Miss Converse on the Monday following the Saturday of the earthquake. She continues her letter on Tuesday, Sept. 4th:

"Frequent quakes, some very severe, have followed the first one. Sunday night we all slept out of doors on our lawn, but last night, we all slept indoors. Three or four times we got up on account of the quakes, but nothing serious—probably there will be nothing more.

"One thing is sure as can be—if I had not called at the Japan Advertiser, this being a strong building, I should have been crushed under the debris, for the road I should have passed was piled high with debris.

"Mr. Root, one of the Americans, lost his wife, his son and his son's financee. He was able to trace them so that he knows pretty well where they were at the time. They were doubtless buried under the debris. Another American was looking for his wife in about the same place. He called and called and his wife answered him by name. They went to work with vigor to excavate her, but the fire came and they were obliged to stop. He thinks his people were there.

"God has been wonderfully gracious to us. We feel that we are so well off. We are housing others, and as we find out the needy ones, shall house more. Hisa Wakamatsu, one of our workers, is ready to give away everything she has—I have to caution her. She took sixteen pairs of tabi (Japanese stockings) to Yokohama yesterday and gave them to those who need them. I hear that Tokyo and other places are pretty well burned out.

"We have little in the house to eat. The cook had given an order that day which was not filled, but the people are very kind. The farmer near here told us to take from the field sweet potatoes and onions. Others have given us rice. It is most fortunate that school had not begun.

"Do not be anxious about me. I have written that you may know I am much better off than I might be. On how much less than we ordinarily think, we can subsist. It will be a long time before we can have electric lights or the telephone, but we happen to have a supply of candles which will do. We shall not be able to have city water for some time, but we have a good well and have been able to supply many people.

"I am busy cleaning house and meeting people who come with sad stories. We shall not be able to open the school for some time. Two large mission girls' schools, the oldest, are burned, also the government school. This is about the only girls' school in the city now."

Miss Converse did not send the letter away until Thursday and her last words were, "all safe."

Japan Made Bibleless by Earthquake

THE earthquake, fire and tidal wave which has laid in ruins two of the principal cities of Japan with a staggering loss of life and property and with suffering unprecedented, has created a new spiritual opportunity among the Japanese people.

It is a startling fact that Yokohama produced and sent out annually for missionary circulation more copies of the Christian scriptures than any other city in the world. The Fukuin Printing Company, from which these scriptures went forth by the millions not alone to all parts of the Island Empire, but also to China, Philippine Islands, Siam and all parts of the Far East, is a total wreck. The director and the entire operating force of 700 to 1,000 persons were killed.

Shortly before the earthquake, the American Bible Society received word from its representative in Japan, that the circulation for the first three months of the year was practically as large as the first six months of the preceding year. It is his judgment that there has been a great awakening of interest in spiritual things and a remarkable turning to moral and religious literature, which has brought about a wonderful opportunity for broadcasting the Christian scriptures.

The entire stock of Bibles in the depositories both in Tokyo and Yokohama and the Bibles in the homes of these two cities and the whole stricken area are gone. The people are entirely without copies of the Bible or the New Testament or even smaller portions.

The American Bible Society has sole responsibility for this part of Japan. To meet the immediate emergency, the society has arranged to produce at once on presses running night and day, half a million copies of the Gospels in Japanese, reproduced by photography from books in hand at the Bible House in New York. It has arranged also for a shipment by fastest possible method of hundreds of thousands of copies of the Gospels in English which are extensively sold in the schools of Japan. It has cabled to its agencies on the Pacific coast, in China and in the Philippines to forward at once all available copies of Japanese scriptures.

It has not been possible as yet to make an exact determination of the losses and replacement values; if the plates in Yokohama have been destroyed, as there is every reason to believe, it is estimated that at least $300,000 will be required to rehabilitate the work.

Unlike some of the mission boards of the churches, the losses of the American Bible Society by the earthquake have not been confined to Japan alone. A great many of the books used in China in many dialects were printed on the presses in Yokohama. The scriptures also for the Philippine Islands in ten dialects, as well as in a number of languages used in Siam were also printed in Yokohama.

When the losses are more definitely known, the American Bible Society will be obliged to send forth an appeal to the Christian people in America to help in the rehabilitation of these physical losses which supply the spiritual needs of hundreds of millions of people.

In response to the expressions of sympathy on the part of the board of managers of the society, Count Yamamoto, prime minister of Japan, sent the following cable to the society: "The Japanese government has deepest appreciation for sympathetic expression by your society."

Upon hearing of the society's losses in Japan, Mr. Hanihara, the Japanese ambassador in Washington wrote to William I. Haven, general secretary of the American Bible Society, as follows:

"I appreciate deeply your letter of sympathy which also informs me of the message you have sent to the prime minister in Tokyo. I have, of course, long been familiar with the splendid work of your society in my country and elsewhere and I have only admiration for it. When a complete account of the damage arrives, I hope that you may learn that your losses are not as severe as you now imagine. I shall be glad if you will convey to the members of your board an expression of my gratitude for the sympathy you expressed. You may be sure that Japan will be greatly heartened in the task of repairing the physical damage by the knowledge that America's friendship is so genuinely hers."

Many other leaders of the Japanese nation will earnestly hope for a speedy rehabilitation of the losses sustained by the American Bible Society because of the confidence which they feel in the moral and spiritual values of the society's program in Japan and the Near East.

Opening of Ford Hall Forum

Rev. Jones I. Corrigan, S. J., professor of ethics at Boston College, was the speaker on the opening night at the Ford Hall Forum, Sunday evening, Oct. 21. He will speak on the topic, "The Social Menace of Divorce."

Since the closing meeting of last season, Ford Hall folks have been keeping up the fellowship in picnic gatherings, theater parties and business meetings. In the meantime, Ford Hall itself has been completely renovated, with fresh decorations throughout. There are now over 600 of the Ford Hall folks, constituting an inner group who take an active interest in the management of the meetings. They meet Sunday afternoons, once a month. There will be initiated Oct. 28 a new feature of the work, to be known as the Round Table. On the fourth Sunday afternoon of every month during the forum season this group, under the chairmanship of Mr. Walter L. Barrell, will meet in Kingsley Hall in the Ford Building, for a more intensive discussion of forum topics.

Following the opening night, the program for the next four weeks will be as follows: Oct. 28, Prof. Bruno Roselli of Vassar College, who has just returned from Fiume and the Ruhr; Nov. 4 (health permitting), John Graham Brooks, whose topic will be "A New Definition of Hell"; Nov. 11, the Caney Creek boys, a group of young Kentucky mountaineers, fourteen to sixteen years of age; Nov. 18, Gov. William E. Sweet of Colorado, who will speak on "Twentieth Century Democracy." The program for Nov. 25 is of unusual character, with a Baptist minister, Charles H. Rust, of Scranton, Pa., speaking on "A Christian's Appreciation of Judaism," and sharing the hour with his friend, Rabbi Bernard Heller of Scranton, whose topic will be "A Rabbi's Appreciation of Jesus."

The speakers in December will be Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the Nation; Arthur D. Rees, of Philadelphia; A. Emil Davies, a prominent member of the English Labor Party and of the London County Council; and William Pickens, the well-known colored orator. Other speakers who have been engaged for succeeding Sunday nights are John Haynes Holmes, Rabbi Louis Wolsey of Cleveland, Miss Margaret Slattery, Scott Nearing, Dr. Katherine Bement Davis, Dr. Alice Salomon (sometimes called the Jane Addams of Germany), Edward A. Steiner, and Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver of Cleveland.

The Swedish Baptist General Conference of America, at its recent meeting held in Chicago, issued a statement of more than passing interest. It reads: "With heartfelt thanks do we look back upon another year of happy cooperation with our American brethren in the various missionary departments of the Northern Baptist Convention. We earnestly pray that this relation may continue and be further strengthened by a mutual understanding of the great task which confronts us separately and collectively. The rising wave of immigration is a special call to us as Swedish Baptists to strain every effort to give to the thousands of our countrymen, who these days come to our shores, the same religious privileges, which we before them have so richly enjoyed in our beloved America. We thank God for the encouragement and liberal aid which in times past have been given us in this work by the American brethren, while we realize that growing responsibility is falling upon us for carrying on this work."

efficiency for our Lord. Those rare moments under the spell of Gilkey when he spoke of the inner drive of the spirit, and showing that "the authority for our task comes from within and not from without, will ever be in our memories. What shall be said of Doctor Padelford and his great speech on education? He had gathered thrilling materials from church history to prove that a trained mind has always guided the great religious movements. The recent visit of Dr. S. G. Neil to Latin America and his report of it, showed our task there. Doctor Lerrigo appeared before us twice, once showing the Baptists of Illinois how our work is correlated. The gathering at Stockholm was vividly portrayed in this speech. In the other address our future denominational program was presented.

The convention was fortunate in having the president of the Baptist World Alliance present, Dr. E. Y. Mullins, Louisville, Ky. He held the attention of the great congregation to "the Baptist of the World and the future." The address was based upon a few questions. These were answered adequately. A SPECIALIZED HOSPITAL SERVICE

THE THREE Baptist hospitals, although conducted as general hospitals, have each been adapted for an individual service, increasing efficiency and avoiding duplication. A specialized medical service for women, a specialized service for mental and nervous diseases, and a specialized service in surgery are thereby offered which could not otherwise be made available.

a distinctive Christian truth? Can we retain our ordinances without becoming ecclesiastical? Can we match our individualism and democracy with a corresponding unity and cooperation? Can we combine social service and evangelism? Can we meet the new Baptist challenge?

The spirit of every service was wonderful. There were no threats and fears whispered. Love has driven these away. One could not interpret these sessions without feeling that a new seriousness has taken hold of our people. New purposes were formed to serve the great denomination of which each is a part.

Charitable institutions and Shurtleff College were given unusual attention. The gift of Doctor Allen's hospital was appreciated. Things are coming our way.

Of course reports, resolutions and ratifications had their place, but the motive power to put these in operation seemed more evident than ever. Religious education was prominent in most sessions, and one afternoon was devoted to Sunday school and young people. Missions too were made real through study and service.

Our women had two sessions at the Congregational church. Their banquet at the Austin church and the good brown toasts delighted every woman's heart. Mrs. W. P. Topping has exerted a wide influence in getting the women of Illinois enlisted in our task.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Manley of Ongole, India, will be remembered for the dialogue they presented. India will live more vividly in our minds after seeing and hearing them. Doctor Twing of Alton and R. S. Carman of Joliet have done such excellent work that they were easily elected to guide the Baptist affairs for another year. Galesburg will be our meeting place one year hence. In the meantime Illinois Baptists will strenuously push the working of the convention, which is the saving of Illinois and through Illinois Christianize the world. This year we shall do more than "racing the engine."

The Hat That Cost a Sweet Potato

as they want to. Anyhow do you think Mary Lily's nurses were going to let Mary Lily do an easy thing like dying? Not a bit of it!

The Very Wet Lady hardly knew how splendidly her wetness was drying, because she was so interested in Spelman. "Who runs Spelman?" she asked.

"Oh, that's the very bestest part of it," sighed Flossie, "for it's Baptists that run Spelman. 'Deed they do! And not Baptists that live right close to Spelman, neither. No ma'am, but Baptists that live way up north. Yes ma'am, think of that! Baptists that never once saw Mary Lily got Spelman all ready for her. They pay Mary Lily's teachers. And pay for Mary Lily's food. And for Mary Lily's heat in winter, and they let Mary Lily work her way through 'stead of paying for things her very own self. I guess those Baptists are the bestest folks. I love 'em and love 'em and love 'em. 'Deed I do! Maybe you're a Baptist, yourself?"

The Very Wet Lady nodded her almost-dry head: "Yes, I am a Baptist, dear, yet I must be a very ignorant Baptist because I never once heard of Spelman till you told me."

"Oh me! Oh my!" said Flossie, looking her up and down in the greatest surprise. Flossie hadn't supposed there could be a Baptist anywhere who wasn't saving and giving and praying so that Mary Lily could go to Spelman!

So all on account of Mary Lily and the hat that cost a sweet potato, the Very Wet Lady went home and wrote to the headquarters of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and said: "Please send me any literature you may have, telling about all our Baptist schools for negroes." She was the most astonished lady to discover that besides Spelman, Baptists in the north helped a dozen other splendid negro schools down south. And because you are Baptists yourselves I really think Flossie would expect you to know the names of some of them, so just listen carefully, and repeat them after me—one at a time, please:

Fisk
Hartshorn
Mather
Bishop Benedict
Morehouse
Shaw

And what was the name of Mary Lily's seminary? Ah, yes, Spelman!

The Personal Application

Christian stewardship recognizes God as sovereign owner of everything that we possess.

It is based on a purpose to administer for God the things that belong to Him and are entrusted to our keeping as his stewards.

Have you given God a square deal? If you have accepted a Saviour, you must have acknowledged a Lord and Master.

To acknowledge a Lord and Master means to become a real steward of all that you possess.

The real steward acknowledges God's ownership by setting apart a definite portion of his income for Kingdom purposes and then administering the remainder as steward.

Have you discharged this responsibility?

Did your church observe a Stewardship Program as was suggested for the month of October?

Have you learned about the prizes offered to pastors for essays on stewardship?

Our Book Shelf

The Authority of Jesus, by R. Winboult Harding. New York: Doran. $2.

With hatred in the world as rampant as it is today, this is a good book for a Christian to read and pass on to others. To put love where it really belongs in Christian living is the aim of the author and he has done his work well.

The Bible Class and the Community, by John A. Cross. New York: Revell. $1.25.

This book is by a layman. It is worth reading because it will cause those who read it really to think about one of the great agencies for recruiting forces to work for the salvation of a lost world. We like the clear and concise way in which it is written.

Round the Round World, by Paul Rader. New York: Revell. $1.50.

Paul Rader carries the eloquence and sincerity which mark his addresses over into a stimulating survey of conditions in the world of today. This book is a brilliant record of a world-wide concentrating attention upon the religious work accomplished by the missionary forces. It is forceful, earnest and thought-provoking. The author's instinct for soul-saving is manifest on every page.

Mostly Sally, by P. G. Wodehouse. New York: Doran. $2.

Perhaps no other present-day writer of English turns out such rollicking, laughter-provoking tales as does the author of this delectable piece of foolishness. Such larks may not be the highest form of literary art; but that they add to the sunshine of life admits of no question. Witty, clean fun is plentiful in "Mostly Sally." Enough said.

Lochinvar Luck, by Albert Payson Terhune. New York: Doran. $2.

Another of those appealling epics of collie life, so ably presented by this author. This deserves to rank as one of his best. Every one who loves dogs will read the pages of this dog biography with its mingled smiles and sorrows, with keen interest and warming heart. If all children get the thrills and heart interest from having this book read that my lad did, I think it would pay Santa Claus to lay in a goodly supply for Christmas time. The story is clean, life-like and inspiring and is handled with literary skill.

Challenge, by V. Sackville-West. New York: Doran. $2.

One of the distinguishing features of the modern movement in novel writing is the ceaseless searching for novelty in scene-setting. We have passed through many waves of outre staging, polar Alaska, tropic Africa, the South Sea Islands; seemingly all possible unworldly places have been used as colorful background in the fiction of the last decade. But the authoress of this well-written, skillfully handled dramatic story has achieved the novelty of a virtually unknown background for her adept study in psychology and resultant action. The somewhat gloomy romance is illuminated against a picturesque idealization of life on the small islands of the eastern Grecian seas. Interesting as the external placing of the story may be, the more important thing is that it is an achievement of literary worth. It is not a book by a novice in construction; in characterization, in finish of detail and mastery of human emotion, it is a fine work that should last long after much of the contemporary fiction has been forgotten.

French Literature during the Last Half Century, by J. W. Cunliffe and Pierre de Bacourt. New York: Macmillan. $3.

The happy cooperation of two Columbia professors—one of the school of journalism; the other in French—has produced a book that will have a permanent place in the literature on literature. Why French literature has taken the trend it has during the last several decades is clearly traced—the influence of the war of 1870 and of the World War. A torn, harassed France is shown, but a France that has clung to high literary ideals. A telling phase of the individual treatment of the representative writers is the detail in which the background of these creators is given, the motivating influences of their parentage and of their childhood environment. The bibliography of each author mentioned in the book is outlined, a list of translations and of the books about the author. The last chapters take up contemporary poetry, contemporary drama and the new novel. The form of the book is such that it will make an excellent text for class or individual study, as well as a book for general reading.

A Permanent Income
Life Annuities on One or Two Lives

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

THE RIGHT CHURCH MUSIC

A great amount of common-sense is crowded into a pamphlet entitled "A Defense of Classic Church Music," written by Richard L. Cannon and published by the Methodist Book Concern. The best thing about it is that, being issued by the official branch of a great church, the pamphlet is certain of attention in circles where such attention is required. To organists many of its arguments are merely a restatement of axioms. But when one considers how many people in churches come forward time and time again with the old plea that they shudder at the thought of music by "paid musicians" in the service, it is easy to see wherein a dissertation which states the matter simply and convincingly and from the standpoint of the church, and not from that of the organist, is valuable.

We have always rather questioned the sincerity of the good souls who told us of the pain it gave them to think in hearing the music in a service that those who provided it were mere mercenaries, paid for the service. We never could quite see why they were not always cognizant in hearing a splendid sermon of the fact that the minister received a salary for his work. We have the audacity to believe that if these worshippers would listen to the music with the same reverence which they expect of the singers, they would forget all about the price. We never could become convinced that the Almighty preferred poor music, because it was rendered free of cost. That congregational singing is the highest form of musical worship we believe firmly, but to enchance and supplement it with the leadership of a great organ and an expensive choir, provided that the choir is made up of people reverent and in sympathy with the service, could not displease the One to whom our songs are raised.

Therefore, it is pleasing to see our thoughts put so well by this writer, who, at the same time, quotes such authorities as Martin Luther, an apostle of church music whose work in this regard is not recognized fully because he performed his service to religious music in another language than the English.

For the benefit of our readers we present the following from the pamphlet, with the suggestion that it be preserved for use when the question of church music policy may come up:

"The disposition of our churches to curtail the usefulness of the choir, limit its power for good and finally to dispense with its services altogether when expenses are to be reduced should be strongly condemned. When the music committee of any church desires to cut down the appropriation, let the choirmaster call attention to these words of Martin Luther: 'I have always loved music, and I would not give away for a great deal the little I know. * * * Music is a discipline—it makes men sweeter, more virtuous and wiser. One can be sure of finding the germs of a goodly number of virtues in the hearts of those who have a taste for music, but those who have no taste for it I value as a stick or stone. I contend, and declare it, without shame, that, after theology, there is no art comparable to music. When natural music is perfected by art, we see as far as we are able the great and perfect wisdom of God in his fine work of music.'

"Have the best trained choir your money will command. Give to your congregations the harmonies of the old masters, and let the people join in singing amid the peals of the organ, those grand old hymns, 'Nearer My God, to Thee,' 'Rock of Ages,' 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul,' 'Abide With Me,' etc. Add to this a live, progressive and God-like ministry and you will have a church whose mission is not a failure, and where men and women will come to drink in that larger life, eternal in the heavens.

"Why object to classic church music? Is it because most trained or professional singers are believed to be worldly? How do you know it? Is the banker, merchant or professional man any better because he gives to the church when he is not a member, than the professional singer or organist who gives his service very often for small pay?

"Why oppose the introduction of paid singers into our churches, provided they are men and women of Christian principles or of good moral character? Your answer is: 'I am opposed to paying persons (or professionals, you can put it) for singing God's praise.' You forget that these persons have devoted years to this accomplishment, which has cost them time and money. Suppose they are professionals; they adopt this mode of earning their living, just the same as a mechanic, lawyer, minister or physician. You might as well say, because the minister preaches the word of God, he should do it gratis.

"The rendition of the oratorios of the masters and the classic music of our modern writers are bringing mankind to a closer union with God, as revealed by these works of sacred melody."

Here is an eloquent and unanswerable plea for church music of the best kind and as a most valuable factor in the advancement of religion. But, after all, the strongest argument in favor of any kind of music in the church is the sincerity, the spirit, the musicianship with which it is rendered. If we all devote ourselves to the advancement of such music as Martin Luther had in mind, we shall present one of the most potent arguments in its behalf.—The Diapason.

Christian Civilization—Is it Christian?

After Nineteen Hundred Years has Christianity Seriously Modified the Pagan Character of Human Society?

THIS question was put to a group of the most influential social students in the American church, all of them leaders and close advisors of the various social service movements in all the denominations and the Federal Council of Churches. Among them are:

Bishop McConnell,
F. Ernest Johnson,
Charles A. Ellwood,
Alva W. Taylor,
Samuel Z. Batten,
Harry F. Ward,
Ross L. Finney,
Albion W. Small,
Arthur E. Holt,
Herbert H. Shenton,
Edward Alsworth Ross

They divided the problem up into many pieces, each taking one piece to investigate.

Their answer is an amazing revelation.

In a series of articles they declare with surprising unanimity that the industry, the economics, the politics, our nationalist conceptions and practices and the international relations of our so called Christian civilization are based upon and shot through and through with utterly pagan implications.

Our workaday life and our public life have not yet seriously felt the influence of the spirit of Jesus. On the contrary, a society dominated by Christian men is found to be governed by rules which are non-Christian, anti-Christian, flagrantly pagan.

If these pagan rules and principles remain unrevolutionized, says Professor Albion W. Small, "the goodly fellowship of the Apostles could not operate our present industrial system and make its workings just."

These churchmen agree that it is vain to ask men to be Christians in industry or politics and at the same time accept pagan ideals, motives and methods as their rules of action.

No such concerted analysis of the moral character of our social order has ever before been attempted in the light of the mind of Christ. The position of leadership held by the writers—officials in the social service organizations and close counsellors of officials—makes their articles an authentic expression of the slowly forming

The Love Chapter

I WILL show you a far better way. If I can speak the languages of men and even of angels, but have no love, I am only a noisy gong or a clashing cymbal. If I am inspired to preach and know all the secret truths and possess all knowledge, and if I have such perfect faith that I can move mountains, but have no love, I am nothing. Even if I give away everything I own, and give myself up, but do it in pride, not love, it does me no good. Love is patient and kind. Love is not envious or boastful. It does not put on airs. It is not rude. It does not insist on its rights. It does not become angry. It is not resentful. It is not happy over injustice, it is only happy with truth. It will bear anything, believe anything, hope for anything, endure anything. Love will never die out. If there is inspired preaching, it will pass away. If there is ecstatic speaking, it will cease. If there is knowledge, it will pass away. For our knowledge is imperfect and our preaching is imperfect. But when perfection comes, what is imperfect will pass away. When I was a child, I talked like a child, I thought like a child, I reasoned like a child. When I became a man, I put aside my childish ways. For now we are looking at a dim reflection in a mirror, but then we shall see face to face. Now my knowledge is imperfect, but then I shall know as fully as God knows me. So faith, hope, and love endure. These are the great three, and the greatest of them is love.

BAPTISTS LAUNCH WORLD-WIDE MISSIONARY MOVE

NORTHERN BAPTISTS throughout the country will engage in a great missionary movement during the next two months, during which many thousand members of the denomination will wear the little blue and white buttons shown in the accompanying picture.

These buttons signify the registration of their wearers in a nation-wide series of Bible and Missionary Conferences, as an outgrowth of which the denomination hopes for a great revival of evangelism. Conferences will be held during October and November in thirty-five large cities in the United States, chosen as centers for this work. Leaders expect that from these centers a wave of missionary spirit will go forth that will not only reach the most remote of the 9034 Northern Baptist Churches in the United States, and the most distant of the 1,500,000 members of the denomination, but also spread around the nation and around the world.

"The world is ready and waiting for evangelization as never before," denominational leaders declare. "The events of the past few years, such as wars, revolutions, famines, earthquakes, and labor troubles at home and abroad have left humanity ready to turn to things of the spirit. The time for a great missionary movement has come."

Dr. John Y. Aitchison, General Director of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, has appointed the Rev. W. H. Bowler, secretary of Field Activities of the Northern Baptist Convention, as national leader in the Bible and Missionary Conferences. Thirty-five picked men will work under Mr. Bowler's direction as conference secretaries in the various centers. Their work will be supplemented by that of Northern Baptist pastors throughout the nation, as well as by that of committees of business men, Baptist women, young people and other church groups. Contests will be engaged in between groups, churches, and even cities to secure the largest possible number of registrations.

Missionaries direct from foreign fields will present vivid pictures of spiritual conditions in far lands, while home missionaries urge the evangelistic needs of various groups in the United States.

He Said Nothing About Promoters

"Wouldn't you like, one time, to make some easy money without working for it? Wouldn't you like a chance to make a big profit on a small investment?

"And haven't you enough sporting blood to risk a mild $10 gamble on a pretty sure thing? And if I can tell you how to get in on a good speculation which promises B-I-G profits, wouldn't you be interested in that?

"About eighty years ago, or about 1849 to be exact, Dr. John Croghan, who owned the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, passed on to the land where they have no politicians or blue nosed reformers. He couldn't take the Mammoth Cave with him, so he willed it, with 2,200 acres of fertile Green River bottom land, to his nine nieces and nephews, for life."

Now, when they all die some one will buy the Mammoth Cave. Why should I not buy it? This is the limit. Preachers have been asked to buy up the oil, the coal, the gold mines and, to be brief, they have been asked to buy almost everything and now, "Reverend," you can buy the Mammoth Cave. Get busy, but please send us your subscription to THE BAPTIST and Missions first, for two reasons—later you won't have the money and then you will need religious comfort.

German Mark and American Religion

L. L. Kneeland of Pe Ell, Wash., writes: "What's the matter with the mark? Depreciated a million for a cent. What caused it? Multiplication of copies to meet every demand. Need more money? Print it. Every additional edition means less value. Nothing back of it. Fiat money. Nobody wants it. What is the matter with much present day religion? Too cheap. A new edition to meet every fancy. Every shade of thought. Every type of interpretation. Every shade of worldly ambition and neglect. If you need more, print more. Fiat religion. Worthless. Nothing back of it. Bible nil." THE BAPTIST is a great stabilizer. It specializes in the every-day, tried and tested religious thought and life. THE BAPTIST is not given to speculating about matters which must of necessity remain in the realm of faith and hope. We stand for an editorial policy such as announced by "Sid," the late editor of the American Magazine. "What is your editorial policy?" he was asked. "Victory! Victory for the individual over the odds that beset him. There are all kinds of odds—sickness, lack of education, or opportunity, or money; unfortunate environment, bad habits, absurd weaknesses, every sort of mental, physical and spiritual barrier. . . What we do is to stand at the hard places in the road and cry, 'You can come through. You can win.'"

Fresh from the Field

The thank offering for the Connecticut Baptist Convention centennial fund amounted to $7,000. It is expected that this amount will be augmented by other gifts. The goal is $1 for each member of the convention.

William H. Beers, superintendent of the church school of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., was recently elected president of the Religious Education Council of New York State. This organization was formerly known as the New York State Sunday School Association.

The offering of the First Church, Bloomfield, N. J., for the work of reconstruction in Japan, amounted to $1,853. Dr. James A. Monk and his people are always ready to lend a helping hand as opportunity offers and what day ever presented more crying needs?

The brotherhood of the First Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Rev. C. H. Frank, minister, took charge of a recent midweek meeting of the church. A discussion of the eighteenth amendment and its effects led by Sheriff Davis and others was a feature of the meeting. Pastor Frank is busy in Pittsburgh preparing for the meetings of the Bible and Missionary conference to be in that city.

Of the deaths during the current year among the graduates of Rochester Theological Seminary 60 per cent were above seventy years of age, 45 per cent above seventy-five, 35 per cent above eighty years of age and 10 per cent above eighty-five. Only one death below the age of fifty was reported. These figures are strikingly similar to those presented by the necrologists of other seminaries. They all alike confirm the necessity of provision for income in old age.

"Resistance to application of initiative keeps a man back," declared Rear Admiral S. Sims speaking before the thousand students of Northfield Seminary and Mount Hermon School. Admiral Sims laid special stress upon the value of training the individual as illustrated by the efficiency acquired in the navy through the persistent and strenuous training of each man. "There is only one fellow who can do the training," he said, "and that is yourself." Initiative, loyalty, and an unquestionable moral character, in his opinion, were given as basic elements of success.

Despite continued effort there are some sixty of the more than 2000 chaplains who served in the World War who were entitled to receive the chaplain's medal to whom it has not yet been formally presented on account of inability to secure address. Any chaplain of the Protestant churches who served under commission during the World War and who has not received the chaplain's medal should apply to Rev. E. O. Watson, secretary, General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, 937 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

David Lloyd George turned the sod at the dedication service for the erection of the new building of the Baptist church, Westmount, Quebec. Rev. G. R. Maguire, formerly pastor of Ruggles Street Church, Boston, is pastor. The new building will seat 1,200.

The First Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., had between 700 and 800 in the Bible school rally day. The congregations were large. The church gave recently a farewell reception to Dr. Elmer W. Powell, who has accepted the call of the church at Roselle, N. J.

According to the Associated Press, twenty-nine members of the Calvary Church, New York, were suspended Oct. 24 charged with conducting "guerilla warfare" on the pastor, Rev. John Roach Straton, and with violating their vows to support the church.

Dr. Charles N. Arbuckle has prepared a pageant for use in the observance of the centennial of the Publication Society. It consists of several complete episodes and can thus be given in part or in whole. It is expected that the entire story will be given on one of the evenings of the convention in Milwaukee.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, the Artic explorer was due to land in the United States Nov. 3. He comes under the auspices of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches. His itinerary covers a wide territory. Doctor Nansen is now associated with the League of Nations as high commissioner for the repatriation of prisoners of war, and for the relief of Russian refugees and refugees from Asia Minor.

The total attendance for the University of Chicago, for the first quarter exclusive of duplications, is 3,374 men and 3,373 women, a grand total of 6,747, which is a gain of 415 over the corresponding quarter a year ago. Of the total number registered, 1,728 are graduate students and 5,019 undergraduate. It is of interest to note from the statement above that the men in the university exceed the women by one; that there is a gain of more than 400 over last year; and that more than a third of the students are graduate students.

Two telegrams concerning the Bible and Missionary conferences at Salt Lake City have been forwarded from the New York office. The first reads: "Excellent attendance. Splendid interest all sessions of conference. Great inspiration and blessing to Utah. People delighted with Doctor Padelford and team. Thirty-five per cent resident membership in state registered. Three churches registered 100 per cent of membership. Signed, Lester Randolph, conference secretary." The second telegram says: "Have had great conference far exceeding any expectations. Large attendance. Fine spirit. People most appreciative. Team all here and did splendid work. If conferences continue in this spirit our problems are solved. Randolph did great work. Signed, Frank W. Padelford, team leader."

Rev. Floyd I. Beckwith has accepted a call to the First Church of Pomona, Calif., and is now on the field.

The eighth annual meeting of the American Council of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches will be held in Philadelphia, Nov. 13-15.

Rev. John A. Simpson of Dixon, Ill., has accepted the unanimous call of the Park Place Church, Aurora. Mr. Simpson will succeed the late Dr. Edwin W. Lounsbury.

Rev. John Dussman, who saved the editor from much embarrassment as his traveling mate in Germany, has reached his field, Vinukonda Gunter District in India. Mr. Dussman is one of our veteran missionaries.

Rev. C. G. Roadarmel has been warmly received by members of the First Church, Greensburg, Ind. He came from the pastorate of the church at Inglewood a suburb of Los Angeles. Mr. Roadarmel was pastor some years ago in Indiana, having served at Valpariso.

The Publication Society, as a part of its centennial anniversary, will furnish for use free a set of stereopticon slides with information for use in an address. Address Harry S. Myers, 276 Fifth Ave., New York, who will arrange a schedule with the churches.

The Third Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., of which Dr. W. H. Geistweit was formerly pastor, has extended a unanimous call to Dr. Henry Alfred Porter, pastor of the Second Church, Atlanta, Ga. His decision has not been announced.

A resolution was adopted by the Long Island Association, New York, at its fifty-seventh annual session, Oct. 16-18, congratulating Pastor Wightman of the Oyster Bay Church on his unprecedented term of fifty-five years of service and expressing its regret at his departure.

Mr. William Jennings Bryan has given his endorsement to a movement for "an association of orthodox colleges," according to the Moody Monthly. In his letter to Mr. Bryan says: "I suggest that the two purposes emphasized in addition to the ordinary college studies should be applied Christianity and improved citizenship. It should be understood and advertised that the Bible is one of the studies in such colleges and that it is studied as the 'Word of God, by inspiration given.' To make the purpose of the college perfectly clear and to draw the line distinctly between it and colleges of a different character, it should be stated that the college believes in and teaches the miraculous and the supernatural in the Bible, including the virgin birth of Christ, his atonement and his bodily resurrection. It should teach also that man was made in the image of God by separate act of the Almighty in God's image, as part of the divine plan, and is not a blood relative of any other form of life. Miracles, the supernatural, the virgin birth, the atonement and the bodily resurrection are the points of controversy."

Selects and Culls

OUR title is taken from the produce market. Apples, eggs and other produce admit of classification as selects and culls. It makes an amazing difference which you bring home in your basket. The selects of course are those chosen with greatest care; in size, quality and appearance the finest; uniform in grade; to be depended upon invariably. The culls are what are left after the best and even the better have been culled out. It is a sad fate to have to take chances with imperfect apples or slightly pluperfect eggs. They are plentiful; they are cheap; the market is overstocked; but the purchaser finds them dear at any price.

A searching of hearts is going on in our churches as plans are making for the autumn, winter and spring campaign, especially as this particular campaign is the culminating one of the hugest enterprise ever undertaken by our own—perhaps by any—denomination. We are taking stock somewhat feverishly of our resources, especially of our man-power. Investigations which have been made on an extensive scale are now being made known and many of the reports are startling.

We are told that less than one-half of the membership of our churches are "givers of record" either to current expenses or to missions; the rest give nothing or fling an occasional anonymous pittance into the passing collection plate. Every church of any considerable age or size has a sorry list of non-cooperants, non-attendants and non-residents, often totaling more than the entire resident and cooperant list. Where communion records are kept these often show a sadly large proportion who never attend upon the ordinance of which our Lord said, "This do, in remembrance of me." The prayermeeting attendance is smaller still. With some notable exceptions, probably not more than 10 per cent of the membership of our churches is in the habit of attending the service where we come closest to God and each other.

Yet our churches do go on and much admirable work is done. The giving is upon a larger scale and the edifices more commodious and costly than ever before, especially in the prosperous suburbs of our growing cities. Many additions are recorded to the membership, though many of these are by letter and represent a loss to the churches from which they come, with no change in the numbers of the denomination. Ingatherings are had from evangelistic services or from special decision days in the Sunday school which do not stir the membership of the church as a whole but represent the earnest work of the pastor and a relatively small number of devoted members. It is true that these are churches where the church as a whole seems to cooperate earnestly year after year in evangelistic effort and in every good work, but it is to be feared these are rather the exception than the rule.

Would it be harsh judgment to say that our church lists comprise too many culls and too few selects? It is not at all a question of native ability, wealth, social position or learning. In the beginnings of church membership and in our work for the winning of souls to Christ we must make no discriminations, but work for the poorest, humblest and those of the most modest mental equipment, receiving all to church membership who show evidence of the genuine beginnings of the new life in Christ. Even after they had experienced for some little time the privileges of church membership the apostle Paul frankly reminded the Corinthian church that few of them were mighty or noble or wise, but that God had chosen them to show what he could do with the weak, the base, the despised.

But it has ever been the glory of Christianity that it took the Galileans, the Corinthians, the Galatians, and later the Goths and Saxons and Celts, transforming narrow Judaizers into world-missionaries, sensual pagans into pure-minded Christian families ready to die for their faith, barbaric races into sturdy Christians, builders of the highest civilization thus far seen, just as today in pagan lands it is bringing about a displacement between strata of society which for immemorial ages had been considered beneath contempt and the higher strata which had despised them. The rise of our own and of the Methodist denomination in America shows something of the same generic power of Christianity, the power to transform common life into something glorious.

BUT with growth, prosperity, education, social advantages there is the same peril which met the early church—the sinister influence of worldliness, a deterioration of the moral fiber, a dilution of the spiritual potencies of life, when the illicit sect became the church imperial, when Christianity instead of bringing deadly persecution suddenly became the fashion in court and society.

Christianity may freely take "the run of the mine" amongst humanity at the beginning of its efforts for them—just ordinary people as it finds them. It is not to discriminate between those honestly seeking Christ. But when the transforming grace of God and the influences of a true church have been at work upon them for years is it too much to expect that there should be a far larger ratio of selects to culls?

Of the Devil

A GREAT matter was once under consideration and as usual the discussion developed a difference of opinion. A wise man, led of the spirit of God, we are sure, then dropped this sage remark, "If this thing be not of God it will come to naught." This was just another way of saying, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

We propose now in the light of these statements to examine two phases of current church life known as the non-resident member and the excluded and erased member. Upon good authority we learn that about 25 per cent of our local church enrolment must be counted as non-resident. That is to say, one-quarter of our people are living away from the life and activity of the local church where they have a membership. It may be possible that one-fourth of this non-resident membership is entitled to be in non-residence, and perhaps they keep in touch by letter and contribution with their home church. They bear some fruit for righteousness. The other three-fourths of this non-resident class from year to year drift slowly away from every helpful relationship to the church of Jesus Christ which should be their spiritual home. Is this of God? No, no! For many years we have lost from our enrolment tens of thousands of people by exclusion, erasure or otherwise. This means that in the course of time the church took a certain number of names off the roll because no one knew anything about them. It does not mean, in many such cases, that a process of spiritual discipline had been in vogue. We fear that the average local church is not spiritual enough to exercise spiritual discipline, but, avoiding that, waits till the case will produce no squeak of protest. So there is a quiet funeral for the dead. Oh, the pity of it, the shame of it. Can any one say that such a procedure is of the Lord or in the will of his spirit.

Experience has proved beyond a question of doubt that the non-resident membership can largely be saved by a loving fellowship ministry on the part of lay church officials. It has been proved over and over again that a faithful, loving educational ministry will save a very large part of the people who under old processes have finally made up the list of excluded and erased. To lose is of the devil; to save is Christlike.

What Do We Want?

LISTENING recently to the discussion of a group of men in the yard of a rural church, we heard a deacon say, "Yes, they are after a large sum of money again and it makes me tired." Some of the bystanders gave a cordial approval to the remark, but one man dissented and said, "You make me tired, for you are all wrong." He then proceeded to make some remarks, the substance of which is reproduced here for the benefit of our readers. "They," he quoted, "who is 'they' but you and me and all the other members of the Baptist churches in the Northern Baptist Convention. Every local church can be represented there. Ours was, and you voted for our delegates, so when you cast a reflection on the action of our delegates you are fouling yourself, brother." He paused a moment, then said, "A large sum you referred to, didn't you? Well, it may be large in your eyes when it comes to giving your share of it to your Lord, because you don't love him enough to give him anything regularly or worth-while. But, brother, I notice you live as well as any of us and better than most of us. When it comes to spending money on yourself or your family you are right smart at that, but in church spending you take little or no part, and it is about time some one told you plainly, so now I am doing it." Again he paused and when next he spoke there was a wistful note in his voice and his heart was on his sleeve where all could see it as he said, "Brother, you did me a good turn some years ago and I've never forgotten it. Won't you let me do you one now, please? You can't love money more than you love your Lord and be saved. Won't you let me open your eyes to that fact before it is too late? The best thing you can do is to open up your pocketbook to the Lord and have the joy of giving." Then he added, "Let's you and I lead this church back to where . . ." He linked his arm in that of the deacon and they left the circle behind while together those two men planned how to lead their church back to the way and will of the Lord. What we want in every church is just that way and will of God to be done.

Sweeping the Country

IN our program of activities covering the last year of the New World Movement period, November is set aside for emphasis upon the Bible. A series of Bible and Missionary conferences has been projected covering the territory of the convention. Careful work is being done to enlist large numbers of our workers for these meetings which are inspirational in character. Telegrams to this office show that interest in these conferences is sweeping the country.

"Detroit registered 1,000 persons eighty days before the Bible and Missionary conference opens. One church registered 282 in ten minutes. A Brooklyn church registered half its membership at the Sunday services. First Church, Phoenix, registered sixty at prayer meeting. Out of a total of 1,152 Baptists in all Utah, Salt Lake registered 330 before the opening day. Los Angeles, Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit are engaged in a contest with 4,000 registrations as the goal. Brooklyn and New York cities are in a spirited race. Wisconsin Baptists report a great spiritual uplift in the conference just finished."

It will be impossible to measure the influence of these gatherings on the life of our local churches. We must always have business meetings in associations, state conventions and the Northern Baptist Convention, but we have awakened to the fact that as individuals and churches we need more of the meetings which stir the soul and grip the imagination

A Page of Opinion

Armistice Day

THIS year November 11 comes on Sunday. How shall the day be observed to make it worth while? With what state of mind shall we approach it, and with what public ceremonies shall it be marked? Or shall the day slip by without any notice at all?

Every American who had any age on Nov. 11, 1918, knows with what thankfulness the news of the armistice was received here, and with what enthusiasm the day was marked. All business was suspended. Desks and benches and counters were forsaken. Parades formed spontaneously. Bands appeared. The air was rent by shouts of those who had prayed and hoped for the close of hostilities.

If the occasion were worthy of such demonstration then, is it worthy of disregard now? Has our attitude toward the conflict changed to such an extent that we have no more honor for the boys who went overseas, and no more honor for the flag which then so proudly we bore, and which was displayed at every church altar? If the spirit during the war was right, something should be done to perpetuate the good that controlled the lives of men.

There are several dangers. The revulsion against war, which is a most healthy frame of mind, may be so extreme and so unguarded as to carry with it all love of country and all reverence for the flag. The limit of pacifism is reached when we conclude that our country means nothing, and that it can be conquered or surrendered without our opposition. This is dangerous in the extreme, yet some may go that length.

This is the fifth anniversary of the signing of the armistice. It should not pass unnoticed. The best argument for peace should mark the day. The captain of our salvation was the Prince of Peace, and that is warrant enough to put the ideals before any audience. He emphasized peace of the individual soul in the midst of trouble. He did not promise family peace except as the individual members of the family had peace in heaven. Indeed, he taught that one's own household should supply some of the worst foes. He did not promise national peace, for predictions of dire calamity were made. Nor did he promise world peace, however much we might desire that he should have advocated some league or court as a guaranty.

One never can go wrong by exalting the Christ of God. When one holds up his character and his life, he is setting forth the only pledge of peace there is or can be.

Let war be deprecated, surely. But let the causes of war be set forth as objects of extermination. To belabor men because they will not take our specific panacea to cure all the ills of life is itself a species of war. It is not comely to fight over methods of peace. We must get at the root of the matter. Trimming the tops off takes away the appearance for a while, but it does not remove the cause. We must dig down to the taproot of selfishness in order to check the growth above the surface. And selfishness is sin.

While advocating peace, and while exalting the Prince of Peace, we must not cast any shadows upon the patriotism and loyalty of the boys of the late war. They did their part, and he who would rob them of any honor should be placed with other robbers. Some vainly believe that, if they can cast aspersion upon patriotism, they can save their sons from future wars. But that will bring in domestic conditions which will be as bad as a foreign war. The way to save our sons is not by decrying patriotism, and by lauding pacifism, but by exalting the principles of peace, and honoring the divine author of these principles.—Religious Telescope.

"An American Translation"

A STUDY of the preface of the translation of the New Testament by Edgar J. Goodspeed which has just come from the press gives us an insight into the purpose of the translation and the principles upon which the translator proceeds.

"The New Testament was written not in classical Greek, nor in the 'biblical' Greek of the Greek version of the Old Testament, nor even in the literary Greek of its own day, but in the common language of every-day life. This fact has been fully established by the Greek papyrus discoveries and the grammatical researches of the last twenty-five years. It follows that the most appropriate English form for the New Testament is the simple, straightforward English of every-day expression."

Dr. Goodspeed accepted the invitation of the University press "in the hope that it might result in a version with something of the ease, boldness and unpretending vigor which mark the original Greek. The writers of the New Testament had for the most part little use for literary art. The principal figure among them, the apostle Paul, said this in so many words. They put their message in the simplest and most direct terms they could command, so that it spoke directly to the common life of their day. The great passages in the New Testament owe their greatness more to the trenchant vigor of their thought, or the moral sublimity of their ideas, than to the graces of rhetoric.

"The translation of such a book demands, first, the understanding of what the several writers meant to say, and, second, the casting of their thought in the simplest and clearest of present-day English. It is the meaning, not the dress, of the New Testament that is of principal importance."

We are not here pretending to determine how successful the translator has been in his selection of the "common language of every-day life." We are not comparing the translation with that of Moffatt and others. We do confess that we enjoy reading this new translation.

Belgium and You

By Bernard C. Clausen

IF you had been traveling through Belgium early in 1914, and had stopped to ask the question, "What is the kingdom of Belgium?" you would have been met with an interesting variety of answers. The replies would have depended altogether on the mind of the person answering. One man might have said, "The kingdom of Belgium is 11,373 square miles of territory, bounded on the north by the Netherlands, on the south by France, on the east by Prussia, and on the west by the North Sea." Such an answer would have been absolutely correct. I looked it up in a geography a few moments ago.

Another man might have replied, "The kingdom of Belgium consists of 7,500,000 people, living in five principal cities, Brussels, Antwerp, Liege, and Ghent, besides the villages and farming communities." His information would have been just as accurate. My encyclopedia confirms it. A third informant might have volunteered. "The kingdom of Belgium is a limited monarchy, with King Albert at its head. Representatives and senators make its laws. Its capital city is Brussels." And no man could have contradicted him.

The Truth about Belgium

Yet, strangely enough, while all these answers are true, no one of the replies, nor all three of them together, tell the whole truth about the kingdom of Belgium.

Suddenly something unbelievable happened. A thrill of news ran through the consciousness of that little country. War had been declared. An army was battering at her boundaries. Every atom of force was needed to hold back the invader.

From every city and town streamed forth those rivers of adventurous life now needed in the conflict. Young men in strange new uniforms, awkwardly carrying rifles, marched out to the fight. The little Belgian army took a stand, held it miraculously as long as it could, then fell back to another position. The enemy pressed closer. In the cities back of the battle line, one could hear the dull boom of cannon, sometimes when the wind was right one could detect the sharp rat-tat-tat-tat of machine gun fire, the air grew heavy with clouds of smoke which bore the bitter tang of burning homes and factories. Then along the roads which led to the Netherlands and safety, trudged pathetic little processions of very old men, and staggering gray-haired women, and buxom mothers carrying bundles of possessions over their shoulders, looking back now and then at the threatening billows of smoke, while they dragged along the weary miles, tiny toddling children who cried for their daddies and did not know what it was all about.

Until one day, the people of Belgium awoke to find that if Belgium had been a block of territory, then Belgium was no more, for those fair hills and valleys were the possessions of a conquering foe, the cities were laid waste, and only a meagre corner up near the coast remained as a remnant of the Belgium which had been. If Belgium had been 7,500,000 people, Belgium was gone, for the men had been slaughtered by thousands, and the women and children were scattered like autumn leaves before the fury of a whirlwind. If Belgium had been a limited monarchy, Belgium had disappeared, for Brussels was now general headquarters for the invading divisions, a foreign general swaggered through the royal palace, the senators and representatives were fugitives, and King Albert himself, wrapped in his old army mantle, was sleeping by the side of the road, surrounded by a few soldiers who loved him. Yet they knew that Belgium existed. Where? From this experience they drew a new and beautiful truth.

They began to realize what they should have known all through the years, that Belgium was not a geographical, statistical, governmental fact, to be held out at arm's length and analyzed. Belgium was a dream, a hope, a memory, a loyalty, which lived only within their hearts, to be defended by their courage, to suffer loss only if they were not true, to be destroyed only if they forgot and were disloyal. The kingdom of Belgium was within them.

Changed Relations

When this discovery captured their minds, two things happened. First, some things which had seemed very important, became very insignificant in their lives. There were women in Belgium who had spent the spring and summer months getting ready for the opening of the court season in the fall. They had lived upon the expectation of it. What will be worn? How will the styles go? Who will be invited? Who will be snubbed? What will the big events be? These questions formed the substance of their dreams and their talk. But when they began to realize that the kingdom was within them, all these frivolities of fashion seemed very small.

There were men in Belgium who had centered all their love and hopes in their sons. They had saved and sacrificed that their boys might have a chance. All their own disappointments seemed to find healing in their sons' plans. Perhaps one had sent his boy to medical college, and would spend the hours dreaming of that day when the boy would open his office in the big city, and the father would go down and sit in the waiting-room and watch the patients go in discouraged and faltering, only to come out a few moments later hopeful and eager. Perhaps one had sent his boy to an engineering school and hoped some day to walk out upon a new bridge with the great crowds, saying within his heart, "This bridge is safe for all of you. I know. My boy built this bridge." Life focused in their sons' bright hopes, but when they realized that Belgium was within their hearts, and that Belgium needed their boys, they choked back the weary sobs and sent their sons into the army. Some things which had seemed very important melted away into nothingness before the burning need of Belgium.

A New Standard

At the same time another transformation was taking place. Some things which had seemed very unimportant began to take on primary importance because of their relation to Belgium. Those same women who had lived in the world of gossip and fashion, had been trained in the simple technique of amateur nursing. As school girls they had been taught the elementary motions of the sick-room. They could make up smooth beds, cook simple invalid diet, staunch a wound, make a tourniquet, prepare a bandage, keep things antiseptically clean, fix a tray to tempt an appetite, and watch blood flow without fainting. All these things had been mere child's play before. They had almost forgotten that they had learned them. But when they sensed Belgium's need, they realized that this half-forgotten training was the only thing they had with which to serve their kingdom. And by the scores, they volunteered for hospital service, bound up hundreds of broken men, smoothed pillows for dying boys, saw blood and ragged flesh for an endless procession

Each in His Own Tongue

A HAZE on the far horizon,
The infinite tender sky,
The rich ripe tint of the cornfields
And the wild geese sailing high—
And all over the upland and lowland
The charm of the goldenrod—
Some of us call it autumn,
And others call it God.

Like tides on the crescent seabeach
When the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings,
Come welling and surging in—
Come from the mystic ocean
Whose rim no foot has trod—
Some of us call it longing,
And others call it God.

A picket frozen on duty—
A mother starved for her brood—
Socrates drinking the hemlock,
And Jesus on the rood;
And millions who, humble and nameless,
The straight hard pathway plod—
Some call it consecration,
And others call it God.

of terrible days, grew haggard and wan under the inhuman pressure of it—for Belgium!

These same men had learned perhaps to drive a motor car with some degree of ease. They knew something about engines, could change tires quickly, mastered automobile routes and gained control of the machines they used. Only fun, of course, reserved for Saturday afternoons and Sundays when the weather was bright. But now it became apparent that Belgium needed all they had, and all they had was this previous insignificant ability to drive these cars. It had become the most important thing in their lives. Hundreds of them drove their machines to general headquarters—big purring limousines, and little rattly-bang trucks massed outside ready for use, devoted to Belgium.

Boy Scouts in War Time

There were Boy Scouts in Belgium, very much like our Boy Scouts here. They learned the same stunts—how to carry a helpless form; how to skulk through woods without making any noise or leaving any trail; how to draw maps with rough accuracy; how to signal with tiny flags from one hill to another; how to love and honor their native land. It was just play to them, and the grown-up boys had a way of teasing these imitation soldiers.

But one day arithmetic and spelling suddenly seemed strangely unimportant. Belgium needed every boy. Troop after troop, these Boy Scouts reported for duty with the army. This technique, which they had learned in fun, became their chief glory. It was the one thing Belgium could use. They did creep noiselessly through woods where enemy platoons were waiting; they did carry in wounded men over their slender shoulders; they did signal news of troop movements from hill to hill, and two of them, caught outside Liege by the sudden onrush of the great gray horde, were shot down in their tracks, and lay by the side of the road all day long, their signal flags still fluttering feebly in their still hands, their blond hair waving in the breeze, their dead eyes seeking some reason in the blue of a pitiless sky. They had come to know what they should have known years before, that Belgium was not a pink spot on a map, nor a set of formidable population statistics, nor a difficult paragraph in a civics book. Belgium was a part of their lives. The kingdom was within them. They had maintained its glory.

Another Kingdom

Nineteen hundred years before, a man was talking in quiet tones to a group of intent listeners. He was speaking about a kingdom. For months he had lived with them, prayed with them, traveled with them, laughed with them, suffered with them, hoping to tell them plainly the truth about this kingdom of his. He had told them matchless stories about its people and its policy. Like a woman who lost a coin, he said; like a net, like a mustard tree, like wise and foolish maidens, like a sower and his field, like a father who waits through the long days peering down the road for the sight of his boy who has run away. Still they did not quite understand. Their brows would wrinkle and their smiles would vanish, as they tried to follow his thought.

Then one day, as they pressed close to him, and a great crowd hemmed them in, he said this wonderful thing:

"The kingdom of God is within you."

I have wondered whether that simple sentence cleared away all their darkness. Did they fully understand? Did their ready smiles tell him that he had succeeded at last? I am not sure.

Has It Come to You?

But what interests me more is this. Do you fully understand? Have you caught the significance of the message? Here is a test for you. Do important things seem insignificant to you if they have no vital relation to the kingdom of God? Do unimportant things bulk large when they seem to have value for the progress of the kingdom? Have you analyzed your life and selected for survival and devotion the things Jesus can use?

What is the church to you? To some men it is an interesting set of statistical accumulations. To others it is an aggregate of church buildings and organs and ministers and choirs. To others it is a bulwark for a creed or form of church government. But to Jesus it is the kingdom militant. It is his dream in battle array. And that kingdom, if it exists at all, exists not in year books, not in buildings, not in formalities, but in you, to be defended by your courage, to lose ground only by your retreat, to be destroyed only as you forget and neglect and deny.

Some Kingdom Warriors

Paul knew the wonder of it—"Thou therefore, Timothy, endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ." "I have fought a good fight." Livingstone knew the glory of it—"I shall place no value on anything I now possess or may possess, save as it has value to the kingdom of God." Yates knew the demand of it—dying after years of missionary service, he said, "So much work to do. And I can't do any more of it. God needs men!"

Bill Borden knew the glow of it. With an allowance of $10,000 a year at Yale, men urged him to buy a big car and have a real time. "What?" said Bill, "buy a car, when the price of a good car will keep my little hospital going in China for all next year? No car for mine." He died on his way to a mission field of his own, and his will devoted every dollar to the needs of the kingdom.

Pitkin knew the thrill of it. He stood in the middle of his mission compound while the raging Boxer rebels climbed up the walls. He sent his last coolie away with directions for escape. "Tell my wife in America," he said, "to bring up the boy as we have started. Tell her when my boy is old enough, to send him back here with the message of Jesus for China." Then the horde of infuriated troops rushed upon him like maniacs, and cut his body into ribbons of flesh.

The Battle Call

O Christians, do you know the joy of it? Is life transformed from a steady monotony of insignificant duties in drudgery, into a glorious adventure in faith and courage? Are your gifts marshaled for the kingdom? Are other things put aside as inconsequential?

There was a company of soldiers awaiting an order to advance. The commanding officer said, "Men, you see what we have to do. You see the machine gun nests right ahead. You see the bodies of our boys in the gap. I'll turn my back on you for a minute. Every man who will go with me to take that ground will step one pace out of the ranks." He turned, waited, then faced his men again. The line was still unbroken.

"Will none of you come?" he said.

A voice came out of the line. "Sir, we have all stepped forward!"

Church of Jesus, you see what we have to do. You see the glories and the perils, too. While our heads are bowed in prayer, will every one who will go with me, step one step out of the ranks, in the silence of decision? Will the line be unbroken, in loyalty to our Christ?

The Pastor's Ministry to Young People

By Martin S. Bryant

WHO are the most important people in your community? Are they the bankers or the doctors or the lawyers or the teachers or the preachers? The most important people in your community are your young people. We love the grown people and they must have our attentions and our ministrations but the molding time of their lives is past and with most of them their future is in the past; it is too late to change them or to make impressions upon them. With the young people it is not so. Their lives are now in the process of being molded; they are the impressionable ones; they will be the leaders of the next generation; if we are not molding their futures something else or somebody else is. There is no more important subject on this entire program and I feel that the time has come when our church must address itself to it. What would happen if a church should say, "From this time on we shall map out our plans bearing in mind the young people first, and we shall make such readjustments in our program and our work as will meet their greatest spiritual and social needs for they and the children are the most important element that there is in the entire community."

This fall, 180 Baptist young people have entered the University of Illinois for the first time. By calling and by personal conferences I am now in the process of becoming personally acquainted with every one of them. You would be astonished to know the number of those young people who had absolutely lost all touch with the church before they left home—or in other words, whom the home church had failed to hold to the church during the high-school age. I recognize the tremendous problems you have to buck up against—the high-school social life, commercialized recreation and entertainment and the indifference of parents, but I wonder if a part of the blame is not to be taken by the pastors and the church officials themselves.

During the past three weeks I have had seventy-five one-half hour personal interviews with our new students. (By way of parenthesis and as a part of the subject of the morning you may ask how I get them to my study.) I 'phone them between the hours of 8:15 and 9:15 p. m. and say, "This is Mr. Bryant of the University Baptist Church. I am arranging a schedule of interviews with our young men in my study for tomorrow. Would you have thirty minutes that you would be willing to give me for a conference." I make the question straight, honest and as businesslike as a lawyer. And they come—from eight to ten a day and on schedule time. Rarely does one disappoint me. When they come I treat them as my guests—straightforward, courteous and kind as we walk into the question of their Christian lives and what are to be their church relations during their college course. Of those who told me that they had lost all interest in the church before they left home I asked two the reason why. They looked at me and told me almost the identical things when they said in substance, "Mr. Bryant, because there isn't anything there to be interested in. Our pastor doesn't understand young people, he isn't studying and our Sunday-school work is simply running around in a circle and getting nowhere." I wonder how typical or widespread that is. I hope it is not true but I fear that it is too true.

Problems of the Young People

How is the solution of our young people problem to come? I do not believe that it is to come through a social program alone, although that must be borne in mind, and I wish our pastors might read Norman E. Richardson's new book, "The Church at Play." I believe that the solution is to come through a constructive program of religious education and of church work bearing in mind the children and the young people first and through a carefully prepared and carefully given positive (never negative) religious message emanating from the pulpit.

I wonder in the first place if our pastors understand the religious psychology of the adolescent. If not, I should like to recommend to you that last book of Professor Pratt of Williams College upon the psychology of religion, termed "The Religious Consciousness."

The adolescent is always wanting reasons. He asks why. He no longer is willing to accept merely because he has been taught so, or merely because the Bible says so, or because his pastor preaches it. He wants to see it. He is not to blame. It is a psychological characteristic of the mental make-up of adolescence. He hasn't yet come to the point where he will act on faith and let faith lead him to experience and to feel the truth. He is in that period when the intellect and not the heart wants to reign supreme. It is not abnormal. It is natural. How critical is the period! How he needs a pastor who can bridge him over this period of a religion of the intellect and satisfy such intellect and bring him safely through until he comes to the next period in his religious development—a religion of the heart. How shall I illustrate this? May I illustrate it out of my own experience and work?

Three weeks ago last Sunday I was confronted with a Bible class of forty freshmen boys in a course which I choose to call the "Fundamental Principles of the Christian Faith." I started out by taking them back to King Hammurabi of Babylon of 2200 B. C.—more than 4000 years ago. I told them of the Hammurabi stone that was unearthed about twenty years ago and on which were 800 lines narrating King Hammurabi's devotion to the gods; I took them to the tomb of King Tut, showing them why the ancient Egyptians embalmed—that the soul might have a body in which to live; I took them to ancient Assyria showing them some of their religious practices; I told them of Jeptah and the early Hebrews attempting to appease Jehovah by the offering up of their own children as sacrifices to him; I took them into Greece with its twelve deities and into Rome with its tradition of Romulus being taken to heaven on the wings of the gods. I then came down through the ages stopping in Athens with Paul in the first century, showing Paul finding the altars to the many gods; I took them for a trip to the nations of the Orient at the present time, showing them our missionaries had yet to go to a single non-Christian land but that when they arrived there, they found the people with some kind of a worship.

Man a Religious Being

I pointed out to them how in our own day and land men in times of national calamity, in times of critical personal danger, in times of crushing responsibility, in times of sorrow, who had never turned to God, do turn to him. I then said, "Young men, in the face of all that, who dare say there is nothing in religion?" I asked, "Young men, what do such things teach us?" And they said, "Man is by his very nature a religious being." I answered, "That is the first fundamental principle of our Christian religion and that is where we will begin our studies in this course."

Their intellects were satisfied and then we were ready to proceed to business. I don't know what you think, but I know from past experience that I have started for their hearts through the avenue of their minds—the predominating psychological characteristic of their adolescent period.

Perhaps you would be interested to know what I did with them the second Sunday. I said to them, "If then, we are by our very natures religious beings, what are we going to do about it?" and we developed together four points: (1) there is needed in every one of us a normal religious development; (2) there is needed in every one of us an improvement in the quality of our religious conceptions and our prayer life; (3) there is thrust upon the church a tremendous responsibility to make the Christian gospel world-wide; and (4) there is thrust upon the church a tremendous responsibility to develop through the processes of religious education and otherwise the spiritual natures of our children and youth that soil may be prepared for the seed which is the Word.

I wonder in the second place if our pastors are studying the Bible, and especially the Old Testament, with the help of the best historical and scientific knowledge, of the best modern scholarship, and in the light of the discoveries of archaeology; and if they are reading the best books of the day in the field of religion.

I love the Old Testament. It's a wo

The Rod and the Rock

With his rod he smote the rock and the water came out—Numbers 20:11.
And they thirsted not when he led them through the desert—Isaiah 48:21

THE students of life through the deserts go:
O'er their sands of strife no waters flow,
Till a leader more than common wise
The rod to the barren rock applies:
A fountain floods the sand-paths hot
And the knowledge seeker thirsteth not.

But the water had lain in its rocky hold,
And of parched-throat pain had the pilgrims told,
And the journey had been in vain.
If the faith and force of a leader bold
Had never discovered the currents cold
That the rocks and the sands contain.

Out of our heart our hearts we give
To the teachers who taught us to drink and love,
Who smote the rocks by the desert trail
Not so to the teachers who march us by Over rocks and sands that are desert-dry,
To whom a fact is a grain of sand
And truth a stretch of desert land.

Give us a seer who can comprehend
That a fact is a means and not an end.
That a truth is a stream to be unsealed,
A spring in the desert to be revealed.
And those who follow shall not be athirst;
By the side of their path the fountain shall burst.
We pray from our deserts of knowledge that God
May give us more leaders who carry the rod.

—Roy Ivan Johnson in "Texts"

derful book. It was the book from which our "Reedemer himself drew the sustenance of his own soul." When I study it as the sacred scriptures of the Hebrews, and the sacred literature of a God-chosen people, inspired by him, it means more to me than ever. It grieves me to see it used as a weapon of controversy; it grieves me to see those who would be its friends have mistaken conception of it and consequently misinterpreting it. Young people are very sensitive to this. I should like to speak of four books on the Old Testament which I am studying now. The first book is Miss Knott's new course for young people's and adult classes entitled "The Student's History of the Hebrews," and for reference books Smyth's last book, "The Bible in the Making in the Light of Modern Research" and Ottley's two books, "A Short History of the Hebrews" and "The Religion of Israel." By the use of these books with her class of forty sophomores, Mrs. Bryant is making the Old Testament live again and preventing our students from throwing it overboard.

Our young people need solid food and it is only by a pastor being intellectually as well as spiritually strong that he can feed and hold his young people. Are you reading the best books of the day? I do not mean the season's best sellers. They are usually too superficial. I wouldn't put much money into books like Swains' "What and Where Is God?" or Papini's "Life of Christ" or the book sold at the average camp-meeting, but I would put money into books written by the world's scholars—Ellwood's "Reconstruction in Religion," Drown's "The Creative Christ," Glover's "Progress in Religion to the Christian Era," Peake's new and splendid "Commentary on the Bible," Hudson's, "The Truths We Live by."

Mapping Out Programs

I wonder, in the third place, if our churches are mapping out their program of work, bearing in mind their young people first. Personally I believe it must be done if we are to have the church we should have for the next generation. I firmly believe that in many churches, instead of a separate superintendent, provided the church could not afford a paid director of its religious education, that if the pastor were also made its "director of religious education and young people's work," and then if the evening preaching service were dispensed with and the evening given to the young people's work, that vastly more would or could be accomplished. Have you ever tried the unified service for Sunday morning. If not I wish you would talk with Brother Morris of Champaign or Doctor Marsh of Decatur and let them tell you about their full auditoriums with the restoration of the family pew and the enthusiasm which childhood and youth in the morning congregation brings; and the accomplishment of the same work and more than under the former plan in forty-five minutes less time.

Are our churches providing a monthly or semi-monthly wholesome social gathering of some kind carefully prepared and properly chaperoned and under the directorship of some competent young person for their young people and drawing upon the church treasury if need be to finance it? Is that not a part of the work of the church. You would be surprised at the number of young people who come to me with no conception of the possibility of an evening's being a good time without dancing as its main feature. Why should they? They have never seen such. Well we attempt to show them that it is possible. I almost hesitate to speak of it lest some one might want to borrow it, for I have only one set and we will not let it go out of the church; but I have now a card file of more than 100 fine social schemes for young people's social gatherings which we have been collecting during the years. What an asset it is!

Do not try to equip your young people with a complete system of religious doctrine under pain of their not being Christians if they do not believe in all things as you believe. Tell them the things you do believe and then leave some room for the work of the Spirit to guide them into all the truth. They may come to think differently from you about some things and yet be living in just as close communion and fellowship with the great loving heart of God as you, for religion is first of all a matter of the life.

When your young people come to you, having discovered for the first time that there is a lack of harmony between the teachings of science and some of the statements of the Bible do not attempt any reconciliation. Tell them the truth. Tell them that the Bible was not written to teach science, but was written to teach us of God and to shed sufficient light whereby all men everywhere might find him, and that when he inspired his Old Testament writers to write of him, he did not have to give them a modern knowledge of science, and that wherever any reference to science seemed necessary they simply wrote in terms of scientific conceptions of their day. For answers to scientific questions send your young people to the best recent textbooks in geology, or astronomy or the other sciences, but for their answers to questions concerning God and the way of life send them to the Bible, for it is our gold mine of truth for all things religious. There is no other solution to the lack of harmony between the teachings of science and certain statements of the Bible.

The Apostle Paul makes the purpose of the Bible wonderfully clear when he says in his second letter to Timothy, referring to the Old Testament "the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for instruction which is in righteousness—that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work. He does not say anything about the Bible being profitable for instruction in science, or psychology or philosophy or anything else but he does say that it is profitable for instruction which is in righteousness that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work. There is the threefold purpose of the scriptures: To bring man into right relations with God through Christ Jesus, to teach him of the things of God, and to equip him for Christian service. The more I study the Old Testament in that light the more it looms up before me in all its greatness and power, and the sooner we come to the point where we teach our young people that conception of it the sooner will we come to the point where they will see in it a great book of life and truth rather than discard it as a book which is unbelievable.

Progress and Prospects of Baptists in Esthonia

Esthonia is one of the European lands in which American, British, and Canadian Baptists are cooperating to further the work.

BY J. H. RUSHBROOKE

THE number of Baptist church members in Esthonia has at the time of writing (October, 1923) risen to about 6,000. During 1922, owing to the revival whose force is not yet spent, 1,000 were baptized in the Island of Dago alone. The so-called "Free Churches," which differ from the Baptists merely in name, and may, there is reason to believe, soon unite with them in one union, include about 2,000 members. Such numerical progress as has taken place since 1920 is unparalleled in the history of the Esthonian Baptist movement, and justifies the hope that the celebration of its approaching fortieth anniversary will be signalized by a membership of not less than 10,000. Best of all, however, is the fine evangelical and evangelistic temper of our people in the land, and their splendid loyalty to Jesus Christ.

The present day opportunity to extend among the Esthonian people the spirit of New Testament Christianity is most favorable. There is no longer a state church. Each religious community is dependent on its own adherents for support, the only exception being that the Lutheran theological faculty in the University of Dorpat is still maintained by public funds. A strong love of freedom distinguishes the Ests; and the Baptist insistence on personal conversion, believers' baptism, and a democratic church government based on New Testament teaching, has a power of appeal which promises to secure a leading influence in the land. Baptist preaching now attracts all classes of the people. But for the lack of educated leaders and pastors, and the still somewhat rude and repellent character of their church buildings, progress would be still more rapid. The need of preachers will in coming years be met through the output of the seminary; but since this institution was opened only in February, 1922, some time must elapse before its full effects appear. At present sixteen young people are taking a four years' course, and meanwhile rendering no small service by preaching on Sundays in the neighborhood of Reval. A friend intimately acquainted with the conditions writes me that "the founding of the preachers' school evidently marks the beginning of a new reformation period for Esthonia."

It is all to the good that a number of well known American Baptists have lately visited Esthonia, and I earnestly hope that some representative British and Canadian preachers may ere long be able to follow the example. To know our brethren and their work is an inspiration.

Bengal Episodes

By John A. Howard

AN old villager says we are sure to have a famine this year because the weather signs are identical with those preceding the two previous famines which he has seen. There were rains for about a week at the end of February and the weather was crisp and cool for a month longer than usual.

Some very beautiful specimens of deer roam the jungle in one section of our field. Their call is heard nearly every night. Bears are not uncommon. On the way to a Christian festival two of our preachers and their wives lost the jungle road. Ahead in the brush was a large bear. They were afraid he would force an acquaintance but he decided not to do so. A friend of ours was going through that jungle a number of years ago when he heard a terrible commotion in the clearing ahead and on approaching he saw that two large bears were having a terrible fight. He told the Santali coolie who was with him that a strategic retreat was the order of the day but the Santali said, "Give me a club," and running up to the bears gave them a beating and they galloped off into the thick timber.

Leprosy seems to be on the increase. It was discovered that one woman here was a leper and she was told she must be examined. Immediately her temperature rose a number of degrees and she said, "I will put a rope around my neck and commit suicide but I will not go to the doctor." Another leper was informed that he should receive treatment. He answered in no uncertain tone, "I will drink poison. I will cut my throat but I will not leave my native village." After an immense amount of persuasion both decided to go to the leper asylum. There they would have received injections which probably would have prevented the spread of the disease and might even have produced a cure but they stayed only a few hours, then went into the jungle and have not been seen since.

Yesterday there was a big Hindu festival in Contai. In front of the idol house was a bamboo trapeze beneath which a fire was burning briskly. The feet of the worshipers were roped to the trapeze. With bent heads and clasped hands they worshiped the flames below them. While a native clarinet with all its shrillness mingled its notes with the angry beating of a couple of drums, a man danced with frenzy around the fire's edge. This heathen festival is supposed to last ten days. At its closing sessions worshipers walk barefooted through the fire and have spikes put through the flesh of their backs. The spikes are attached by ropes to the trapeze. The devotees swing back and forth sometimes until the flesh is torn from their backs and death is the result of injuries received.

India certainly does need Christ. There is no hope except in him. But, blessed be his name forever, the gospel was never listened to with more receptiveness than it has been this season. The story of Christ and him crucified has been constantly proclaimed to these terrifically needy souls. We have daily used one of Nelson's large pictures of the crucifixion. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me" has been proved to be true. To all classes from the crudest jungle man to the college graduate, the sacred attraction of Calvary has made a powerful appeal.

In one village where persecutions have been rife, the Christians have remained faithful. Threat of fines, beatings and lawsuits have only drawn the servants of the Nazarene closer together. From the mouths of Hindus have come the words, "We will also become Christians." One man in this same village a year ago was an idolator in dense heathen darkness, with no hope for this life or that to come. He has now accepted Christ, and during the past twelve months he has been faithful in prayer and Bible reading. A short time ago he said to us, "The religion of Jesus is a religion of great joy."

One girl in the fisher village has been very happy in her newly found Saviour and her life has a great drawing power on her Hindu brother. We shall depend on your petitions to the throne that her entire village may soon accept Christ. We were encouraged when two others followed the Lord in baptism. A high caste farmer, a weaver and a priest have all said they hope in the near future to become Christians.

There are so many who have only one step between them and eternal joy. They will take the last step providing you, dear home friends, will continue in persistent faithful prayer. The great need is the power of the Holy Spirit to bring conviction and decision. The victory depends on you. The battery must be charged if the lights burn brightly. We are depending implicitly on you to charge the battery.

Three of our Illinois friends, on their world tour, have just given us the great pleasure of a visit. The latch string hangs out for all of you.

When He Discovered Himself

By Charles L. White

HE loved her, no one ever really doubted it, and he built for her a beautiful house, but it was never a home. He gave her servants, carriages, music, gardens, birds and flowers; but he never gave to her his time, his attentions and his thoughtful devotion. He smiled and flattered, but she knew that it meant nothing. It cost him little. His heart was in the clubs, in the games he played, in his business associations and in his political aspirations.

One day a deep shadow floated over the household. His wife passed through a great trial and a bitter disappointment. Her cheeks grew pale, her eyes had a brilliancy that frightened him, and then indeed he began to give her his evenings, his days and nights, his tenderness, his thoughtfulness, his happy anticipations of her needs. He read to her, he showed her pictures, he telephoned a dozen times a day, and sometimes wrote her at midday and often sent a messenger from his office with a loving note.

At once his personal amusements all became secondary to her welfare, and he recovered her heart; but he does not know how near he came to losing it forever. Slowly she crept back to health again, and he found a new joy in his life, for he gave himself to his beloved, and he learned that "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

There is a noble man in our land. He loves the cause of Christ. No one can doubt it. He built a church for the people, but he seldom worshipped there. He paid its quartet, gave an automobile to the minister and paid for its upkeep. He had a landscape gardener beautify the spacious grounds around the edifice. He was proud of his Christian wife and children, encouraged them to go to all the services and the sessions of the Sunday school. He entertained the pastor, gave him books, helped to provide for the education of his children, loaded his study table with magazines and papers, praised his leadership; but these things after all signified very little, for his heart was in the bank, where he often passed his Sunday mornings, and his life was in a whirl of activity that had little of the world above in it.

But one day his pastor came into troubled waters. His character was viciously attacked by a worthless man in the city. Then it was that this careless church member rose to his new opportunity, for he believed that the charges were false and that he could tell a true man when he met him. His wealth, his time, his brains and his prayers were into the defense of his pastor, and the man who pursued the minister with relentless fury was at last forced to confess that his motive was blackmail.

The experience through which our friend passed was a revelation to his heart. He now gives no less of his wealth, but gives also himself to the church, to its services and to his Lord. He is indeed a new man. He has found

How the Orthodox Eastern Church Looks to an American Churchman

By Samuel McCrea Cavert

NO thoughtful observer can be long in the Near East and meet some of its spiritual leaders without realizing that the Protestant churches of the West know little of the Orthodox Eastern church. He cannot help feeling keenly that here is a great part of the body of Christ with which we ought to have closer fellowship and cooperation.

We ought, in the first place, to recognize our debt, throughout past centuries, to the eastern church. It is a debt which began in the early period of Christianity when the Greek intellect gave theological formulation to our faith. It is a debt which has continued through the Middle Ages and since, as the Orthodox churches have stood as a bulwark against the westward advance of Islam.

Spiritually Minded Leaders

And not to the past alone, but to the present hour may one look to see the strength and the power of the Eastern church. Certainly there is a current of quickened life flowing through great sections of it today. This has been unmistakable in the informal conferences which it was my privilege to hold with some of the outstanding figures in the Orthodox churches, including the Acting Patriarch of the Greek Church at Constantinople, the Acting Patriarch of the Armenian Church, Archbishop Anastasis of the Russian Church in Constantinople, and Chrysostom, the newly consecrated Metropolitan of Athens. These, and others whom one might mention, such as the Metropolitan of Salonika, the Archbishop of Jerusalem, and Bishop Nicholai of Serbia represent a deeply spiritual and forward-looking leadership with whom we should count it a joy and a privilege to develop the closest relations of fellowship and helpfulness.

Of course there are obvious weaknesses in the Orthodox church, as we see it on the surface, its traditionalism, its overemphasis on ritualism, the lack of education among the clergy. But if one is tempted to pass a final judgment in the light of these things alone, let him recall for how many centuries these near-eastern churches have either been in bondage politically to Islam or struggling to keep themselves alive in a hostile environment. The wonder is not that there are things which may be criticized but that Christian faith and spiritual life survive such obstacles and that the church still has, as it always had, a mighty hold upon the hearts and lives of the people.

First Steps in Cooperation

Certainly whatever we in the West are to do for the Orthodox churches we must do through these churches—not by proselyting among them. The Protestant leaders with whom I talked in Constantinople and Athens, almost without exception, share this opinion. Indeed, the American board of commissioners for foreign missions, in association with Robert College, has already put into operation a remarkable plan of cooperation with the Orthodox leaders in training priests and workers for their churches In "the school of religion," as this project at Constantinople is called, opened a year ago, there were more than a score of students from the Greek, Armenian, Russian and Bulgarian Orthodox churches, together with several Protestant students. The Orthodox students came with the full endorsement and support of their bishops, who realize today the need for such help as the American churches can give. The instruction in the liturgy and church history is given by leaders of the Orthodox faith, while courses in the Bible, religious education, social service and other subjects are given by American teachers. It is hoped that this school of religion may ultimately become a union effort, including in its scope all the Protestant churches carrying on work in any part of the Near East, and always developing in the fullest cooperation with the Orthodox churches themselves. Here is a superb pioneering enterprise, deserving the support of the whole of American Protestantism and demonstrating the practicability of closer relations between near-eastern and western Christianity in every realm of activity.

> OPEN the door of your heart, my friend,
> Heedless of class or creed,
> When you hear the cry of a brother's voice,
> The sob of a child in need.
> To the shining heaven that o'er you bends
> You need no map or chart,
> But only the love the Master gave—
> Open the door of your heart.

Another concrete project for cooperation, the significance of which can hardly be exaggerated, presents itself in the task of religious education for the Greek and Armenian children in the Near East orphanages. Why should not a program be arranged by the joint action of American Protestant leaders and the highest officials of the Greek and Armenian churches, which would insure that by a cooperative program the children shall be brought up in the Orthodox faith, with all that the churches of the West can contribute through greater familiarity with modern methods of religious education and character building? To develop such a program now might open the way to a new relationship with the Orthodox churches in their whole life in the future.

The Present Opportunity

Never was a moment more opportune than the present for developing such cooperation between the Orthodox churches and Protestantism. Their leaders are now turning to us for sympathy and practical help. They are grateful for what has already been done by American Christianity—for the service of revered leaders like Doctor Peet, of the American board, who has been one of the most trusted advisers of Patriarch Meletios of the Greek Church; for the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, with which Orthodox leaders have cooperated heartily; for the special interest of the Episcopal church, which has made many of our western churchmen known in the Orthodox church; for the mission of mercy carried on by Near East Relief; for the efforts of the Federal Council of the Churches in behalf of justice for the minorities in the Near East. For these and other reasons there is a surprising interest throughout the Near East in the American churches. Every one of the Orthodox leaders with whom I spoke welcomed eagerly the suggestion of closer contacts in the future. The Metropolitan of Athens in his inaugural address at the time of his recent consecration, officially urged, among other wise policies, the "establishment of friendly cooperation with all the Christian churches throughout the world."

As steps in the further development of closer fellowship and helpfulness it would seem that the Protestant churches of America, acting through the Federal Council as their agency for united effort, ought to serve as a center for at least the following program.

1. Interpreting the Orthodox churches to the West. First of all, the present ignorance and lack of understanding must be removed.

2. Expressing in every possible way the sympathy of the western churches toward the eastern, and facilitating more personal contacts and more systematic communication with the Orthodox leaders in the Near East.

3. Giving practical assistance to the Orthodox churches in such ways as they may deem helpful.

4. Developing a more regular consultative and cooperative relationship with the branches of the Orthodox churches ministering to their own people in America.

State Conventions Meet in Annual Session

Wisconsin

By Robert W. Shaw

FOR the seventh time since the organization of the convention Wisconsin Baptists were the guests of the First Church, of LaCrosse. LaCrosse is one of our most enterprising and up-to-date cities, beautiful for situation and notable for its factories, normal school and wholesale trade.

The Baptist church is one of our good substantial churches, and the pastor, Rev. W. S. Stewart, now beginning his fourth year of service with the good people there, had everything shipshape for the convention. Despite the two days of continual drizzle the people adjusted themselves to the plans of the entertaining church and were delighted with their reception and the hospitality shown.

"This convention was not the largest ever held in the state in the point of attendance, but it was an outstanding convention and will be historic in many ways. This year there was an effort to combine the Bible and missionary conference of the Northern Baptist Convention with it, and the plan worked admirably. In fact it was the general opinion of the delegates who expressed themselves that something like this would be a good thing to try out for a few years.

Dr. P. C. Wright was the team leader; associated with him were Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Manley, of India; Dr. D. J. Evans, of Kansas City; Dr. C. W. Gilkey, of Chicago; and Mrs. O. R. Judd and Mrs. Laycock, who took care of the woman's side of the program at the women's meetings. All of the addresses were outstanding, and the whole program made a good impression on the convention. Perhaps the two most marked features were the devotional addresses of Doctor Evans, and the missionary dialogue of Doctor and Mrs. Manley.

The Business

There must be some business at the convention, but this year, except where the constitution otherwise provided, all business was confined to the morning sessions. The most important business was the matter of the future denominational program. This was given considerable attention and was much discussed. There was decided feeling on the part of a number of the delegates that since the program itself declared for the recognition of the local church, the local church should have some recognition in the matter of endorsing the program. This feeling was not confined to any one group of delegates, but leaders of both the conservative and liberal groups held to this opinion. After much discussion, and some little fire, the convention adopted the program, subject to the ratification of a majority of the churches reporting on the matter by Dec. 1. And while it is not expected that a great number of the churches will take action, yet this clears away the criticism that came up so often during the early days of the New World Movement to the effect that the churches had no opportunity for a referendum on the matter. The churches in Wisconsin now have the chance to demonstrate their interest in the matter by considering the entire program, and reporting their action to the convention.

The Banquets

It is reported that the Loyalty luncheon of the women was a great success, with nearly 150 present. The same can be said of the men's supper. Mr. Jasperson, the main speaker of the evening, failed to arrive, so the men took the meeting in their own hands and ran it to suit themselves. They sang, oh how they sang! and not altogether religious songs, but how tenderly they did sing the religious songs after they had tried out some of the more popular airs of the day. Then they gave a farewell to three of the leaders who are leaving the state—Rev. C. A. Boyd, Rev. E. R. MacKinney, and Rev. R. G. Pierson. In an hour of good fun and laughter these brethren were bidden Godspeed to their new fields, and they in turn spoke of the fact that the great loss of leaving Wisconsin was the loss of the great fellowship which exists in the state among the Baptist people. We are not so strong numerically, but we are bound together with great ties of love and friendship. In addition Dr. W. E. Chalmers, of Philadelphia, and Dr. G. R. Manley, of India, spoke. Dr. D. J. Evans told of his great men's class, and urged the pastors to learn to speak the vocabulary of men.

Other Features

Our own speakers all brought great messages. Dr. Robert Gordon, of Fond du Lac, gave the annual message to the ministers, and it was timely and strong, being given in the fine way in which Mr. Gordon has of speaking the depths of his own great heart. Dr. G. W. Taft's message on denominational leadership was a strong appeal to the fact that our present denominational leadership was almost altogether trained in our denominational schools, and that if our leadership of the future is to be as strong as that of the past and present, the denominational schools must be given the material with which to produce it.

It was with keen regret that the convention accepted the resignation of one of its field workers, namely Rev. Ralph Barry, who now goes to take the pastorate of the First Church of Eau Claire.

Hereafter the convention will meet in the spring, and the next session will be held for one day immediately after the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention next June.

Dr. B. E. Allen, of Illinois, told the story of his great work in a rural field in that state, and also addressed the rural workers at a luncheon. The convention ended with a missionary pageant, and an address by Doctor Evans.

Colorado

By Horace W. Cole

THE State Convention met with the First Church, Denver, Oct. 16-18. Dr. A. H. C. Morse recently completed his eleventh year as pastor of this church. The convention proper was preceded by the annual banquet and business meeting of the young people of the state with appropriate addresses by President James Asa White and others. On Tuesday morning and afternoon the sessions of the Pastors' Conference and also the Women's Conference were held. Both of these conferences were well attended and were of a helpful and inspiring character. Dr. H. F. Stilwell contributed in the practical presentation of the subject of evangelism.

On Tuesday night the convention proper assembled. Over 300 delegates registered at the convention, some of them coming more than 500 miles to attend. Pastor Morse extended a warm welcome. Emanual Payne responded. H. W. Cole, pastor of the Calvary Church of Denver, preached the annual sermon upon the subject, "God's Plan for the Kingdom."

The next two days were busy days in the business and topics which engaged the attention of the meeting. Judge F. W. Freeman was chosen president of the convention for the fourth consecutive term, and W. R. Schoemaker, clerk.

The report of the work within our own state during the past year was gratifying. Dr. F. B. Palmer presented his eleventh annual report which recorded the greatest number of baptisms in the churches of any year in the history of the convention. The work upon mission fields has gone forward in an encouraging manner, particularly in some of the mining districts. The experiment of vacation student pastors has proven satisfactory and will become a regular policy of the board on a certain character of mission fields.

Gratifying Reports

Our colporter, evangelist and chapel-car workers have rendered helpful service during the year. Several new churches have been organized through the faithful efforts of these brethren. This year Colorado will seek to surpass the goal of any previous year in the New World Movement. President Freeman's address was a clarion call to advance in accord with the standards of the Word of God and worthy of the splendid heritage of the past.

Throughout the convention sessions echoes of the World Baptist Alliance were heard. The review of the Stockholm confession by Joshua Gravett called forth some spirited discussion which recurred at intervals throughout the convention. The friendliest of spirit prevailed but the most emphatic position was taken relative to the attitude of our denominational workers toward historic Baptist beliefs, as was evidenced in the resolution unanimously passed near the close of the session, as follows: "We deeply deplore the fact that the disquieting rumors that some of our secretaries, missionaries and teachers at home and abroad are teaching doctrines contrary to and subversive of historic Baptist beliefs, causes some noble people to withhold heartiest support from our denominational enterprises. We believe that any one of our boards will, upon the presentation of sufficient proof, withdraw support from any individual teaching doctrines contrary to and subversive of historic Baptist beliefs. We, therefore, earnestly plead for prayerful patience and continued support from every church within our convention territory; and do earnestly press upon our boards their solemn responsibility to give full, speedy and unprejudiced attention to any charges properly presented them against any secretary, missionary or teacher in their employ." This, as all other resolutions, was passed unanimously. The convention was deeply interested in the reports of the Stockholm Alliance as presented by D. T. Pulliam and F. B. Palmer as well as references from others who were privileged to attend that gathering.

Christian Education

Christian education was presented by Pres. James Asa White of the Colorado Woman's College. Our college is showing a distinct increase in registration over that of previous years and it is clearly evident that preparation must be made at once to house the larger number who will wish to attend in the coming year. Were it not for the fact that many of the pupils are housed outside the institution, we could not now care for those who are in attendance. The future of our college for girls is promising.

The convention was fortunate in having present Dr. H. F. Stilwell whose forceful messages were a source of inspiration and blessing to those in attendance. We also were fortunate in the presence of Dr. W. H. Main of the Publication Society, whose messages during the convention period were greatly appreciated. Miss Clagget and Thomas Moody brought us face to face with the situation not only on their respective fields of Japan and Africa but with the responsibility and the unparalleled opportunity confronting us on all our mission fields. None who heard these speakers can question for a moment the favor of God upon the faithful labors of his people. Miss Ina Burton presented in no less interesting a manner, the work in the homeland.

Dr. C. A. Fulton of Colorado Springs denied himself the pleasure of a set address upon "Closing Up the New World Movement" and led in a helpful review and preview of the denominational situation as related to the faithful presentation of the Gospel to the millions of souls to whom we are particularly responsible. His thorough explanation strengthened the purpose in the hearts of all to make this year the crowning year.

As a whole, the convention sessions were fully equal to those of any previous year and brought a spirit of hopefulness and consecration that must certainly promise well for the future. Colorado expects to entertain the International B. Y. P. U. of A. at Denver next July and is already feeling the stimulus that such an undertaking offers. Committees are appointed and are at work. The young people are rallying and a deepening of the spiritual life is being emphasized and experienced. Our young people are purposing that this convention shall be characterized by its spiritual power and the hearty response to the call to definite Christian service in this hour.

West Virginia

By Clarence W. Kemper

WEST Virginia Baptists met in Parkersburg, Oct. 15-19, 500 strong, for their annual meeting. A note of progress was dominant. Leaders of the past ten years declared its action surprisingly superior to preceding conventions.

For the year, fifty-five commissions had been granted for points of service within the state. During the past ten years our churches have indicated progress in that 35,000 baptisms have been reported. Last year there were 5,237 baptisms. During the New World Movement period, West Virginia Baptists have moved from thirty-second to twelfth place among the states of the Northern Baptist Convention in contribution to our denominational enterprise.

For this period our state has averaged a little better than $200,000 for our denominational unified efforts.

Points from Outstanding Messages

Dr. D. B. Purinton, ex-president of Denison and West Virginia universities, declared that "Christianity lays its hand upon every human interest. In this the religion of Jesus is unique. Baptists have very properly given much attention to individualism. We need to give more attention to the social side of our faith and practice." He was followed by Dr. S. Z. Batten, who declared that "the church is here to make the state Christian. It is here to get our industrial life organized on a Christian basis."

Dr. E. B. Pollard brought a strong message on "Christian Education," saying, "Education consists of the three L's, liberty, love and life. We should not learn how to use God's energies till we are Christian enough to use them properly. It was quite appropriate when a certain professor in one of our colleges said to his class in laboratory work, 'We are going to ask God a question. Let's be reverent.'"

Missionary L. C. Hylbert, whose boyhood home was near Parkersburg, stirred the convention by reports of progress from his East China Field. He told of the work in his twenty-eight stations with organized church and school at each point. He declared our work there is tremendously gripping the Chinese life. He told how one Chinese gentleman within the past five years has contributed more than $100,000 to their work. He also told how Chinese business men had cooperated to give them an endowment of $190,000 for their schools.

Another West Virginia son, Clarence W. Kemper, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Charleston, addressed the convention on "Christ's Call to Youth." Since this was his first message before his native state convention since entering the ministry, he was heard with interest. He declared "that youth has an instinctive understanding of Jesus Christ. While maturity calculates and stresses theology, youth gives an instinctive to her Master."

Dr. John Y. Aitchison captured our people with his message which had to do with our great denominational program.

Mrs. J. M. Baker from the Angole Mission Station, carried away the convention with an overflowing audience at one of the evening sessions. For one hour she let us look at the Old India, now being transformed into the New India ready for the gospel of Jesus Christ.

President B. D. Weeks of Bacone College, portrayed vividly the Indian life of our country and how the Indians respond today to the work of Christian education among them.

Two Important Decisions

Recognizing the evils arising from irregularities in ordinations to our Baptist ministry today, the convention took action looking to improvement at this point.

Again, West Virginia Baptists have a great educational program, and are making rapid strides through their two schools, Broaddus College and Alderson Academy and Junior College. Action was taken looking to a unified program for the whole educational interest of West Virginia Baptists.

Some Contributing Factors

Pastor J. C. Killian, of the First Baptist Church, Parkersburg, together with the other pastors and churches of the city, entertained the convention in first-class manner. Secy. A. S. Kelly had the work well in hand, and directed the work of the convention in a modest but effective way. A word should be said for Editor G. E. Bartlett, of the Baptist Banner, who compiled a souvenir issue of our state paper for the convention week. It gave a comprehensive array of material concerning our whole denominational program, illustrated by some forty photo cuts.

When He Discovered Himself

a joy in placing the candle of his own life near the candlestick of the Lord.

He has become a man of noble faith because he has learned to be faithful. His family life is now a little corner of heaven, and he is seriously considering what he will do with his money when he dies. All signs indicate that he will distribute a large part of his fortune while he lives to the many calls of the kingdom of God. He is just now perplexed but he will do his duty when he sees it, for he loves his Lord and he is giving himself to the extension of his Master's Kingdom.

He said to his pastor the other day, "I am now enlarging and pushing my business in order that I may have still more to give for the cause to which I have dedicated my life."

THAT REVIVAL

Your editorial in THE BAPTIST for October 20 on "A Revival of Personal Religion" is important and valuable. I believe every word of it; it deeply moved my heart and I am praying and shall continue to pray for such a revival. But I confess that I am troubled with misgivings and that I pray with little faith. Is a revival possible in our churches?

Allow me to explain. A revival, in the proper sense of the word, is a restoration to vigor and power of a life that has become sickly and feeble. It is not the creation of new life nor the restoration of life that has been completely lost. It is an experience which only the regenerate can have. I am not stickling for a definition; I am trying to get at the root of a serious difficulty and to find a remedy for a tragic situation.

For several years we have been filling up our churches with unregenerate people. They have come because urged to do so by pastors and Sunday-school teachers. They have been convinced that it was a good and praiseworthy thing to belong to a Christian church. They have come by instruction and not by Christian experience. Of such experience they know nothing and do not even profess to know anything.

Of the correctness of this statement it is easy to bring abundant proof. This method of receiving members is the rule among our churches. Even those who come in after a series of evangelistic meetings have no Christian experience to tell. There are, thank God, exceptions to the rule; there are still Baptist churches which insist upon evidence of regeneration before receiving people for baptism; but they are few. What I am writing in this article is not for them. But how can a church of unregenerate members be revived? They have never had any spiritual life to decline and become feeble. What they need is the new birth and conversion. For the pastor or any one else to try to revive them is a vain and heart-breaking effort. What the pastor must do to them is to preach the gospel, and show plainly the way of salvation and what it means to become a Christian. This imposes a hard task upon the pastor; for the hardest thing in the world is to induce an unregenerate and unconverted church-member to accept Christ. But this is what we must do if we would extricate ourselves from our present difficulty and prepare for real progress in the future.

Of course, along with this goes the imperative duty, imposed upon both pastors and churches, of refusing to receive unregenerate and unconverted persons into church membership.

Now, if this is what the editor meant by "A Revival of Personal Religion," all I can do is to say amen to it and offer this as a further elucidation of the theme. But if he was writing about reviving personal religion in people who have no religion and never had any, he is proposing the impossible and enjoining a vain effort. The pastors and members of our churches who are real Christians should seek to be so filled with the Holy Spirit that the preaching of the gospel would have power to bring the rest of the members to repentance, to saving faith, to consecration, and to efficient service.

A. E. WAFFLE.

THE SABBATH AND ITS HIGHER USES

I speak on my own responsibility as a lover of righteousness, but I think I represent the mind of every one of our faithful ministers and Christian workers of our western communities particularly when I venture to earnestly call for a fair dealing with the highest interests of our churches and homes in the matter of recreation and religion. No one can fail to see the downward trend of things today.

The announcement of recent new inroads on Sunday rest and worship, against which we protest, accentuates it. The ceaseless whirl of wheels on our highways accentuates it. If we hope to continue our Christian civilization and to rear young men and young women to stand by it, how can we go on as we are doing with the increasing disregard of our Christian institutions? Where are our men and women being trained morally and religiously for the future? We have excellent schools and teachers. Is the church and Sunday school being recognized as it should be? The recreative movie makes its constant appeal. Why not give the devotional and worshipful an opportunity to deliver its message? Time was when the Lord's day was kept sacred for such appeal to the soul, but now the amusement feature invades the sacred day even, and monopolizes so much of the thoughts and time of those not already won to higher things that there seems no room whatever today for God's voice to the soul, which is needed in the nature of man. Why not one day and one night at least out of the seven for worship and moral inventory? Can we afford to let our young people, a large part of them, overlook these things. Where are they? Especially our boys and young men? Are they at church? Not many. Look abroad and count them anywhere. Can we afford, I say, to let things drift as they are drifting? More than one of our good citizens has felt this. Personally, I should prefer to see, say a Friday night, recognized as a kind of family night at our places of recreation, with suitable program which all might patronize and enjoy, if only our cherished Sunday and our Sunday evenings might be left for its legitimate and long-honored office of religion and evangelism, in the interest of all that we count dear. This is but an individual appeal, but it is a sober one and one in which, I fancy, not a few join who pray for the future of our land and more wholesome, normal ways of living.

Why I Believe in and Practice Christian Stewardship

BY CLIFFORD J. HUTCHINSON

TO me, God is real. To me Christianity means something. It is because of the reality of God and the meaning of Christianity that I believe in and practice Christian stewardship. To me, the Christian church with all its agencies is the greatest institution for moral uplift in the world and it is because of the power of the Christian church for right that I believe in and practice Christian stewardship. I believe that God is counting on me and in counting on me, I believe that it is necessary for me to give of my money to his cause as well as myself and my time.

With my belief in God, in Christianity, and in the church, it is necessary for me to believe in and support missions and the spread of the gospel everywhere. It is necessary for me to believe in and support all the agencies of the church that have in charge the work of spreading the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. These agencies are varied but include our state conventions, Northern Baptist Convention as well as the mission boards of our great denomination.

If I believe in God, in Christianity and in the Christian church, I must also believe in our denomination. I must also believe in and practice Christian stewardship so that our denomination can spread the gospel of the Father.

As a Christian, it is necessary that I spend my income rightly, therefore the first obligation against my income is that which I owe the Father.

The New World Movement made a tither out of me. Before that time I could not in any way, find money enough to reach my personal obligations, let alone the giving of more than a few cents to the work of the church. At the very beginning of the New World Movement, I signed up as a tither, saying that I would try it for a short time, but now, after trying out tithing for nearly five years, I can say that it pays to tithe, and can testify that the words of Paul as found in 2 Cor. 9:6, "But this I say, he which soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly; but he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" is the truth. I now find that I have money for all my obligations, both personal and church, and aside from these I have been able to attend the B. Y. P. U. of A. conventions at Cincinnati, St. Paul and Boston.

Buried Talents

An Actual Experience

By Charles H. Crawford

Z. seemed to me the most difficult field I had ever had. To be sure, there was a fine church building, almost new; and every Lord's Day some of the finest people that ever drew breath came and listened attentively to the preaching; and a very few of them kept up a good Sunday school. But the mass of the people, even some church members, rarely entered the house of worship. This did not seem to be due to any enmity to the church, or to religion. They were so taken up with the things of the world, they could find no time for the things of the soul. Some thought they had to work seven days in the week. A much larger number argued that they had to work so hard six days, they needed Sunday for rest and recreation. The majority seemed to think recreation more important than religion.

Still nearly all made the pastor very welcome in their homes, as he went about among them. While they made excuse for past neglect, they promised that they would start coming to church, but these promises were rarely kept.

How I prayed for them! How I tried to make my sermons interesting! But mostly in vain. The people I so wanted to reach had forgotten him of whom I spoke, so had no interest in my subject.

Finally came a happy inspiration. I began to put on, especially at night, a little pageant instead of opening exercises. The young people, and others, gladly helped. We showed mostly Bible scenes, illustrating the sermon to follow—Naomi going to Moab with husband and sons, returning sad, with only a daughter-in-law, with streaks of gray in her hair, (I don't know whether those girls brought flour from home or chalk from school; but Naomi certainly had aged some during her ten years in Moab!), the bridegroom going gaily with his friends to bring his bride, the ten virgins going out to meet him on his return, (I even let them snore a little while "they all slumbered and slept!"), the bridegroom returning with his bride, in the bridal procession, their friends playing on instruments and singing the quaint, old-time wedding songs; the women going to the tomb on resurrection morn, and returning soon, wild with joy at the wondrous news! The Bible is full of it.

Suddenly I had a congregation. Soon we had to seek a larger place. When there was a pageant the church would not hold the audience. And always the people stayed and listened to the sermon as intently as they had watched the pageant. Rapidly the Bible stories and the Bible truth were becoming a part of the life of the people.

A most interesting part of the experience was the discovery of hidden talents. It was like digging for gold and finding frequent nuggets. Two or three of the ladies were discovered to be great costumers. We found a number of born actors. Several had the gift of personation. The postmaster had a peculiar and most useful gift. He proved to be an expert on makeup. Under his hand one business friend became Nicodemus, another Joseph of Arimathea, while he himself was a most real looking Peter. All three, and several others, looked like typical Jews of Bible times.

It was as if, at the waving of my metaphorical wand, famous Bible characters stepped out of their picture frames and walked across the stage. (Peter and John ran across, on their way to the empty tomb!) Or as if these that I have named, with Mary Magdalene and the other women from Galilee, had come to live with us. And the people welcomed them.

But this method of winning an audience is not for Z alone. The plan can be worked anywhere, city or country. Anywhere an industrious digger will find such buried talents waiting to be uncovered, and made meet for the Master's use.

The Bible

THIS book contains the mind of God, the state of sinners and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its histories are true, its precepts are binding and its decisions are immutable.

Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy.

It contains light to direct you, food to support you and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's character.

Here paradise is restored, heaven opened, and the gates of hell closed. Christ is its grand object, our good its design and the glory of God its end.

It should fill the memory, rule the heart and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently, and prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory and a river of pleasure.

It is given you in life, will be opened in the judgment and be remembered forever.

It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor and will condemn all who trifle with its contents.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 18

OUR LORD JESUS A MISSIONARY
Lesson: Matt. 9:35-38; Mark 1:29-39; Luke 8:1-3; John 3:16-17
Golden Text: John 3:16

Introductory

The time of the lesson is the winter and spring of the year 30 A. D. The setting is, for the most part, in Galilee, a section of the country averaging about thirty miles in width and fifty miles in length.

The Lesson

"Jesus went about all the cities and villages (of Galilee), teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease—" In Galilee there were about 200 cities and villages, according to the Jewish historian Josephus. It was no small field in which Jesus labored and no light task that he saw before him. To do the work as it should be done there was need of more teachers—"he was moved with compassion for them because they were distressed and scattered, as sheep not having a shepherd." It was to his disciples he turned with—"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into the harvest." It was those whose hearts were flooded with thanksgiving that helped in the support of the work—"certain women who had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities: Mary that was called Magdalene, from whom seven demons had gone out," Joanna, Susanna, and many others "ministered unto them of their substance." But Jesus being the Christ was more than a Galilean missionary—he was the world missionary—its Saviour—the reason for all missionary work—"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal life."

Leading Thoughts

1. Those who cannot go can surely pray. 2. The grateful heart is anxious to give materially. 3. Believing in missions means doing something for missions.

Does the boy loom large upon the horizon of the field of your church life? Does your church furnish adequate opportunity for the boy to meet his father under religious auspices? Scores of churches are planning to have the fathers and sons take supper together during what is known as Father and Son Week which centers about Armistice Day. The purpose as expressed by the late President Harding is to assist the boys of the community to their own inherent right of companionship with their fathers. Father and Son Week, Nov. 11-18.

Mrs. Loyalty Echoes An Echo

NOW it should be said
Right away
That Mrs. Loyalty
Really wasn't anybody
In particular:
She wasn't Particularly rich, or Particularly conspicuous, or Particularly influential, or Particularly dependable! Yet
Her church
Chose her to represent it
At the big Loyalty Luncheon
In the nearby city.
And Mrs. Loyalty had not been Particularly eager to Go.
She said that there was the:
Housecleaning to finish—
Children's fall clothes to catch up with—Buttons to be sewed on—
Socks, Socks, Socks, to darn—
Patches—Tears—Rips—
Afternoon teas to attend—
Lectures—Concerts—Movies—
New novels lying around waiting—
Latest magazines still uncut—
You can see for yourself
How awfully she resembles
You!
But she was finally persuaded
To go.

"You've such an unusual Memory!" they cajoled her,
With the harmlessness of doves
And the wisdom of Serpents.
Indeed, that was her Specialty:
She had the makings of an Excellent Echo!
Even a Poll Parrot Echo would have Satisfied them; but I think
They sensed in her a
Sleeping Beauty—
I think they hoped
It could be Kissed awake
By
The Prince of Peace.

So she pressed her last year's
Blue canton crepe gown.
She looked very nice!
Not handsome, or elegant,
Or stylish, or even charming.
But nice—in the Staunch American way
We mean when a Mother of a family
Goes forth adventuring,
With her dear eyes seeing everything,
Her kind mouth "up" at its kind corners,
Her alert ears open for Whatsoever things are True,
Lovely,
And of good report.
Nice—you understand?
You can see for yourself
How she resembles
You!
So she went, and to tell the truth
She was simply Thrilled
By the quaint conceit
Of her own self
(Her own inconspicuous, uninfluential, undependable self)
Being sent anywhere to become An echo of—
Mrs. Montgomery!
A sub-study of——
Mrs. Montgomery?
Mercy on us! Why she's a person of Gifts, of Fame, of Knowledge, of Influence, of Importance, of Power!!
No wonder this nice quiet little lady
Was all aquiver with the delicious
Conceit of it,
With the amusing
Impudence of it.
The very car-wheel bumped
It up at her monotonously:
"You? You? You?
Ri-dic-you-lous!!!!"
She drew herself up with Sweet dignity:
"Even I!" she said. "Yes,
For one day I'll have to
Be
Mrs. Montgomery
When I get back to My own home town."
She began to feel curious
Twinges of authority
Premonitions of pride
Pangs of power
Inklings of influence
Surge over her: She?
Yes, the wonder of it
Began to work
Before even she reached
That luncheon.

Now, of course, it wouldn't Be quite Fair
To give you
Verbatim
The speech
Mrs. Montgomery made,
Or even
The things Mrs. Loyalty
Jotted in her memory
To echo
In her own Echo Luncheon
Back home.
But surely it would be Entirely fair
To tell you how the
Sleeping Beauty
Of that nice woman's soul
Was Kissed awake.

For as she sat there
Listening
She began piecing together
What the diners were saying:
Here a sentence,
There a clause,
Here praise,
There applause,
Until she began dimly
To visualize the fact
That the great woman whom
She (she!) was to echo
Had been—
For four years—
Putting the New World Movement
First
In her own life:
All her waking hours belonged to "it"—
All her thoughts belonged to "it"—
All her energy belonged to "it"—
All her ambitions and anxieties
Centred in "it."
No church too small to Claim her presence
As a speaker.
No church too far away
To get her consent
To come to stir them
Up!
No mail too heavy for her
To answer.
No problem or plan too difficult
For her to solve.
"It" was the beginning
And the ending of her days.

"It?" echoed little Mrs. Loyalty.
For "It," of course, was
The New World Movement,
And especially
That lovely slice of it
Set apart for Baptist women to mother,
As only women can.
That lonely two-million-dollar-slice Known as The Continuation Campaign.
The luncheon buzzed with Talk about that Campaign.
Mrs. Loyalty
Fell
To thinking seriously about Herself,
Her own inconspicuous, uninfluential,
undependable self.
"Dear me," said she, "haven't
I as many hours in my day
As Mrs. Montgomery has?"
(But I fritter them away—Newspapers—novels—icings!)
Haven't I got as many thought-cells
In even my poor feeble brain
As she has?"

(But I've deliberately sealed up some Of those cells.
Like Old Mother Hubbard
My pantry shelf of Baptist facts
Is bare!)
"Haven't I as much energy in
My muscles
As she?" (Alas, I
Apply those muscles to Social inanities,
To domestic trivialities—
Knittings—crochetings—embroiderings.)
"Why should I go Home
And echo Mrs. Montgomery
On only one day
At a mere luncheon?
What's to hinder
Me
From echoing her
Every day of my life
(Especially until April 30)
Trying to rouse
Every Baptist woman
Every Baptist girl
Every Baptist man
Every Baptist boy
To see the Matchless opportunity
We have in our world
Right now—
The inescapable chance
To make
Jesus Christ
A living force
In the lives of hungry multitudes Seeking
For the very thing
We Baptists
Hold so thoughtlessly?
Oh, what's worth the having
Is worth
The passing on!
I've just been a
Contented, microscopic atom
In my denomination.
A mere zero.
A naught. A cipher.
But if I place
Before my cipher
The "One"
Behold, we two
Can have the strength
Of ten!"

That evening in her room
She knelt
And prayed:
"Thy kingdom come—through the New World Movement,
Thy will be done—by Baptist women—
On earth, as it is in heaven."
How like this other woman is to
You!
You, too, have time,
Thoughts, Energy,
Influence.
Take up the mantle of some Greater woman,
And in your own smaller sphere
Echo her loyalty,
Imitate her consecration,
So that even before April 30
The kingdom may have come a little more
On earth,
As in heaven.

The Young Reserves

Discover Your World, Young Reserves!

Dear Young Reserves,

One of the things we've been promising you lately is a way to discover your world. For did you realize that whole slices of the globe are actually yours? Indeed they are! For you're a Baptist, aren't you? Well, the whole truth of the matter is that the world is so exceedingly big that all the Christians really had to begin worrying about it:

"This isn't right!" they sighed, "for millions and millions of boys and girls are born, grow up, marry and even die without having once heard the name of Jesus Christ! We must remedy that at once."

The only sensible thing to do, therefore, was to divide up the work: the Methodists to work in certain parts of the map, Presbyterians in other sections. Episcopalians in this corner, Baptists in still other patches. Nobody else, therefore, is at all responsible for your particular Baptist patches on the map, because there aren't nearly enough missionaries to go around even as things are now (which is one of the reasons why all dear, wise, sensible grown-up Baptists are so busy pushing "The New World Movement," to send new missionaries and build new churches, schools, hospitals, etc.)

It's high time, therefore, that you discovered your parts of the world, isn't it? This little game will help you. All the words in italics are misspelled, so that you can have the fun of straightening them. The answers will be given next week.

1. 60,000 Telugus in Thous Dinia have been left entirely to Spattibs to teach, convert, and doctor.

2. There are 4,730,000 persons in Thorn Ainid in the provinces of Bengal-Orissa for whom absolutely nobody but Tapbtiss are working. It was near the city of Talccatu where the famous Taptisb missionary, Limawil Yearc, painstakingly and laboriously learned thirty-four different languages of Ainid so that he could translate the Bible for the heathen speaking each of those difficult tongues!

3. The beautiful land of Maurb has also been left largely to Pisbatts, for we have about 190 missionaries there compared with only forty-seven of other denominations. It was in 1814 that our very first Ramanice missionary went to Maurb; his name was Niromada Donjus. We have reason to be tremendously proud of him because he was unjustly imprisoned for over a year, yet was marvelously brave.

4. In the tremendous country of Incha the people of the Tapstib denomination have three big centers of work—in Teas Incha there is a big Tapstib college at Ahhasing to be proud of; in Stew Incha, way, way up the thousand-mile-long river there are schools and a hospital; and in Houst Incha there are Tapstib schools and a hospital too.

5. Over in Napja the Quaakerthe did terrible things to our Sittpab buildings: a wonderful church in Kooty was burned completely out inside, leaving only the shell of the building; a beautiful new school called the Mabie Memorial School in Ohamoyak was shaken down. Many missionaries lost every single thing they owned. We Sittpabs in Ramaice must help rebuild at once, mustn't we?

6. Down in Acarif on the Goonc Verri there are Bitsapt missions for the Groen people, where within the last two years nearly 4,000 people have eagerly joined our little Bitsapt churches.

7. In Sakala we Pittsabs have a Gopherana on Kodiak Sinidaln.

8. The Bittpass also have a Gopherana for the Dinnia children (in the Tiedun Testsa.)

9. Atspitibs have dozens of Stirnachi Centers all over the United States: some for Inchees and Senepaj in California, for Saxicemn and Grinstimma elsewhere.

10. In Bauc and Troop Crio there is fine Aptstib work, too.

11. Down in Central Creamia there are three states belonging only to Tisspabt care, these are Agrinacua, Nas Valorsad, Shadroun.

12. Passbitt also are doing splendid work in the islands known as the Selphpini.

How I do hope there aren't many of us who will be Misters Hates-To-Hurry or Misses Put-It-Off when it comes to caring for our special parts of the world!

Hate-to-Hurry and Put-It-Off

HATE-TO-HURRY and Put-It-Off
They had to go a mile.
"I'll rest," said one, "now I've begun."
Said one, "I'll wait a while."

Resting and waiting, they planned their trip,
And lo! at set of sun,
They rubbed their eyes in great surprise,
For neither mile was done.

And I heard the old clock on the shelf
Set up a sorry chime:
The wee hand told the seconds,
And the long hand told the minutes,
And the short hand told the hours,
And they all told Father Time.

Hate-To-Hurry and Put-It-Off,
You didn't mean to shirk.
You just went slow where you had to go,
You just delayed your work.

But he who rests by the busy road,
And he who hates to start—
They take poor place in any race,
And play a sorry part.

So next time let the old clock tick
A merry, cheery rhyme:
When the wee hand tells the seconds,
And the long hand tells the minutes,
And the short hand tells the hours,
And they all tell Father Time!

—NANCY BYRD-TURNER.

A NEW DAY DAWNS FOR CHERRY-BLOSSOM LAND

Isa. 60:1.3. Missionary Meeting.

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

Japan's New Day: What Shall It Be?

Until Japan opened her doors to the outside world in 1853, her life had been shaped by ideals unchanged for nearly twenty centuries. The emperor, as head of the nation, was worshiped as divine. Under him feudal lords, with their warriors (the samurai), protected farmers and merchants, who paid for the protection by sharing the results of their toil. In a self-satisfied seclusion, Japan went her own way, neither knowing nor caring aught concerning the progress of the outside world.

With the establishment of contacts with other nations came the realization that Japan must adopt and adapt ideas and methods that had made other nations great. She must have a modern army and navy, schools, banks, railways, telegraph and postal systems, and all other modern improvements that typified progress.

Today the Japanese flag appears in every harbor; her goods are sold in every market; three great nations have suffered defeat in war; in international councils her statesmen speak with authority.

Japan seldom invents, but she is quick to seize new ideas and to adapt them to her own uses. For instance, old Japan lacked an idea of sanitation. Yet, so long ago as the Russo-Japanese war, foreign-trained Japanese surgeons astonished the world by proving that strict, modern, sanitary measures could and would practically eliminate disease which had been more deadly than battle.

Japan has adopted western methods of manufacture, until her great cities hum with industry, not only in the production of silks and other commodities long associated with Japan, but such distinctively western articles as matches, toothbrushes and electric appliances.

The western idea of democracy grows apace in Japan. Whereas the old feudal ideas of loyalty and obedience have made possible the rapid progress of the past seven decades, a new spirit of democracy is spreading. Blind obedience to authority is giving way to a spirit of independent thinking. This spirit of democracy has been fostered by the spread of Christianity. The teaching of Jesus on the brotherhood of man runs counter to the old order of clans and classes.

The enormous increase of wealth resulting from the sudden development of industrialism is one of Japan's gravest dangers. The lust for industrial supremacy grows by what it feeds upon. In no country in the world are workers more at the mercy of greedy and heartless employers.

Japan is also entering a new educational day. The learning of the West flows through her schools and universities.

What shall her new day be—darkness or light?

Meeting Arguments

Obviously, the missionary has no easy task in presenting a new religion in so old and keen a civilization. Japan is already steeped in religion. Buddhism and Shintoism have dotted the country with shrines and temples, while Confucianism and Bushido color the ethics of noble and peasant. How would you meet the objections of those who argue thus: "The sending of missionaries to us implies that we are not the equals of those who come to us, in religious matters at least, and they must come to set us right. Why are you here? Is it to tell us that our ancestors were fools and knew nothing, or is it to tell us that our religions are of no worth?"

This is how one missionary meets such questions: "These are told that no reflection is meant to be cast either on their ancestors or their own intelligence. It is because we think they are intelligent that we bring them our message. A man is called ganko (stupid) who does not wish to hear anything he does not already know. Besides, the Japanese who refuses to hear that which comes from afar is disobedient to his emperor, who has commanded his people to seek the truth through the wide world. The objectors are told furthermore, 'While we believe that you have religions that teach you to do that which is right and good, yet it is only the religion of Jesus that begets in you the heart to do what your religions command. Jesus is the only religious teacher who ever claimed that he came from God. It is no reflection on your intelligence that we bring you the message of Christ, but it would be if we failed to do so.'"

The New Woman of Japan

To sacrifice herself for father, brother, husband, and son has long been the fundamental principle of the Japanese woman's duty. Thousands of Japanese girls are today laying down their very lives that those who should cherish and protect them might profit at their expense. It is said that of the 200,000 women and girls coming up annually from the country districts to work in the factories of the big cities, 80,000 return each year, and of these 15,000 are incapacitated, many of them in consumption. Of the remaining 120,000 many die; others are lost sight of in the devious ways of the big city.

A happier side of the picture is found in the new woman of the schools. These women and girls realize fully the responsibilities which lie ahead of them in trying to make Japan progress morally, humanly, as well as scientifically.

The Twin Cities Letter

By Don Mac

The ministers' meeting on Monday, Oct. 22, was an interesting and memorable one. It took the form of a farewell to three of the men who have served churches in the Twin Cities for some time.

In the order of their presentation for their own farewell words to their brethren in the conference who love them, we mention the Rev. John A. Swanson who served the First Swedish church in St. Paul for nine years and seven months, after serving a Swedish church in Minneapolis for fourteen months. He has made for himself an imperishable place in the memory of his brethren not only in the First Swedish church but throughout this whole district. He has become a center of influence and power, guiding his people in the expression of their denominational and church life. He has been a leader in a large sense, and a wise and very conservative one. He will be greatly missed in this part of the world as he leaves it for Brockton, Mass. That church is to be congratulated on receiving so experienced and wise and steady a minister as our Brother Swanson. It will be interesting to note that the Rev. F. C. Hamlin of Chicago has been called to succeed Mr. Swanson in St. Paul. He has not yet determined his duty in the matter and so no announcement other than that just made is possible at this time. Should he come, an inviting field of large opportunity awaits him.

The second to be called upon for words of farewell was Rev. Norman B. Henderson, the minister of the University Baptist church, who goes on November 1 to the pastorate of the important First Church in Madison, Wis. Doctor Henderson has done a remarkable piece of work in Minneapolis. He has been the leader in the reorganization of the church life from the bottom up. He has been a leader in the erection of one of the finest plants for university church work, perhaps in our denomination. All of the plant is finished except the auditorium which I believe is in process of being completed. Doctor Henderson's work became exceedingly burdensome so that his health was threatening to break and it is largely on that account that he feels it his duty, and privilege also, to accept the unanimous call of the Madison Church. The going of Doctor Henderson will leave a difficult problem to the University Church and to its cooperating colleagues in the support of the work there. It will require a man of rare ability to take up and carry forward —as it should be done—the great work in this important center of denominational effort. On the other hand, the man who is equal to the task will find a sympathetic group of men and women, students and others, who will respond to intelligent and capable leadership, and he may make a great impression on the whole life of the state through the student attendances on his various services. The good will of the Baptist brotherhood goes with Doctor Henderson to his new field.

The third person to be called upon was the inimitable Dr. John A. Earl, who has been serving for some time the First Church, St. Paul—the mother of them all in Minnesota. He is leaving a brotherhood in the Twin Cities which loves him ardently and which will remember him ceaselessly in prayer that his life may be all that it is capable of becoming as editor of our national Baptist organ.

Rev. Walter E. Woodbury is absent from his pulpit for four weeks in denominational work connected with the great movement which is on throughout the state and nation for evangelistic purposes. As everybody knows, Mr. Woodbury is serving one of the most important of our churches, the Trinity, served so long and so faithfully and so well by Doctor Crandall who has so comparatively recently entered into his reward and rest. Mrs. Crandall was in the city on Sunday and viewed the marker which was paid for by the Trinity people who in that way and other ways expressed their undying affection for their first pastor.

Dr. Donald D. MacLaurin, who served the Temple Church for seven months last year, is supplying the Trinity pulpit for these four Sundays in Mr. Woodbury's absence. Rev. R. Wilbur Babcock, the brother who assumed the pastorate of the Temple Church last June, is making good. The writer hereof worshipped with Temple Church last Sunday evening and was delighted to see the house practically filled and to hear a very earnest and practical presentation of an important subject. It looks as if the church was singularly fortunate in securing Mr. Babcock to its pastorate. All the brethren wish him and the church a new and larger expression of vital religious activity.

A word comes that the late pastor, Rev. R. A. Kenyon, is still suffering from physical and nervous weakness. He has many, many friends in the Temple Church and outside of it that sympathetically regret this break-down in the health of a man who had large capacity for usefulness.

The Minneapolis pastors are entering enthusiastically into the conference plans which are being projected for this city as one of the notable centers of that great effort.

"A New Brotherhood"

The following letter was received by Dr. Ambrose M. Bailey of the First Church, Seattle, with the request that it be copied and sent to about 200 of the friends of the writer.

Karuisawa, Japan,
Sept. 20, 1923.

Twenty days after the great earthquake we are still marooned in this mountain village. News comes only by messengers who dare the dangers and difficulties of the journey to the scene of devastation, which defy description. We know the home friends will be anxiously waiting for some word from us.

First of all we long to broadcast our new and blessed realization of the unshakable, the indestructible spiritual values of the message of Jesus Christ.

We face carrying on with all our material equipment gone. Only ashes and debris remain of the three institutions in Yokohama where our work centered and of the homes in which we had so recently and with such relief and glad anticipation unpacked and arranged our earthly possessions. In the same house were the personal effects that daughter Helen left with us when she sailed for America last November. Also the outfit of our son Willard who had just landed from American and gone to a Y. M. C. A. conference with only a suitcase.

It all seems like a dream of that inevitable event when we shall forever separate from the things of this world and face the inventory of our investments in the things not made with hands. But the familiar promise, "Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things," is sufficient. We know he has abundant resources in the hearts of those who love him upon which he can draw for all our needs. Our hearts are also filled with a new hope that the better understanding, the happier relations between the two nations we so dearly love, for which we have so constantly pled and prayed, is to be furthered by this overwhelming tragedy.

Surely the dead that lie by the thousands still unburied amid the ruins of these stricken cities, the multitudes more of homeless ones, the sick and maimed who will drop beside them during the suffering of this coming winter, will hush the spirit of suspicion and hatred and awaken the nations to a new attitude of sympathy and helpfulness. All those innocent ones—the gentle, kindly women, the sweet little children, will not have died in vain, for a new "brotherhood that binds across the seas" will be their memorial.

We cannot write more now. We cannot yet tell when we go or what we shall do—but in this greatest test that we have ever faced we count on your cooperation. As ever yours in service.

HENRY AND GENEVIEVE TOPPING.

C/o C. B. Tenney,
29 Sanai Cho, Ushigome, Tokyo.

Rankin Christian Center

BY W. C. CHAPPELL

The new Christian Center at Rankin, Pa., was dedicated Sunday, Oct. 7, but the program in connection with the dedication extended over a week.

The Woman's Missionary Union of the Association had over 300 present at the all-day meeting, Thursday, Oct. 4. Several hundred dollars was raised to complete the fund of $1,000 for furnishing the chapel in honor of the retiring president, Mrs. J. A. Lichty.

Seventy sat down to a dinner on directors' night, Oct. 5. A short program followed, with Dr. A. J. Bonsall as toastmaster. Mr. W. Porter Beck spoke for the building committee, in the absence of the chairman, J. H. Stauff, and turned the keys over to the president of the board who presented them to Mr. H. Bainbridge, chairman of the board of direction, who gave a concise statement interpreting the mission of the center. Mrs. C. A. Brooks, representative of the Woman's Home Mission Society, brought the greetings of her board and spoke on the spirit back of the work of the center. Dr. H. W. Ewalt, chairman of the furnishings committee, reported that over $3,000 has been given by various churches and groups toward the furnishings. Mr. J. A. Brown, treasurer, reported on the financial situation with respect to the building. Rev. J. M. Hestenes represented the Home Mission Society. Miss Adams, director of the center was introduced and responded happily. The chairman, Dr. A. J. Bonsall, introduced a surprise when he handed to the treasurer a check from Mrs. F. J. Torrance, a member of the Sandusky Street Church, for $5,000. This is the second gift of $5,000 for the center, the first one being given by the late H. K. Porter.

The dedication service was held Sunday afternoon in the chapel. Dr. A. J. Bonsall presided. Rev. N. J. Mecklem offered the invocation and Rev. C. E. Griffin read the scripture lesson. The congregation rose and joined Doctor Bonsall in the responsive service of dedication, and Rev. C. W. Petty offered the dedication prayer. Dr. C. A. Brooks, of the Home Mission Society delivered the address, "The Religion of the Christian Center," a masterly presentation. Mrs. John Nuveen, of Chicago, who was president of the Woman's Home Mission Society when the appropriation was made for the center and who did much to encourage the enterprise, and Mrs. Jennings, recording secretary of the Woman's Baptist Home Mission Society were introduced and spoke very briefly.

THE OLD BUILDING

The volunteer workers' dinner, given Monday evening with thirty present was served by the ladies of the Wilkinsburg church.

On Wednesday evening a reception was given to the officials of the Rankin public school and representatives of local organizations. About 150 were present. The guests were shown through the center by Boy Scouts and members of the Girls' Club. Mr. Chappell made a brief statement as to the background of the building of the center and its spirit and purpose. Dr. J. A. Alexander represented the Council of Churches and congratulated the community on having the center. Professor Wilson, superintendent of the Rankin Schools and Burgess Clevely spoke on behalf of the community. A pleasant feature of the evening was the presence of Miss Lyde Jenkins and Mrs. Amelia Pauliniy, two of the first missionaries on the Rankin field.

The Rankin Center covers a space 120 by 72 feet. It consists of three sections —chapel, gymnasium and educational, all of brick construction. The basement contains separate shower baths and locker rooms for men and women, public laundry, boys' manual training and Boy Scout room, store room and furnace room. The first floor of the education unit has a big lobby and office, library, public health rooms, day nursery, kindergarten and kitchen. The second floor has a club room, domestic science and manual training room for girls and kitchen, woman's club room and two music rooms. The third floor has seven rooms and bath and is for the resident woman workers. There are four bedrooms, sitting room, dining room and kitchen.

The gymnasium is standard size and contains no pillars. The gallery will seat easily 200 persons. It is equipped with moving picture booth and will be used for large gatherings. The chapel connects directly with the lobby, will seat 250, is ecclesiastical in design and in every way suggestive of devotion and worship.

The staff consists of Miss Luella Adams, director and worker with young women; Miss E. May Hill, supervisor of children's work; Fred Barclay, supervisor of men and boys' work; Miss Laura Hill, residence supervisor and librarian; and Miss Margaret Lauter, a visiting nurse of the District Nursing Association. It is planned to add a kindergarten and day nursery supervisor soon. A strong staff of volunteer workers is being carried over from the old work.

Preaching service will be held every Sunday evening in the chapel. The community is greatly interested in the center and full cooperation of various organizations and groups has been pledged.

Toronto Baptists

By Fred S. Shepard

At New Years the Baptist Sunday schools of Toronto made an offering of $10,000 to pay off the indebtedness on the Royce Avenue Mission where one of the Polish Baptist Sunday schools of the city meets.

The Memorial Institute, which carries on a great work among the Polish people, has added an orchestra to its Sunday-school equipment. The orchestra is the outcome of a branch of the Toronto Conservatory of Music held in connection with the institute, in which the enrolment stands at 110 with a teaching staff of 11. Lessons are given in violin, piano, vocal and rudiments of music and a small class of children of six and seven years of age are being started in ear-training.

The Ossington Avenue men's Bible class holds an annual adult banquet; this year there was an attendance of over 300 guests.

The Beverely Street school recently held a mother-and-daughter banquet, with Miss Whidden, director of girls' work, as the special speaker.

The newly dedicated Mimico church, though not large, has made due provision for its Sunday-school work, generous primary and Bible class rooms having been included in its arrangement.

The Crowning of Anna Kay Scott

By Thomas Gardner Field

Born in Payson, Ill., April 20, 1838, died in Granville, Ohio, Oct. 18, 1923, states the measure of one of the noblest earthly lives. Anna Kay Scott's parents came from Virginia and were constituent members of the Payson Baptist Church. She graduated from Payson Academy. After teaching school in Columbus and Quincy, Ill., she entered Phipps Union Seminary, Albion, N. Y. She was married in 1861 to Edward Payson Scott and went with him to Assam. She studied Greek en route, and later taught in the normal school where six languages were spoken.

Mr. Scott died in 1869 but Mrs. Scott kept on until 1873 when she returned to America, graduated from the Western Reserve Medical School in Cleveland and practiced medicine there to support her family. In 1889 she went to China, established a hospital and became a worthy co-laborer with the Ashmores in building up one of our finest mission stations. The infirmities of age compelled her retirement in 1914. For the past year she has been living with her daughter, Mrs. George H. Waters, on furlough from Swatow. Two sons also survive her, Ernest K. Scott of Los Angeles, and Edward Payson Scott of Chicago, Ill.

As an American pioneer, biblical believer, student and translator, devoted wife and mother, heroic herald of Christ, skilled healer of body and soul, we praise God for her gifts and splendid service, and reverently lay the fairest laurels of our love and honor upon her shining memory.

Churches everywhere successfully raise money for budgets, pledges, etc., clearing net profit of $50 to $500. Easy to sell. Big profits. An article for church sale that has no equal. Every family needs one and buys on merit as well as the desire to help the church.

Kalamazoo, Michigan, North Presbyterian Church, says: "Our treasurer sent for one hundred calendars which were sold before they arrived. Afterwards sent for two hundred more which were sold quickly, and we are closing our year with a good amount of money in our treasury which we could not have had if we had not sold your beautiful calendars."

SANFORD: THE WORK began with a rush this fall. Rally Day was a record day so far as attendance and interest were concerned. The men's class and the laymen had charge of the evening service and an address was given by Rev. Mr. Mossman, of Alfred. For aggressive Christian work and attainment, this is one of the brightest spots in the state.

LARGE CONGREGATIONS ATTEND the ministry of Rev. J. H. Thompson at the First Church, Portland. Every department of the work is moving forward. The Portland churches made large preparations for the Loyalty Lunch and the Bible and Missionary Conference that convened Nov. 1-2.

RANGELEY: THE REPAIRS in the church building have been extensive and will provide better equipment for Sunday school and social work. Pastor W. H. Johnson and his people welcomed the Farmington Association at its quarterly meeting, Oct. 16. Among the speakers were Doctor Hamlen, Pastor Johnson of Phillips, Pastor Freeman of Livermore Falls, Mrs. Lorimer of Portland, Doctor Whittemore, and Rev. B. H. Thomas of Washburn.

THE BOWDOINHAM ASSOCIATION met at Bowdoinham for its quarterly meeting, Oct. 16. Three churches formed the original Bowdoinham Association: Thomaston, Harpswell, and Bowdoinham. The present association numbers twenty-one churches. The program for the day was varied, an annual feature being the story by Doctor Mower of his attendance at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm, and of other experiences in Europe.

THE LINCOLN ASSOCIATION convened with the church in Tenant's Harbor for its quarterly meeting Oct. 9. Director Knollin made his first visit to the association.

REV. G. L. MICHELSON, for two years pastor of the Calvary Church, Salem, accepted the call of the Waverly Church, succeeding Dr. T. R. Peede, who for ten years ably led the church there. Doctor Peede's has been a building ministry and leaves the forces there admirably organized and in good condition.

BELMONT STREET CHURCH, Watertown, on Sunday, Oct. 15, laid the cornerstone of the first unit of its imposing colonial edifice which it plans to build. They are a courageous and self-sacrificing people, just the sort that it is a privilege to help.

Building for the Future

The American Baptist Home Mission Society assists through State Conventions and City Mission Societies in cooperative mission work until such work can be made self-supporting. This process toward self-support it hastens by special advice and plans.

It assists in improving great opportunities in all its departments. It aids in the day of storm, of stress and of disaster. It stabilizes work which otherwise would be sporadic and insecure. It has an intercommunity and interstate outreach.

The Work of the Society is interstate with Conventions, interracial with City Mission Societies, intertribal with Indians, and interlocking with the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society. Its outreach is international in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica. Its contacts in missionary education are intercontinental.

The Society plans beyond the temporary needs of a year. Its plans and policies are shaped both for the year and long future. Its legions of supporters are urged to pray daily that the missionaries and officers may have the vision and faith to meet every contingency in missionary undertakings and that new friends and adequate funds may be provided.

A "REVELL" BOOK---Ask for It!

Strategically the new church will be planted just on the edge of Cambridge, Watertown, Waverly and Belmont. All roads run to it. Fortunate they are in having, at this period in their history, such a minister as Dr. O. J. White. Accustomed to large propositions and expectations, he is the leader to guide them in the inevitable expansion that fast growing population will bring to them.

Rev. A. J. Hughes, pastor at Needham, has been the victim of a serious automobile accident which may retire him from active service for some time. He had prayerfully planned his work for the winter and taken the initial steps toward a special work of revival.

Dr. Charles A. Reese, well-known veteran in the New England ministry, is spending the season in Boston and vicinity. His valuable service to the seminary at Newton is well and gratefully remembered.

The Boston Baptist ministers resolved themselves into an "experience meeting" on the fifteenth. "How I Prepare My Sermons" was the opener of a supposedly professional process, and under the smiling leadership of Doctor Lindsay of Brookline, several of the brethren "made a clean breast" of that matter. It was an unusually free, enjoyable and flexible hour. The audience was limbering up so fully that had the session been further prolonged, it might have confirmed the feigned suspicion of some of the facetious laymen that ministers' conferences were for the "swapping of sermons." Doubtless the successful experiments of the experience meeting will be repeated.

The First Church, Leominster, has been having a sort of public celebration: The eighth anniversary of the coming of Pastor W. F. Meyer, and the opening of its new $20,000 workshop, which is perfectly adapted to all the beehive features of that working church and minister, and all paid for. Pastor Meyer followed a master workman when he came, George R. Baker, but he has so carried on that the church has become a distinct force in the city. There has been large increase in membership, in benevolence, in constructive Christian teaching and work. Many of the young people are in training for Christian work.

The October meeting of the Boston Workers' Union was bigger than ever—310 in attendance, 278 at the supper. Over fifty churches were represented. It is study and work that attracts, under leadership to be proud of. It begins to look as if the work would grow into a permanent Baptist institution, with 500 busy teachers and leaders. It is a sort of Ocean Park extension the year round, with Doctor Peterson guiding and developing.

Rev. Ralph B. Davis resigned at North Grafton after three years' service to accept the call of the church at Foxboro. He goes to a good field, and a larger opportunity.

NEW YORK

Everett W. Chapman was ordained at Woodhull, Oct. 5. Rev. W. H. Brown of Bath was moderator and Rev. Geo. A. Orton of Savona, clerk. Rev. E. A. Snyder of Painted Post delivered the sermon.

On Oct. 10 the Lake Avenue Church tendered Doctor and Mrs. Beaven and Mrs. Montgomery a reception. During the summer the work of the church was in charge of Rev. S. W. Beaven, father of the pastor.

The Second Avenue Church has started its fall work with the hope and expectation that this will be the greatest year of its existence as a mission church. The auditorium was crowded on Rally Day with the largest Sunday-school attendance in years. On Friday, Oct. 12, forty workers enjoyed a "get together supper." The church is united in the task of ministering to a needy people. Mr. Hosie is the leader in the field of religious education. The neighborhood and girls' work is carried on by Miss Wright and Miss Noyes. Each congregation has a pastor devoted to its welfare and success. The Second Avenue Church is doing its part to make New York City a better place for men, women and children to call home. Archibald Alexander Forshel is the minister in charge.

NEW JERSEY

The Young People's Federation of Baptist churches of the North Association recently held a meeting with the church at Bloomingdale. There were 350 in attendance. Doctor Dockerell of Ossing, N. Y., gave an address.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The one hundred and third anniversary of the Northumberland Association was held with Erie Ave. Church, Williamsport. Moderator S. W. Heller presided. The meetings were well attended and charged with a fine spirit of enthusiasm and spirituality. A note of courage and hope was sounded in all the letters. Total number of baptisms for the year was 32, a gain of 121 over the year before. Interest in the New World Movement was shown by increased giving of $6,000 over the last year. Dr. F. P. Lynch of Congo, spoke on his work in Africa at the women's missionary societies' session. The laymen's banquet was held in the First Church, the moderator acting as toast-master. After the inner man was satisfied, the 201 men listened to Dr. O. C. Horsman, Erie, Pa. on the subject of "The Unity of the Faith." Secretaries W. G. Russell and C. A. Soars presented the work of their departments. Sermons were preached by Dr. A. J. Irey; Dr. T. C. Hanna, the introductory sermon; Dr. C. S. Savage, acting pastor of the First Church, Williamsport, the doctrinal sermon on "The Doctrine of God as Holy Spirit;" Dr. O. C. Horsman brought the evening session to a close with a sermon based on Hebrews 6:1. A symposium on "The Local Church" with Rev. V. L. Shontz as leader, was of interest and value. Rev. Theo. ### MICHIGAN

SUNDAY, OCT. 21, Rev. T. J. Hopkins presented his resignation as pastor of the Adrian Church, to accept the unanimous call of the Tenth Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Hopkins will begin his new work Nov. 18. The Tenth Avenue Church is located in the university area of Columbus and ministers not alone to that section of the city, but to its quota of the several hundred Baptist students attending the university. The church administers the Francis Wayland Foundation for the assistance of students. Mr. Hopkins labored with the Adrian Church for five years and under his leadership much was accomplished.

THE FIRST CHURCH, PONTIAC, Rev. C. S. Knight, pastor, will be represented in the Belgium Congo by Mr. and Mrs. Albaugh, who have been teaching in a Southern Baptist college. Their work in Africa will be teaching and evangelistic.

FIFTEEN STATES, CANADA, Hawaii, Japan, China and Bulgaria are represented in the student body of Hillsdale College this year. Jackson ranks next to Hillsdale in the number of enrolled students.

MOST INTERESTING WAS THE CELEBRATION of the thirtieth anniversary and homecoming of former members of the Broadway Church, Bay City, E. R. Allen pastor. Rev. B. H. Thomas, for many years pastor, preached the Sunday morning sermon, while the evening was given over to short addresses by representatives from the several departments, and Pastor Allen. Monday evening, Father Rooney, pastor for forty-two years when the church was known as the Fremont Avenue Church of Portsmouth (as the South end of Bay City was then called) related experiences of those long-ago days. Quite extensive improvements have been made on the building, expenses for which have been provided for, and there is a bright outlook for the future work of the church. Pastor Allen has been on the field for two years.

THE FIRST CHURCH, PORT HURON, J. H. Vatcher pastor, has adopted a definite program which takes account of local needs and also keeps before its members the great denominational activities. The women are awake to the financial needs and paid $1,000 toward the parsonage debt. This church has the best organized graded work in the city in its junior and intermediate departments in the Sunday school.

PASTOR J. R. STEVENS is meeting with success in his work at Sparta. The field has been canvassed; the church has adopted the program—with changes to meet the local needs—put out by the Northern Baptist Convention; parsonage has been repaired and made attractive; a class of young people meet one hour before prayer meeting for mission and denominational study; stewardship and evangelism are being emphasized, and the 100 new chairs purchased by the women for the prayer-meeting room are rapidly filling up each week.

FIRST CHURCH, MUSKEGON, John R. Estes pastor, has five classes enrolled in its school of missions, including one in story telling for the children. The class books used are "The Debt Eternal" for adults and "For a New America" for the young people. Eighteen new members have been received into the church since the pastor returned from his vacation.

OHIO

ONE OF THE GOALS of the Market Street Church, Zanesville, is one young person in a Christian college for every 100 members. Seventeen of these young folks were given a reception by the young people's society. The educational work of the church is receiving special attention. A teacher-training class has an enrolment of twenty. Mrs. Preston H. Sweet of Benton Harbor, Mich., has been secured as secretary to the pastor, A. Stokes Watson. About $400 was contributed for the Japanese relief.

Columbus

Doctor Rittenhouse, pastor of the First Church, is speaking to the largest congregations in the history of the church, and through the radio is reaching a large number of shut-ins and many outside the city. Thirty new members have been received since the opening of the church the middle of September.

On Oct. 13 the Social Union gave a dinner to Dr. Geo. B. Cutten, president of Colgate University, Mrs. Cutten and the Colgate football team. Arrangements were under the direction of Mr. A. J. Goddard, president of the union. On the following Sunday morning a large audience greeted Doctor Cutten as he spoke from his old pulpit in the First Church.

Rev. Chas. Bebb, pastor of the Hibbard Avenue Church, is in the midst of a building enterprise. Six rooms are being added to the church edifice. Mr. Bebb is entering upon the fifth year of his pastorate in the field. Both pastor and people are encouraged over the outlook.

Rev. R. M. Jones, the new pastor at the South High Church, is finding a promising field opening before him.

The work at the Hillcrest Church is progressing. Its new building will be ready for occupancy about Jan. 1.

Rev. V. P. Powell of the Linden Church is in the midst of a three weeks' special evangelistic campaign.

A matter of interest to all denominations in the city is the coming of G. Campbell Morgan for two weeks, beginning Sunday, Nov. 4. Doctor Morgan has been secured through the efforts of the Columbus Council of Churches. It is hoped that a foundation will be laid by him for an aggressive evangelical campaign in all the denominations some time during the coming season.

INDIANA

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Indianapolis, was held Oct. 8. During the past year the receipts and disbursements of the church in connection with current expenses and benevolences amounted to almost $100,000, the total offerings of the Bible school aggregated over $6,000, the average attendance of the Bible school was 670, and 100 new members were added making the church membership 1,924. The annual Rally Day service of the Bible school was held Oct. 14. The attendance was 905 and the offering $176.

Des Moines Bible and Missionary Conference

At a final meeting of delegates held in Des Moines, Oct. 16, a general committee was elected as follows: Pres. John W. Million, chairman; Rev. Edgar A. Valient, conference secretary; prayer, Prof. S. P. Fogdall; publicity, Ed. O'Dea; registration, I. J. Ketman; deputation, Phillip Nelson; entertainment, Mrs. Ward Allison; house, J. B. Brinsmaid; luncheon and banquets, Mrs. E. F. Goodsell; booster, William Goodell. Each of these committees has a representative from the different Baptist churches of Des Moines. Weekly meetings have been decided upon, and a spirit of cooperation seems to prevail. Rev. Edgar A. Valient, conference secretary, has opened an office at Baptist headquarters, Valley National Bank Building, and has met a hearty response from Baptists and friends of the city. The general outlook for the conference which meets in Des Moines Nov. 12-14 is promising. A goal has been set for 1000 delegates in attendance. The speakers are announced as follows: Rev. D. J. Evans, Kansas City Mo.; Mrs. Orrin R. Judd, New York; Rev. Wm. E. Chalmers, Philadelphia; Doctor and Mrs. Manley; R. O. Jasperson, New York City. The outline of the program will consist chiefly of the following: Bible exposition, missionary presentation, the denomination — past, present and future. # Does It End With Death?

Does Stewardship stop with the end of life? No, because you are responsible for what happens to your possessions after your departure.

Your will is your last opportunity to discharge your obligation of stewardship.

> "Ownership of property carries with it a moral obligation, not only to properly administer God's bounties during life, but also to prepare for their wise distribution after death."

The national, state and city organization are the recognized agents through which Northern Baptists are conducting evangelistic, medical, industrial and educational work at home and abroad. Legacies provide one of their important sources of income.

THE WATERTOWN AND EAST MOLINE CHURCHES united for special evangelistic services. Rev. J. M. Jones, pastor of the East Moline Church, was assisted by L. D. Lamkin. As a result there were thirty-five additions to the membership of the East Moline Church and five to the Watertown Church.

Opening of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago

The consecration service at the opening of the autumn quarter of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago on Tuesday, Oct. 2, found Haskell Hall crowded to capacity with students and faculty. It was no ordinary assembly. A stranger entering must have felt that here was a group of men and women who took themselves and their task seriously—so seriously that they were not willing to undertake it unless more than human resources were available for their equipment.

Dean Shailer Mathews presided, led the devotions, and spoke briefly of the aims and purposes of the school. President Burton paid an impressive tribute to the place of the Divinity School in the university and the Christian church. Prof. H. H. Walker brought greetings from the Chicago Theological Seminary, which was meeting in a like manner at the same hour. A memorable address was given by Prof. J. M. P. Smith on "The Church and Education." A consecration message and prayer by Prof. T. G. Soares, chaplain of the university and head of the department of practical theology, closed the service.

The present enrolment for the autumn quarter is 122. As usual, a large number of missionaries are studying at the Divinity School. The apartments for the divinity students are filled and many others could be filled if such were available.

Doctor Mathews announced the appointment of Rev. C. T. Holman as assistant professor of pastoral duties and extension secretary, as part of the plan to give increasing attention to supervision of the practical work of the students and to bring the Divinity School into closer contact with the churches.

Altogether the autumn quarter opens with heartening prospects for a splendid year's work.

Woman's Mission Society

The Woman's Mission Society of Illinois held its first session Monday evening, Oct. 15, in Oak Park Church, Oak Park, Ill., with Mrs. W. P. Topping, president, presiding. The conference period carried out the theme: "Victory"—"Through our Children," by Mrs. E. S. Osgood, who reported a 25 per cent increase for the C. W. C. the past year—thirty-seven new organizations, the goal $300 was exceeded and $1,020 was raised; "Through our Young Women," by Miss Stickney, who reported eighteen new guilds, and splendid work done by W. W. G.'s along all lines; "Through our College Girls," by Mrs. C. H. Chandler, who said that too few Baptist girls were registered in colleges in proportion to girls of other denominations. At the joint session of pastors' conference and woman's society, Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery spoke, stressing the needs and personal responsibility.

The Tuesday morning session was held in First Congregational Church House, Oak Park. Mrs. W. C. Rutherford, Rockford, gave annual record of activities of the state board, saying, "The spirit of Christian fellowship, love, and comradery among the state officers and board members has been unusually sweet—this spirit has seemed to permeate the entire body of women in the state." The greatest need—a woman worker for Central and Southern Illinois—is still unrealized. The "might boxes," proved their "mightiness," and will be used again. Forming of prayer groups and use of the cycle of prayer were urged. The board sent Mrs. W. P. Topping to the Central District Meeting at St. Louis, Mo., and the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City, N. J., with expenses paid. The Morgan Park Church paid the expenses of Miss Alice Brimson on a trip through Southern Illinois to interest churches in Christian Americanization. The Illinois "love gift plan" to bring money into the depleted treasury during the dull summer months was carried out, and met with fair response. Missionary posters sent from churches, and shown at Central District Meeting and the Northern Baptist Convention, were among the innovations of the year. The state convention board gave the women of the state $750 to carry on their work. Mrs. Benbrook, treasurer, gave annual record of finances—$315.12 on hand. Annual record of "victories" of the different departments were reported by the chairman of each department. Mrs. S. Schiele, state secretary-director, reported thirteen new circles organized during the year; and each of the nineteen associations having had the faithful service of a secretary-director. We are indebted to these volunteer workers for the progress made. The goals have not all been reached, but there is a deepening of the spiritual life, a realization of the need of closer cooperation. Mrs. Northrup reported sixteen associations as having done white cross work. "Through Christian Americanization," by Mrs. R. S. Knapp; reported seven associations as having carried on some work and volunteers in many localities. "Through Missionary Education," by Mrs. C. W. Peterson; reporting a year of progress in missionary education. "Through Reading Contest" by Mrs. E. W. Sundell who said "exceeded goals set in both the number of readers and in points gained. Rock Island Church won the Loving Cup." "Through Extension and Literature," by Mrs. J. D. Lounderback; who said that literature is in demand as never before.

Our president in her message said: "We are expecting to be victorious and "with God we can." One great achievement was the full payment for our Baptist share for the colleges of the Orient. Our associations are all officered, and with few exceptions, committee chairmen are working. All officers of the past year were re-elected. The C. W. C. under the direction of Mrs. E. S. Osgood, staged a play—the scene laid in Japan, which was much enjoyed. After a closing prayer, all adjourned to the Loyalty banquet which was served in the First Baptist Church of Austin. Between 300 and 400 women enjoyed this feast of good things. At the close of the banquet Mrs. Topping, who has served faithfully as president for the past ten years, was presented by the women of the state with a picture of "Christ and the Fishermen."

Dr. Thomas J. Villers of the White Temple, Portland, is a member of the committee that is holding Bible and missionary conferences in ten western cities. At the recent annual meeting of the church it was announced that 190 new members had been received within the year. Floy T. Barkman, of San Diego, had charge of the devotional exercises. W. F. Harper, Franklin Day, J. D. Springston of Los Angeles, and C. H. Tilden, missionary to Assam, delivered the principal addresses. F. L. Blowers, of National City, preached the annual sermon. The address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. Anna Mullille. Another Letter to Preachers on Moving Pictures—

We told you in a recent letter of our desire to cooperate with you in making moving pictures a real factor in the success of your church. Many have accepted our offer. We know some of you however are still in the "almost persuaded" class.

Let's consider this matter from your personal point of view. What can moving pictures in your church do for you? Surely you have a right to ask this question and get an answer.

First, moving pictures will increase the range and the effectiveness of your public ministry, both in devotional and evangelistic services. You can attract larger audiences and make a deeper and more lasting impression for good.

Second, moving pictures will make it possible for you to start a real social and cultural center in your community. Their judicious use in educational entertainments will bring adults and children alike into the church, and make you the natural leader in a broader civic development.

These advantages to you mean not only the greater success of your ministry, but the fuller success of the church you serve. And there are many advantages to the various departments of church activity not even referred to above.

To grasp these opportunities, you need first the projection equipment. It is sufficient here to point out that the Acme S. V. E. is the ideal church projector because the same machine is easily available for use in any part of the church before any size audience; it is both a moving picture projector and a stereopticon; and it has the exclusive gold glass shutter making it possible to stop anywhere on a film and show a still picture. We can go into these details fully with you at the proper time, also into the matter of film supply, financing your equipment, etc.

All we want to know now, however, is that you appreciate the advantages to you and to the church of having moving pictures in your church. Send the coupon below. It carries no obligation.

Jefferson's play room is one of the largest, with a playing floor of 40 by 80 feet and a clearance of 22 feet. I have THE BAPTIST bound—perhaps the only preacher of the country who has treasures of this kind and in this form. The copy in question reached me all right but a brother in the city took a fancy to it, and asked me to let him have it and my generous nature could not deny him." We shall be glad at any time to replenish your files for a similar reason. ports showed a total of $40,975 raised for all purposes and of this sum $15,860 was for misisons and benevolences.

Rev. William H. Geistweit, pastor of the First Church, Dayton, Ohio, is preaching a series of sermons on the general theme "The Great Fundamentals," the first of which is upon the topic What is Christianity? What are its boundaries? Can we follow Christ? Dare we undertake it? Is there a better religion? What is sin? The answer of science; the answer of experience; the answer of the Book; the answer of the heart. Can the world be redeemed? Does it need redemption? Is education sufficient? Is there a power not of ourselves? What is the personal relation? Is the church sufficient? What is its mission? What should be its message? What should be its character? Should I belong to it?

It does one good to receive a report like that from the church at Delavan, Wis. It gives in summarized form the report of the work for the past year and outlines the goals of the church, its deacons, trustees, Bible school, women's auxiliary, missionary society and guilds. Not only does this church outline a program, with worthy objectives, but it puts them into effect. The pastor, Robert Lincoln Kelley, has begun his seventh year. The year he came to the field the church raised for current expenses $2,361; for missions $1,901, a total of $4,262. From Oct. 1, 1922, to Sept. 30 of this year the church raised for current expenses $5,732 and for missions $3,314, a total of $9,046. We should like to print the program in full for it shows clearly what can be done by a church that is in an essentially rural community. During the period of the present pastorate 191 new members have been received.

The centennial anniversary of the Washington Heights Church, New York City, was celebrated Oct. 3 by a banquet at which more than 300 people were present. Thomas Dixon, author of the "Birth of a Nation," who was pastor of the church 1889-1895, acted as toastmaster. A talk was given by Judge Edward F. Clinch who, over seventy years ago, was a member of the Bible school of the old Stanton Street Church from which the Washington Heights Church traces its origin. The speakers were Joseph Fort Newton, Charles Malcolm Douglass, John McNeill, Arthur C. Malm and Harold Pattison, the pastor. Letters were read from Charles Evans Hughes, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Cornelius Woelfkin, Rufus P. Johnston and J. L. Campbell. Sunday morning, Oct. 7, the sermon was preached by Henry Orne Hiscox who was pastor of the church from 1881-1884 and whose father, E. T. Hiscox, was pastor from 1852-1866.

Doctor E. T. Tomlinson writes that by a vote of the General Board of Promotion specific Sundays have been recommended for the consideration of special phases of our denominational work. Thanksgiving fell to the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board with the thought that on the Sunday preceding Thanksgiving, Nov. 25, sermons will be preached, and that Sunday schools, young peoples' societies, brotherhoods and other bodies of the local church will give special recognition to the provision which the denomination is making for its aged ministers and missionaries, their widows and dependent orphaned children. If it is not possible for the pastor to preach on that subject he may at least call the attention of his people to the opportunities presented. If special literature is desired it will be promptly provided by the board. This plan is a new departure for the board and it is hopeful that recognition of the work it is doing will be general and generous. All gifts should be designated and sent through the General Board of Promotion.

Christian Civilization—Is It Christian!

After Nineteen Hundred Years Has Christianity Seriously Modified the Pagan Character of Human Society?

This question was put to a group of the most influential social students in the American church, all of them leaders and close advisors of the various social service movements in all the denominations and the Federal Council of Churches. Among them are:

Bishop Francis J. McConnell,
F. Ernest Johnson,
Charles A. Ellwood,
Alva W. Taylor,
Harry F. Ward,
Samuel Z. Batten,
Ross L. Finney,
Albion W. Small,
Arthur E. Holt,
Herbert H. Shenton,
Edward Alsworth Ross

¶ They divided the problem into many pieces, each taking one piece to investigate.

¶ Their answer is an amazing revelation!

¶ In a series of articles they declare with surprising unanimity that the industry, the economics, the politics, our nationalist conceptions and practices and the international relations of our so called Christian civilization are based upon and shot through and through with utterly pagan implications.

¶ Our workaday life and our public life have not yet seriously felt the influence of the mind of Jesus. On the contrary, a society dominated by Christian men is found to be governed by rules which are non-Christian, anti-Christian, flagrantly pagan.

¶ If these pagan rules and principles remain unrevolutionized, says Professor Albion W. Small, "the goodly fellowship of the Apostles could not operate our present industrial system and make its workings just."

¶ These churchmen agree that it is vain to ask men to be Christians in industry or politics and at the same time accept pagan ideals, motives and methods as their rules of action.

¶ No such concerted analysis of the moral character of our social order has ever before been attempted in the light of the mind of Christ. The position of leadership held by the writers—officials in the social service organizations and close counselors of officials—make their articles an authentic expression of the slowly forming

Social Conscience of the Modern Church

¶ These articles will appear in successive issues of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY beginning shortly.

¶ Thoughtful leaders, lay and clerical, inside and outside the churches, will wish to follow this epoch marking discussion.

Dear Sirs:-

Your Mr. Little has spent several days working faithfully upon our "Edwin Nelson Memorial Chimes" and the results are most pleasing to all of us. Mrs. Nelson and I are most enthusiastic. Our musical director, who is conductor of the strongest male chorus in the entire south, in addition to his work with us, and who was chime ringer for one of the best sets of bells in the middle west for many years, says that he has never heard such beautiful quality of tone in any other chimes, bells or tubes, as is now produced on our set. During the testing yesterday a number of musical people stopped their cars to listen and to give most hearty expression to their commendation of the music produced by them.

We wish to thank you sincerely for what you have done to give us the best chimes in the entire south, and many say, the best toned in the entire country.

Very truly yours,

W. H. Neill

DEAGAN Tower Chimes have revolutionized Chime building. They are electrically played—no tugging at ropes. Your organist plays rich melody on them and blends chime music into the services.

Daily use of chimes brings a spiritual awakening that means much to the prosperity of your church. They are truly a Memorial Sublime which lives through generations to come and for all time perpetuates the memory of both the donor and the loved one in whose memory and honor they are placed.

Deagan Chimes are superbly musical, stately, dignified, perfectly tuned and flawless in pitch. They are a blessing on the entire community.

Our Prayer

HOLY Father, thou hast given us all that makes life sweet and inspiring. We thank thee for life and health, and for the proper vocations to which we have been called. But with these other blessings we also rank the bestowal of those whose love has been our chief aid in the work of years, and whose inspiration has made possible the best things we have been able to do. Make us worthy of their companionship and trust. Bless our efforts to make life beautiful for their sakes.

Fresh from the Field

The First Church, Reading, Mass., has called to its pastorate Rev. Wesley G. Huber, who succeeds Rev. Frank M. Holt.

At a recent meeting of the Knights of Columbus in Montreal it was found that there was a falling off in the membership of the order. This condition is causing some concern in Roman Catholic circles where the order is considered one of its more powerful agencies.

For the convenience of those who like to have their Sunday morning sleep instead of getting out to early morning Bible classes the Radio Corporation of America will broadcast the Sunday-school lesson on Sunday afternoon, securing some well-known Bible teacher for that service.

The "Challenge of the Chaplaincy" appearing in this issue of THE BAPTIST will probably prove a challenge to some of our ministers. Such should get in touch with Chaplain E. W. Scott, Chaplain Corps, U. S. Navy, Bureau of Navigation, Washington, D. C.

Rev. William T. Dorward closed a successful interim ministry with the First Church, Madison, Wis., Oct. 28. It began last June. The evening attendance was greater than the morning at the Sunday services. The church is united and happily looks forward to a great work with the new pastor, Rev. Norman P. Henderson, late of Minneapolis, Minn. He began his work Nov. 4 and was cordially welcomed at both the Sunday services. Rev. W. T. Dorward will be available for similar interim pastoral work and may be addressed at 325 Chambers Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

In tendering his resignation of the pastorate of the Second Church, Atlanta, Dr. H. A. Porter spoke in part as follows: "The ties which bind me to this church and congregation are peculiarly strong and tender. There could be no more beautiful harmony in our relation, as pastor and people. I could not be more happily situated. A church more generous and responsive and richer in personality, a city of more attractive quality, friends more loyal or of finer texture of character, can hardly be imagined. My hope and thought have been that I would continue to enjoy these blessings for many years. As you know, I have been called to the Third Church of St. Louis. St. Louis cannot offer me a more desirable city than Atlanta, the Third Church cannot offer me more devotion and unwavering fidelity than you have given me. But my conviction is that there has been opened to me a door to more effectual service and that it is my duty to enter. I have not arrived at this conclusion hastily. I have taken time to weigh the question. I have earnestly sought guidance of God, and believe that I am moving along the line of his will. Therefore, I am today accepting the call of the St. Louis church." Doctor Porter begins his new pastorate Nov. 15.

The new parish house of the First Church, Leominster, Mass., was dedicated Oct. 22.

The First Church, Oakland, Cal., has secured E. A. Fridell as director of religious education and assistant to Dr. John Snape.

Rev. Ralph H. Rogers has begun his work as director of religious education in Rhode Island. Mr. Rogers is well prepared for this important piece of work.

In a letter from Barranquitas, Porto Rico, signed by Vidal Colon pastor and Carmen Colon clerk of the Baptist church, attention is called to the need for little presents for the Christmas time. The church will see that any presents are carefully distributed and such a ministry will help the church and add cheer to many homes.

The "Baptist Banner," West Virginia's state paper, recently published an unusual souvenir number. It contained fifty pages and gave a very full account of the progress of Baptists in that state. The large number of pages of advertising showed good enterprise upon the part of the management of the paper.

Rev. Frank E. Eden, chairman of the publicity committee of the Baptist Young People's Convention at Denver, July, 1924, says: "Already big strides have been made by the Denver Committee for a wonderful convention in 1924. Last week the cabinet met and appointed the various committees who are at work planning the big event. The city auditorium which was used during the Northern Baptist Convention will be the place of this mammoth convention. The contract has already been secured and signed by the city authorities. Everybody is enthusiastic about the coming of the young people to the "Queen of the West." Arrangements have been made with a big and safe transportation for sight-seeing through the Rockies. An inspiring program is being prepared. Make your plans for the biggest B. Y. P. U. convention at Denver, 1924."

Dr. J. S. Kirtley closed his services as acting pastor of the Third Church. St. Louis, on Sunday, Oct. 14, 1923, thus concluding seven and one-half months of service. The church reports that its work went on without interruption to the close. Near the beginning, as a result of the meetings conducted by Dr. M. E. Dodd, of the First Church, Shreveport, La., sixty-six were received by baptism, thirty-two by letter and seventeen by relation. In addition to these, Doctor Kirtley baptized forty, received fifty-seven by letter and twenty-two by relation. The church life in all of its departments was quickened and well prepared for the coming of a regular pastor, thus making this summer one of unusual fruitfulness. He came to the Third Church from a similar service at the First Church, Dayton, Ohio, and goes to the Church of the Master, Cleveland, Ohio, whose call hastened his leaving St. Louis earlier than he otherwise would have gone.

And They Forgot the Editors

Have you seen the 1924 "Book of Remembrance?" It is a wonderful compendium of information concerning our varied work and valued workers. We are called upon to pray by name for our missionaries on the home and foreign fields. Then there are the secretaries of the home and foreign societies, the Publication Society, the Board of Education, the city mission workers, each state convention with its officers and workers—all by name. We are even asked to pray for the General Board of Promotion! There is a call for prayer for children and adults, Indians and black men, but so far as we can find there is no call for prayer for editors—no periodicals, no editors are named. Is it that editors are supposed to be self-sufficient for their tasks and tests? Is it that they are supposed to be beyond the reach of prayer? We have letters on our desk written by good men and women which could never have been written had the writers first bent the knee in prayer for the editors. And if ever the editors needed prayer for sustaining grace to keep them from saying things it was when those letters came to their desks. Perhaps the writers mail the letters first and then pray for the victims, like a mother we know whose boy quarrelled with a neighbor's boy. This mother first called the cop and then telephoned the mother of the other boy that she was praying for her. We do know that there are many in the Baptist brotherhood who are not unmindful of the serious tasks delegated to the editors of the denomination's journals but we believe that the "Book of Remembrance" would be more nearly perfect had these men and women been mentioned as are other worthy workers.

Killam's Kollum

What is the Conclusion?

In the same mail on the same day we received the two letters quoted below. When we read the first we felt a little disturbed for we were sure that a new hat would be on the list of early purchases. The other letter, however, has made a new hat, a smaller one, necessary; and what about the "heart and soul of the editor"? Mrs. Harriet B. Wharton of Minneapolis writes: "You are certainly building up THE BAPTIST to what is my ideal of a religious paper. It, as any worth-while paper must, reflects the heart and soul of the editor behind it. While a religious journal, of all journals, should carry certainty and courage of purpose, it has seemed to me that a few of the goody-goody sort are about as satisfying as the works of the Laodiceans." Now comes the sad part of my duty: "What is the matter? Your paper gets worse and worse. . . . But there are some good things in it and the bad things in it only hurt me by making me mad, so I have continued it. But I can't stand much more."—K. L. F., Oregon. One man's meat is another man's poison. Good is a relative term. Editors are human. Subscribers are human, too. And to make the matter more confusing, another letter came later in the day from Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame, a paragraph of which reads: "THE BAPTIST is apparently under the spell of Coué, for every week, in every department, it gets stronger and stronger. It is a mystery how you do it." The problem in this letter is in the word "stronger."

Fresh from the Field

After a pastorate of twenty-one years at the East Church, Lynn, Mass., Rev. Arthur E. Harriman has accepted the call of the Salem Church, New Rochelle, N. J. The new pastorate will begin Dec. 1.

The Oak Lane Church, Philadelphia, has dedicated its new building. The dedication services lasted eight days, the formal dedication taking place on Oct. 21.

Rev. J. D. Chappelle of Alturas, Calif., has been appointed chapel car missionary in charge of chapel car "Good Will," successor to the Rev. John B. Speed, who was compelled to give up the work on account of throat trouble.

Miss Edith M. Howard of Hartford, Conn., has furnished the funds necessary for the making of duplicate plates of the Publication Society's edition of the New Testament and Psalms for use of our Baptist brethren in Lodz, Poland.

Evangelist George R. Stair on Oct. 28 closed a series of meetings with the churches of Warsaw, Ind. The meetings were held in a community building and all of the churches will receive additions to their membership. Mr. Stair is now engaged in a similar service with the churches of Saco, Maine. His address is Troy, N. Y.

Rev. G. R. Carter of Los Angeles, Calif., has been appointed colporter-missionary to succeed Mr. E. H. Doty, recently resigned. Mr. Carter will carry on his work in the mountain districts of Southern California and Arizona. Mr. J. D. Green of Gardena, Calif., has presented to the Publication Society, a fine auto equipment with many extras for the use of Mr. Carter in his work.

Dr. W. E. Biederwolf speaking of the beauty of the music of the Hawaiians said that he heard little jazz music in Hawaii. He then added: "A pessimist is a man who thinks something worse is going to happen to the world after the craze for jazz music passes away." Speaking of gospel work he said: "We did not find evangelistic work in Hawaii easy; in fact we found it exceedingly difficult. Most of our work was among the Americans and most Americans are there for purposes that take religion little into account. Many go for the climate—for what they call rest and change, and, as a rule, especially in Honolulu, the hotel servants get the change and the proprietor gets the rest. Religion seems a secondary matter. The pastors preach to pitiably small groups at the evening service although the morning audiences are fairly well-attended. We were kept exceedingly busy holding from two to five services a day; Mr. Rodeheaver singing and "yours truly" doing the preaching. The soldiers were especially receptive to our messages and there were perhaps in all 300 definite acceptances of Christ. We also did some work among the Hawaiians themselves, and spoke and sang in practically all the schools and colleges, and of these there are very many."

Dr. H. C. Leland, who recently closed a four-months' work as supply pastor at the First Church, Moline, Ill., is available for similar service elsewhere. His address is Forest Park, Ill.

Hall Caine's new book, "The Woman of Knockaloe," is published by Dodd Mead and Co., 449 Fourth Ave., New York. A limited number of ministers may secure a complimentary copy by applying to the publishers at once.

Rev. L. J. Anderson, the "good news" evangelist of Rio, Wis., is engaged in special meetings near Butler, S. D. The meetings have awakened a wide interest and a number of persons have been converted.

Rev. Wm. G. Everson was granted a leave of absence of eight weeks in order that he might comply with the request of the war department at Washington for his service during that period. He will be the ranking member of the board of the war college with rank of brigadier general. The church secured a stated supply for the period.

The 1924 "Book of Remembrance" is off the press. A new plan has been adopted, which will increase its value and interest. In the main part of the book the names of the workers are grouped according to the work in which they are engaged, without regard to their birthday dates. Get in your order early. You may address your state headquarters.

A Grave in France

By Howard A. Vernon

A MOUND of earth, and a cross—
that's all,
To mark the place of a comrade's fall;
A wooden cross and a heather bloom,
To mark the place of a comrade's tomb;
An arching oak, like a spirit brave,
To shelter the place of a comrade's grave;
And close by his side a mud-stained gun,
To tell that a comrade's fight is done;
And over it all a leaden sky
To match the heart of the passerby.

But a lark is singing overhead
A song of hope for my comrade dead,
And morning sun shines through the gloom
To shed its lustre over his tomb;
And south May winds blow trumpets clear;
And flower, and fern, and forest hear;
And glad is the world with songs that ring
In the starting life of early spring.
My comrade's grave is glorified
By mystic touch and rising tide.

So here where tears have moistened the earth,
I catch the message of wondrous worth;
As the lark sings clear in the morning sun,
My comrade sings for the day begun;
As sunshine through the gloom appears,
His love will shine through all the years;
Like flower-bloom and fragrant breath,
His life survives the touch of death.
So I turn from his grave with eyes undim,
To greet the new-born day—and him!

Rev. J. L. Meads has changed his address from Benton to Ava, Ill. He has been a real helper to pastors in his work of an evangelist. He may be addressed at Ava.

The Crescent Heights Church, Calgary, recently celebrated the third anniversary of the coming of its pastor, Rev. Christopher Burnett. Mr. Burnett was for several years a pastor in Detroit, Mich.

Rev. A. W. Anthony has resigned the general secretaryship of the Home Missions Council after five years of service. He has been very successful in promoting plans for larger fellowship and closer cooperation between the forty-one boards and societies representing twenty denominations.

The migration of the negroes from the South to the cities of the North is creating a problem for our churches. It is also creating a problem for the states from which they are coming. The Georgia Bankers Association declared in a recent statement that Sherman's march to the sea cost that state no greater loss than the loss of its labor. It is reported that there are 46,674 vacant farm houses and the state faces an estimated loss this year of $27,000,000.

The following paragraph appeared in a recent issue of The Baptist Times:— "Each minister of Northamptonshire has received this week a parcel of books to the value of 10s. 6d. from the Baptist Union Publication Department, being the gift of a thoughtful and generous layman of the county who desires to remain anonymous. In these days when good books are expensive, this splendid gift is greatly appreciated and the help of this ministers' friend is most timely and is gratefully received. The best that ministers of Northamptonshire can wish for their brethren in the other counties is for some layman in each district to follow the example of the generous Northamptonshire layman, who, on his own initiative, came to the help of the ministerial brethren." A fine opportunity for service is suggested here brother layman.

The Janesville "Daily Gazette" speak editorially in the highest terms of the ministry of Rev. R. G. Pierson who has left Wisconsin for his new work in Pittsburgh. We quote from the editorial: "The church itself speaks emphatically of the work he has done. He has appreciated the fact that among the larger problems of the church is the one of watching the children and guiding their amusements. That this is a part of the church functions is clearly shown by what has happened in the organization here of which Mr. Pierson has been the active and earnest leader for seven years. Appreciative also of the work he has done in a secular way, is the Kiwanis organization of the state. He has been a trustee of the Kiwanis for two years and elected lieutenant-governor of the district at the recent convention at Eau Claire. We can ill afford to lose men

The Baptist

The Heart of the Bible

WE hail with pleasure the new emphasis that is being placed upon the Bible. Several great daily newspapers are publishing in serial form a recent translation of the New Testament by an eminent scholar, and our own General Board of Promotion is projecting a series of Bible and Missionary Conferences covering the entire territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. In these conferences Bible exposition has the chief place on the program, and men noted for their spiritual power and Bible knowledge are opening the word of God to the people. Reports from conferences already held indicate the enthusiasm with which the congregations are receiving the messages from the Bible unfolded by worthy expositors and tested by foreign missionaries who have seen it in action where conditions are most difficult.

We need to keep ourselves close to the heart of the Bible, and the heart of the Bible is the eternal Christ. There are at least four things that embody Christ—the universe, the church, the individual Christian and the Bible. To know Christ in any real sense one must understand something of each of these. But it is of the Bible as an embodiment of the Christ to which we call attention here. Jesus himself pointed out the body and heart of the sacred scriptures of the Old Testament when he said to the religious teachers of his day: "Ye search the scriptures because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me; and ye will not come to me that ye may have life." And the writer of the letter to the Hebrews whose vision of the heart of the Bible was inspired in a high degree, tells his readers that while God spoke unto the fathers in the prophets he has given his final word to men in his Son. The Bible is therefore a means to an end, and not an end in itself as the religious leaders of every age have been inclined to regard it. It is the schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. The railroad guide is a means to an end to the traveler; but he will never reach his destination by simply studying the time-table. He must board the train intelligently. The menu card in the hotel dining-room may be all that such a card should be; but a man will starve to death if he attempts to satisfy his hunger by a minute knowledge of its contents. He must use the card only as a means to an end, order what the card has enabled him to select, and eat.

All this is perfectly simple and needs no argument; but when it comes to religion we too frequently drop our common sense and proceed upon some other line. Again we repeat, the heart of the Bible is Christ. And when we make this statement we are not unmindful of the importance of the body. The Bible embodies Christ. It is Christ who is revealed in its cosmogony. The first chapters of Genesis must be complemented by the first chapter of John's gospel; the law of Moses must be interpreted in the light of the sermon on the mount; the prophets are crowned in the thirteenth of First Corinthians; the whole book, both Old and New Testaments, finds its key in Christ. In other words, Christ is all as regards the Bible. If we do not come to him as our Saviour and Lord and Friend, and cultivate his spirit, accept his authority, obey his word and trust him always, then we have failed to make the right use of the sacred scriptures.

While it is true that the whole end and aim of the Bible is to reveal God in Christ, it is also true that Christ taken seriously into the life of the individual is the prime qualification for any trustworthy interpretation of the heart of the Bible. The Bible intelligently and sympathetically read leads one to Christ, and in turn Christ leads that one to the very heart of the book. His own promise is that any one who follows him shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life. Much light has been shed upon the Bible, but it has not always been the light of life. We are deeply indebted to reverent scholarship for light upon the many subjects connected with Bible history, authorship and text; but all that may be purely academic. We cannot rest here. We must push on into the laboratory of practical experience. "Trust and obey, for there is no other way," expresses the principle in simple rhyme.

COLUMBUS dreamed of a passage to the East Indies by a western route; Cyrus W. Field dreamed of a trans-Atlantic telegraph cable; Abraham Lincoln dreamed of a free and united country; Adoniram Judson dreamed of an Orient redeemed; and each of them made his dream come true because he followed the gleam and walked in the light of life. This is the way to the heart of the Bible. Faith in the book must be more than academic and polemic; it must be dynamic and heroic. It must get away from syllogism to sympathy, from logic to life, from definition to demonstration, from criticism to Christ. The living Christ incarnated in the individual and in the church as a vital organism is the only solution of the problems that press upon the world today. If the New Testament means anything more than the Old Testament it means a new covenant written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in tables that are hearts of flesh. The world waits for the living epistles written on the heart. We therefore bid the Bible and Missionary Conferences Godspeed, and request our readers to cooperate with the workers in prayer and service that the Bible may be made a new book in the lives of our people, that the missionary and educational work of the denomination may awaken new enthusiasm, and that Christ may be more fully incarnated in ourselves and in our churches.

"The Baptist"

THE coming of a new man to be associated with Mr. Killam in the editorship and management of THE BAPTIST calls for a review and restatement of the status of the paper.

THE BAPTIST is a combination of several religious journals bought and merged by the Northern Baptist Convention when the great undertaking in missionary, educational and philanthropic cooperation was launched at Denver in 1919. The paper is therefore the property of the convention and controlled by the convention through a committee appointed and empowered by the General Board of Promotion to select the editors and define their task. In conference with the committee on THE BAPTIST the editors together work out the plans that govern the paper in its business and editorial policies in harmony with the will of the convention registered by vote of the delegates at its annual meetings.

It follows then that no one person or group of persons has any private proprietary interest in the paper. It belongs to all the Baptist churches represented in the Northern Baptist Convention and is intended to reflect denominational principles and activities as expressed through the various agencies cooperating with the convention. Accommodating the words of the old Roman, the motto of the paper might well be: "I am THE BAPTIST, and nothing Baptist is alien to me." The word Baptist is here used in no narrow sectarian sense, but with its largest significance including everything of wholesome human interest in the world.

With these facts in mind the editors must keep to the main line of interpreting the principles and practices of the Baptists as they are organized in the Northern Baptist Convention. While not unmindful of their discretionary powers as interpreters and while making full allowance for the personal element in their interpretations, they are always conscious of the fact that they are interpreters primarily, and not creators. And yet if THE BAPTIST is to serve the denomination worthily it must be creative in vision, in faith and in service. There is a vital principle involved in the sacred words: "And the Word became flesh." The word of the Baptists as it appears from week to week in the columns of the paper must first become flesh before it becomes print.

THE BAPTIST was brought into existence through prayer and vision and the adventure of faith. It has grown in wisdom and in stature and, we trust, in favor with God and men. We ask for it a continuation of the cooperative sympathy, the frank suggestions and the daily prayers of its readers. It shall be the aim of the editors to make it a still stronger force in lifting our people to higher altitudes of vision, to richer spiritual experiences, to wider fields of service and to greater loyalty to Christ. The new joint-editor begins his work with a deep consciousness of his limitations, but he is comforted with the fellowship of his associate whose unquestioned ability, successful management and long experience guarantee the paper against serious loss by this venture.

The Spirit of Adventure

THE average local church does not have the spirit of adventure or it would not have stuck in the old ruts for such a long time.

Of course that statement will immediately be challenged. "What do you mean by the average local church?" Yours, unless it is one of the 10 per cent of exceptional churches. Ninety per cent of the local churches are average ones in most things. The pity is that quite often they are not even aware of the fact. "What do you mean by the spirit of adventure?" To be definite we will cite an example. Here was a local church of 640 members. From time immemorial it had a board of deacons consisting of four men. One day something stirred up a latent spirit of adventure and within a month, we are told, they had twenty deacons and twenty deaconesses at work. But the average church will not move that way because the spirit of adventure has been covered up by deep ruts of precedent, of unscriptural practices, by fear of mankind and sex prejudices.

Ruts! you say? Yes, deep ruts so that they cannot even see clearly enough what is going on inside the average church and what is going on outside is consequently beyond the ken of the average church body. The average attendance of members, the average per cent of members at work and the average per cent of the membership who give for the support of local expenses or for missions is so similar in 90 per cent of our local churches that it can truthfully be said to be in a deep, deep rut. We admit that within the past ten years there has been a decided improvement in that part of the local church that does participate, but the situation with the non-participating part of the church is growing steadily worse. Just what is the cause of this we do not intend to discuss just now. It can be easily determined.

We need the spirit of adventure to take hold of the average local church. We ask no one to do aught that is contrary to God's word. Try some of the things that have brought splendid results in the 10 per cent of our churches that are above the average in worship life, in service life and in the production of resources for work at home and abroad.

A Page of Opinion

American Ideals

THE leading article in Current History for October is written by Arthur T. Hadley, president emeritus of Yale, on "Our National Character, Its Strength and Its Weakness." American national character, the writer says, was, broadly speaking, developed between the Alleghany Mountains and the Missouri River in the years 1820 to 1850. The pioneer life promoted certain qualities of character: self-reliance and eagerness for immediate and tangible results. Now, however, pioneer qualities are no longer required and have actually brought us into some degree of peril. The three faults most frequently complained of in American life, Mr. Hadley considers, are materialism, lawlessness and unwarranted self-assertion. He thinks, however, that the materialism complained of is common to the human race, that our lawlessness is a defect in our machinery of government rather than in our national character, but to the charge of unwarranted self-assertion, he thinks we must as a people plead guilty.

An interesting feature of the article is the emphasis upon the gambling motive as an incentive in business and industry. "As for the typical American who pursues the dollar, I suspect that he is seeking it chiefly as a symbol of success in a great national game rather than for the sake of what he is going to get when he spends it.....Of our four great national games—business, politics, baseball and poker—the first is the most widely played and can become the most spectacular; and with our national temperament we get more excited over it than the French or English do, and are in danger of forgetting that there are things in life more important than the winning of any game, however exciting. But this sort of thing is not materialism or anything like it; it is a crude and narrow but very intense kind of idealism."

"Towards a Free Press"

A NEW daily paper recently entered the field of journalism in New York. It is an evening paper and is known as the New York Leader. It is owned by a number of labor unions, including the amalgamated clothing workers, the international ladies garment workers, the united cloth hat and cap makers and district council number nine of the brotherhood of painters. Under its name appears the phrase "towards a free press." In the first issue the owners stated the purpose in part as follows: They are determined that it shall be a real newspaper, not a propaganda organ. News fairly and adequately given is its life's blood. The owners of the Leader believe that a newspaper can succeed which appeals to a love of truth, fairness, justice, as well as to the need for relaxation and human interest—"We believe that enough New Yorkers want to think about things that matter to welcome news and stimulating comment on the news.

"Editorially we avow definite convictions. We believe it is possible for mankind to establish a world from which poverty, parasitism, waste and war shall be abolished. That is the supreme task of the workers with hand and brain. We will fight with them in their battles for the sake not only of the present betterment of human conditions, but also of the attainment of a new, better, saner, more beautiful world. We do not seek only those readers who already agree with us, but those who, disagreeing, believe in open discussion of the problems of the day."

Regarding its political bias, it says that it "belongs to no political party but to 300,000 workers organized in their unions, desires common action by the workers on the political as well as the economic field. For that end we shall steadfastly work." It is also announced that "if there should happen to be minority opinion among the directors that will be given reasonable expression through signed statements . . . a similar privilege being extended to dissentient readers who send letters to the editor."

These sound like good Baptist principles and the editors of THE BAPTIST accept them as their own.

The Bible and the Public Schools

PENNSYLVANIA is one of the commonwealths requiring the public schoolteacher to read each day a passage of scripture to the pupils. The department of education of the state has now put itself on record showing its readiness to carry out the principle back of the law.

A college in Western Pennsylvania prepares many students for teaching. The question arose as to giving credit for work done in the Bible courses. The matter was taken up with the department of education and the following letter clearly indicates the position of its head.

"Pursuant to our conversation of today, it gives me pleasure to inform you that this department will accept courses in Bible history as history, and courses in Bible literature as literature, in the certification of college graduates with the college provisional certificate, and—

"In the cases of elementary schoolteachers who are taking further training toward standard certification, any courses in Bible which are accepted by the college will be accepted by this department within the limit of the twenty-five semester hours of work of general education permitted in the requirements for this form of certificate."

The Background of the Bible

The beauty of the Bible is that it stands an eternal Pentecost. There is a message for all; every one hears it in his own tongue.

By Morton Scott Enslin

OVER on the slopes of Samaria a group of excavators were working. It might not have struck the chance bystander as a promising location; merely a group of dilapidated huts making up a typical, squalid Arabian village. That was the surface; but as they dug they entered a new and entirely different world. In the place of dingy huts they came upon pillars erected many hundreds of years ago and bearing unmistakable signs of the period of Roman domination in the Holy Land of Palestine. And yet not satisfied they continued; as a result of their skillful cuts and tunnels at last were revealed the rough hewn masonry blocks of the palace of Omri of Israel. And this palace of the Hebrew king was built on land once possessed by still an earlier race—the Canaanites. This is but one example of the various peoples, the different cultures fluxed by the divine fires into the books that we possess. Is it then any presumption to say that the Bible cannot be adequately understood without some knowledge of the background in which its writers dwelled?

Its Authors

Over in the fertile valley of the Tigris and Euphrates—so often called the cradle of our race—civilization flourished at an early date. There the Semites soon became a great commercial power; their teachers spread their civilization and religion; soon they were pushing west to the eastern edge of the Mediterranean, consecrating sacred places of worship. From this stock the ancient Hebrews separated, apparently as a protest against commercial activity. With a growing distaste for towns and cities they sought a freer less trammelled life as nomads. So, pushing west, they came to the banks of the Jordan and, crossing the river, entered the promised land of fertility. But here they came upon another civilization, that of the Canaanites, an old and settled people with a religion of Animism tinctured with immorality. At first the Hebrew nomad with his independence and love of freedom was hostile to his more sophisticated neighbors who dwelled in towns and worshiped in high places. Yet no people can fail to be affected by environment and soon the Hebrews were in a fair way to be degenerated by the Baal worship and its resulting evils. Such an inroad did it make that soon Hebrews and nations were vying with one another for the possession of the high places as we learn from the Tel-el-Amarna tablets, and the eloquence of the prophets and the insistence of the chronicler were required to combat this apostasy.

Then came the sweep of Assyrian and Babylonian influence. As we have seen the Hebrew was a branch of this Semitic stock. As the Eastern forces grew stronger and as Palestine became weakened by civil war and corruption, once more the Hebrews were swept back into the original stream. Here as a subject nation they partook of the Babylonian culture. The myths and folklore of their lands became inextricably woven into the warp and woof of Hebrew life; the Babylonian deity Force became an attribute of the Hebrew Jah under the name El Shaddai—God Almighty. The worship of sun and moon; the deification of nature; a surprising knowledge of astronomy; an admirable calendar—all these elements of the captor civilization could hardly fail to make their impress felt. And then preeminently the Babylonians as well as the Syrians were traders. Though the Hebrew rebelled—as he had when he wandered away from his ancestral valley centuries before—and though we have many Old Testament passages seeming to disdain life circumscribed by city walls, yet this influence was mightily felt, with the result that today we know the Hebrew as the trader, no longer a nomad shepherd as were his ancestors Abraham and Jacob. He has succumbed to the influence against which he vainly protested. When the Hebrews returned after seventy years to Palestine, profoundly influenced by that civilization under which they had spent more than two generations, they brought with them monuments in verse, for the voices of the exile are among the finest writings of the Canon.

Then the Babylonian civilization gave way before the Persian. The direct influence of this latter civilization is probably small, but it played an important part in the interbiblical period and undoubtedly made a considerable impression upon New Testament life and thought. The Persian concept of dualism is seen the clearest, certainly influencing the New Testament idea of Satan while the dualism between good and evil, light and darkness is seen quite clearly reflected. The finest gift of Persia seems to have been the encouraging of speculation concerning the future life.

Egypt as such seems to have had little or no influence upon Hebrew history as recorded in the Bible; and this is one of the wonders of scholarship. Even the sojourn in Egypt, ended by the flight under Moses, appears to have left the Hebrews entirely untouched by the civilization of the Nile. Though Egypt's interest in speculation regarding the future was high, it was not from Egyptian but from Persian thought that the Hebrew got his additional spur. Yet in one way indirectly Egypt did play a large part and that was through the Greek.

When Alexander of Macedon made his wild sweep across the world's stage he ushered in a new day. His thirty-three years left Europe and Asia vastly changed. Persian culture was swept aside in a night; nor was it in Greece alone. Asia Minor, Palestine, to the Euphrates, Egypt—all came under this world-conquering civilization. And the Greek language was the potent factor. Hebrew emphasis had been on action, the verb was the important word. Their poetry was passionate as the tongue well fitted it to be. No other poetry has ever reached the emotional heights reached by the Hebrew Psalms. The Greek tongue was different. What it lost in fire and passion, it more than made up in accuracy of diction and elegance of thought. Soon the Hebrew sojourner in Egypt was finding it difficult to understand his mother tongue: so arose that landmark in biblical history, the Septuagint, or Alexandrian translation of the Old Testament into semi-colloquial Greek. The importance of this work can scarcely be overemphasized, for it was one of the great forces shaping the koine or common speech of Palestine in which our New Testament stands written. Thus the Greek influence was not limited to Egypt but brought Palestine under its sway with the result that the latter became bilingual—koine Greek and Aramaic of common speech which had gradually replaced the biblical Hebrew under the influence of Syria and Babylonia. Add to this linguistic influence the intellectual stimulus of Greece with its philosophy and literature with which Greek teachers like Paul must probably have been acquainted, and you have a mighty factor which cannot be neglected.

The Influence of Rome

The final factor was Rome, the mistress of the world who administered all parts of her empire, thanks to her highly centralized rule, her emphasis upon law and government, and her military roads. Palestine came under her sway. Jerusalem the capital of David and Solomon became the seat of the Roman procurator, and the Jewish religion and nascent Christianity had to fight for their lives alongside the other cults of the Roman empire. As Sir William Ramsey remarked in his recent visit to America, the book of Acts rests on the current of Graeco-Roman civilization.

FOR we must share if we would keep
That good thing from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have,
Such is the law of love.
—Trench.

Thus then, various civilizations rose, flourished and gave way to their successors. No nation could fail to be vastly influenced by the epochal changes that were taking place. All these changes are mirrored forth in the Bible. God's directing hand in the unfolding history is plainly seen. Should we not realize this and as we read this book should we not strive to see it in its setting? To see the conditions against which it was crying? The beauty of this Bible is that it stands an eternal Pentecost. Whether an Israel under the far ruling David or in the nomad days of Abraham; whether in the magnificence of Solomon's court or the sorrow of a Babylonian prison—there is a message for all, every one hears it in his own tongue.

As Baptists it is our proud boast that we have no creed save the Bible. We do not look back to the Westminster or even the New Hampshire Confession as the authoritative statement. The Bible is taken to be the rule and guide of our faith. Yet I am often reminded of the Ethiopian eunuch. He had the open book and was reading one of the richest devotional passages—Isaiah 53; yet in answer to Philip's query, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" he retorted, "How can I except some one shall guide me?" Hasn't this a pertinent truth for us today? As Protestants we need be very careful not to merit the scoff of our Catholic brethren who declare that an infallible book without an infallible guide is a travesty. Should we not be eager to read and acquaint ourselves with the life and conditions that bore such a tremendous influence upon this book? Should we not try to throw all the light we can upon it, to try to see these great truths of God the clearer in their native setting? Should we not strive to imagine ourselves in the same conditions in which God's people were of old to gain the full significance of the words of warning and encouragement? And as we see these writings that have stood amid the tottering ruins of ancient civilizations, increasing as they have decreased, should we not rejoice the more and thank God from the depths of our hearts for the rich heritage that is ours?

Little Children

"Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me."—Matthew 19:14

By John Kelman

THIS account of the little children brought to Jesus is one of the eternal stories. So long as there are homes on earth, so long will this tale in its exquisite simplicity be told, binding the hearts of parents and children to the heart of the Son of God.

A curious expression occurs in the story that follows, that of the rich young ruler. He was not the sort of man, we should think, to be impressed by this gathering of little ones and their mothers. Rather a flowery young person, he seems, seen perhaps a good deal in the town. But he is so drawn to this other young man walking through Perea—to something gracious, wonderful, Godlike about him—that in himself the heart of the boy rises to meet Jesus, and he comes running.

You remember Browning's exquisite lines:

Dear and great angel, wouldst thou only leave
That child, when thou hast done with him, for me!
Let me sit all the day here, that when eve
Shall find performed thy special ministry,
And time comes for departure, thou, suspending
Thy flight, may'st see another child for tending,
Another still to quiet and retrieve.

Something of this feeling is in the story of Jesus blessing the little ones.

We have it again in our children's hymn:

I wish that his hands had been placed on my head,
That his arm had been thrown around me.
And that I might have seen his kind look when he said,
"Let the little ones come unto me."

We almost envy these little children. We want to be where they were that he might take us and caress us and tell us of his love. Today we linger on the story, as upon a beautiful gift.

Perea was a half foreign place in a sort of jungle region of the Holy Land. It was a Jewish country between two alien Gentile provinces. As Jesus had found people at Nazareth, so he found the women here. In some of them there was hopelessness. Their lives were faded; there was little to which to look forward. Yet these were but the more passionate for their children's lives. So women came to him that he might comfort them and draw their children to his feet.

> "Dear Saviour, accept us this day as we come. Send us forth to meet life as those who have been in Thy shelter, for Thine own love's sake. Amen."

The East is full of the occult and the dangerous. Its women ask for mysterious blessings, for protection against what is hidden. Here was a stranger, a man reputed to have mysterious powers. Naturally suspicious, they might have folded their children in their garments, as from the evil eye. What they might have risked for themselves, they would hardly have risked for their children.

But about Jesus there was something that there had never before been about anybody. It is remarkable testimony to him that they trusted entirely what he should do with their little ones.

What did they want? The thoughts of a boy may be far, far thoughts. But the thoughts of a mother go farther still. We have mothers among us, and their desire we know. Jesus dealt with that. The old Greeks put the baby into the hollow of his father's shield, that he might be protected or that he might catch his father's valor. Jesus took the children up in his arms, and they looked into his face.

The mystery and pathos of a baby's life, fresh from the Creator's hands, set us wondering. What tragedies or glories will surround this child? What tasks must these wee hands meet, as they grow larger and stronger? What tremendous destinies hang on these feeble threads of life? What possibilities are here wrapped up, of joy, suffering, laughter, tears, temptation yielded to or overcome, of shame, of honor? And meanwhile, how utterly trustful, uncritical, sensitive, is the tiny life. Every touch left on the spirit remains. And for all this parents are responsible.

For certain days you will stand for God to your children. For certain days—God grant through all!—you will stand to them for love. In some dim way these Perean mothers may have felt these things. So they brought the children to Jesus to get his understanding of the child.

This is a perpetual paradox of life. Parenthood is awful yet blessed. Those of you who are anxious about your children, accept the high responsibility, remembering how high it is.

The disciples of Jesus would have excluded these matters. To them they were an interruption. The disciples were not really heartless men, but they were puffed up with business. They felt that they were people of importance with work to do. And there was also this young ruler hovering about in the offing, who at the time might have made a considerable addition to the adherents to the Christian faith. This bringing of the children was merely child's play, hardly befitting the occasion.

But play counts for more than business. Art is play. Love is play. The home is play. The day's work may cover art with dust, may crowd out beauty, may sometimes even deny love. When we are old we may play for money; but when we are young, we play for love of the game. If we could get out of being so important, so busy with money-making, and could get back to the love of children, how much nearer we should be to Christ's heart. People like the disciples take themselves too seriously.

In our day, there has been a great discovery of the child. In an earlier age, he was treated with severity, marshalled into line by his elders. Then it dawned on the popular mind that the child was an asset of the people, of present as well as future value. The child's rediscovery need not make him an intolerable tyrant, ruling everybody. The best thing that can happen to a foolishly pampered child is wholesome neglect, that he may come to his own. But Jesus felt that no business was more important than the guidance of the child's spirit. These Perean children, bearing freshly in memory his loving touch, may have managed to escape the violence of spirit that swept their countryside.

Look how it was! Jesus said: "Come unto me, all ye that are heavy-laden!" The children came; the grown-up people didn't. The very importance of their labor kept them back from him. The thing that kept them anxious kept them from getting rid of their anxiety by coming. There is in our very needs much to keep us from supplying these needs. We need to learn from these little children who were not heavy-laden, but who came at Christ's call.

The heart of Jesus is in this story. He must have asked for these children all that was in the mothers' hearts. He may have prayed, not that they might be taken out of the world, but that they might be kept from all its evil. He may have said: "I thank thee, Father, that things hidden from the wise and prudent thou has revealed to these babes." I think that he thanked God that childhood existed; for it is evident that all through his life the child spirit meant much to him.

Open your Dickens, and read the stories of children of a generation ago. On these pages, pictures of misery and crime are often redeemed by some sweet child. So, in Francis Thompson's "Hound of Heaven," the little children's eyes hold "dawning answers."

The child gives us a foretaste of the kingdom of heaven, of a new race that never will grow old; for men will enter more and more like children into the kingdom. The time will come when no one will lose his freshness, will be blasé or old before his time; for the cleansing and sweetening of earth is in the hands of the child.

Taking these little ones in his arms, Jesus identified them with himself. His power of sympathy stretched out near and far, gathering into the bosom of his life his mother, the blind man of Jerusalem, the leper, the outcast. We feel his infinity in every contact. "Before Abraham was, I am." He who grasped all time in his eternal hands understands these mothers and says of their children: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Take all this for your own homes and your children. Christ is willing thus to bless your little ones. Could these Perean children ever forget his prayer for them? In king's palaces, on desert sands, in temptation and sin, they must have thought: "Once I was in his arms."

Parents, give your children these benefits. Teach them the meaning of baptism. Once they have been in the arms of Jesus. Trust them in his arms. Trust Jesus with your dead child. Trust him with the living child over whom your heart is anxious.

Suffer the children to come. Don't force them. Do not thrust them violently toward the Jesus you have known. They will never find Jesus exactly as you have found him. That cannot be. They must live in conditions, social and intellectual, that you have not known. You must trust them as well as him.

His invitation to come is for us all. Let us forget our age. How old are you—sixty? Then go take thy bill quickly and write down six. We must be young again to enter his kingdom. It always comes to that. I have seen hundreds of deathbeds, and almost all Christians die young. Colonel Newcome, as he died, answered, "Adsum!" a schoolboy at the end.

We ask our Lord to pray for us. He does more. We grope through the mists of adult life, feeling their chill, but he makes us feel at home in his arms. Salvation lies not in our grasp of him, but in his grasp of us.

Always there will be other minds frowning on our simplicity, the business, the intellectual, the cynical point of view, smiling a bitter little smile and calling this play. But Christ rebukes the cynical spirit and bids us keep the heart of a child. Whatever life's sorrows, disappointments, failures and shames, always we may return to him, as the children came, for his arms are always open.

The Citizenship Conference

BY CLARENCE A. BARBOUR

I AM very willing to respond to the request for a brief statement as to my reaction from the Citizenship Conference held in Washington Oct. 23-15. The call for the conference was a notable one in the number and personnel of those who signed it. I did not hear an exact statement as to the attendance. I think it was somewhere in the region of 750. It was impossible to be in the sessions without feeling the ability, the sincerity and the profound conviction of those who were gathered during those memorable days. It was no holiday excursion; there were great issues at stake, and the realization of their seriousness was perfectly apparent.

The addresses began on Saturday morning and closed Monday afternoon. The first was a noble utterance of Bishop William F. McDowell, resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He struck the keynote. It was worthy of the occasion and of the man. The closing address was by Senator Borah. I had neither seen nor heard him before that day, but I want to see him and hear him again. He was introduced by Dr. John H. Finlay, in words which testified to his appreciation of Senator Borah as one of the most scholarly of all our representatives in Congress, and the address, cogent in reasoning, fearless in spirit, and delivered with grace and power, warranted all that had been said of him by the distinguished chairman.

Between the first address and the last there were many notable utterances; for example, by Prohibition Commissioner Haynes, Wayne B. Wheeler, Senator Glass of Virginia, Mrs. Raymond Robins, former Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas, Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, William Jennings Bryan, and Louis Marshall of New York. The conference will live longest by reason of the notable work which was done in the preparation of reports. Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Dr. Daniel A. Poling and Dr. Joseph Fort Newton, were among those who gave their time and thought to this feature of the conference. Opportunity will be given to read the results of the work which they did. If it does not stir the American people to indignation over the present shameful conditions in law enforcement, and to a stern determination that those conditions shall be changed, I shall be greatly mistaken.

The publicity given to the conference was notable. It could not fail to attract the attention of the people. I never heard more genuinely plain speaking in an equal length of time. President Coolidge received the members of the conference at the White House, and was present at the Sunday evening session held in the First Congregational church.

It is understood that the addresses and the reports will appear in full, in a form which will be available. No thoughtful pastor or layman of our churches should be without a complete report of this conference. It will be an arsenal of warfare material in the battle for a law-observing nation, and a fountain of inspiration if the wells of courage and faith run dry.

Christ's Call to Youth

"Love so amazing, so divine, demands my life, my soul, my all."

By Clarence W. Kemper

WE are saying much about youth today, but we are not asking what youth is saying about us. A wise teacher remarked that we ask "What shall we do with our young people?" But we might ask, he went on to say, "What will they do with us?" The traditional Mrs. Grundy is quite vocal today, saying, "What are we coming to?" and "I do wish that they wouldn't." If the youth of today does not conform to all of our former religious standards, we do have the wisest and cleanest youth the world ever knew. Now God is getting ready to do something with such material. It is one of those points we call "the fullness of time."

The thoughts of youth are "long, long thoughts," and youth has an instinctive understanding of our Master. In fact, Jesus lived and died a young man, and never had what we call the experience of an old man. In that fine little book of Bernard Clausen's entitled, "Preach It Again," he declares that youth is a state of mind, bounded on the north by courage, on the south by enthusiasm, on the west by pioneering, and on the east by dreams. Every normal young person enters life as though it were brand new and is waiting for his touch as a new pioneer.

A Courageous Adventurer

Youth is a courageous adventurer. He is akin to those early Christians who went out so vigorously that they were reported to be "turning the world upside down." As Edna Ferber says, "Youth feels that he is entitled to his mistakes." May I say very frankly, youth unspoiled and untampered with is not at all concerned about discussion of theological hair-splitting. While we of maturity spend much time in discussion, youth is restless to go out and do. I have a friend who when school was finished asked for the hardest spot in the world where he might serve. They replied by sending him to the Congo, and only last year he was caught up in one of the greatest evangelistic movements of recent years. Youth answers instinctively to the canal builders' song,

"Got any rivers they say are uncrossable?
Got any mountains you can't tunnel through?
We specialize in the wholly impossible,
Doing what nobody ever could do."

There is something in the spirit and the mind of the Master as he set out with firm faith to conquer the world, which finds an answer in the wholesome life of youth.

Youth is an unselfish enthusiast. He doesn't know how to count the cost. He has not learned how to be calculating, and we may thank God for it. How would many a youth find his way through his educational process if he had stopped to calculate? I know young people today who are making their way through school against all arguments of cold calculation. Youth is convinced that when he has found a course to be right, he simply flings himself in without stopping to ask whether it can be done. This is why the armies of the world are recruited from the ranks of youth, and at the same time is the most awful indictment against militarism. Bishop McDowell tells how a young woman in his home responded, even when very ill, to the suggestion of his going to Harvard to speak to the student body just at that time. He was about to cancel the engagement, when she asked him to come into her room. Obeying her request, she said to him, "Go to Harvard, and tell those students, for a girl who is broken and cannot, that whenever or wherever they have a chance, to do anything for Jesus Christ or with Jesus Christ to jump at the chance." How much this sounds like those words of long ago from the lips of that Galilean youth whom we have come to call our Saviour and Lord, when he said, "He that loseth his life shall find it."

Youth is a dreamer of dreams and a seer of visions. Fortunately his dreams come true, while the dreams of maturity are often colored and modified by experiences. Doctor Truitt tells how Bobby Burns, at the height of his popularity, was one day followed by a lad whose name was Walter. This insistent lad said, "O, I would so love to learn how to write and be read everywhere as you are." The great writer turned upon the boy and talked with him about his ambitions, and finally concluded by saying, "If you follow your dreams, you shall some day learn how to write and shall be read far and wide as you so desire." That lad, in later days, who followed his vision of youth, came to be known in the world of letters as Sir Walter Scott. We think of that man who for a generation has been the apostle to the Christian young men of more than one continent—John R. Mott. We remember how he was in college preparing for the legal profession when the spirit of the Master moved upon him, and behold, life was transformed. After that transformation had come, he wrote home to his father, saying, "Father, dispose of that business. I have caught a vision."

I know not why God speaks to the heart of youth, many times in obscure and isolated homes, telling them the ways of life he would have them go. Evidently they are dreams that are heaven-touched, and lead them to the shining goals of their lives. Today there are children playing at their mothers' knees, to whom God will speak tomorrow, through dreams and visions, into their ways of life and service. Now the answer of youth to these divine visions is the guarantee of their service tomorrow. When General Pershing stood in Paris with the first of American troops before the Lafayette tomb, in that crisp, brief statement, in soldierly fashion, he said, "Lafayette, we have come." As I think of the youth of today, dreaming his dreams and seeing his visions, I hear that youth answer to the call of Jesus, our Master, "Jesus Christ, we have come." And the hymn they sing runs thus:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small,
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

If I Were a Minister

By Walter F. Drake

TRYING to place yourself in another man's shoes you know is a very difficult task especially if you have small feet and try to wear large size shoes. It is more of an undertaking to tell the other man what you would do in his job than trying humbly to do your own.

There are several well known principles however laid down for every man or woman in this age that apply to whatever profession or business a man shall choose. They are preparation, production and looking forward to results.

In selecting to follow any business or profession, the first step is preparing for the job. In our colleges and universities there are special courses in all lines of business administration, as well as in the different professions, which give a man or woman who intends to enter the business field training to understand in the fullest, the minutest detail of manufacture, supply and distribution. It has been predicted by Babson that the coming way of doing business is in the consolidation of manufacturing or buying power and distributing by means of the branch or chain method. And only those who are trained in leadership, men capable of handling the job, can survive being eliminated by competition. Perhaps you may think that I am leaving my subject, but I believe if the church of today stands for what it always has, that our ministry should be trained men, capable of carrying on all the phases of church work. So if I were entering the ministry today I should try and avail myself of the best training possible, not only along theological lines but also along lines of church management as the pastor today is supposed, along with his pastoral work, to be the church executive and take the initiative in all lines of procedure. To fill this position successfully today, a man or woman should have such training that when he comes in contact with his congregation of men and women from other walks in life, who have been trained in their respective lines, they will have the greatest respect and regard for his ability to carry on the great work of the Christian ministry.

We hear a great deal today about production. In our great manufacturing plants the great slogan is "produce." If a man on the pay-roll is unable to produce he is soon relieved of his position, and a new man is in his place. In these great industrial institutions it is the intent to produce with the least labor and expense the greatest quantity of finished product. Hence if I were to be a successful minister today I would think that I would have to equip myself with the keenest equipment and with my labor produce the greatest results possible. The first would be preaching the true word of God in a simple, dignified and scholarly manner. On Monday I would lay aside my pulpit clothes and then be prepared to meet the other duties of the week. I must have time for the preparation of the coming Sunday's work and to attend to the other pastoral duties.

No Catering for Popularity

I do not believe that I should cater for popularity among my fellow townsman, but that I should have some common interests with them, such as membership with them in their weekly luncheon clubs or fraternal orders, thereby becoming acquainted with the doings and problems that face the ordinary man of today. I would not think my presence there was merely to ask the blessing before the meal or to act as the chaplain of the order, but to take active part the same as any other member.

In matters of betterment of the community I should be a leader, in a conservative sane manner. With my church people, I should ever be ready to advise and give sympathy, but never drop to the low level of gossip. I would expect the church that calls me to its pastorate to have a live, progressive membership ready to work, and give of their means sufficient so that I could live and maintain my family on a plane in keeping with what was expected of me.

If I were a pastor in one of the smaller communities I would encourage and aid the consolidation of the Christian forces to the extent of the abandoning or closing of the weaker churches in order that the Christian forces might rally and gather together enough in numbers to support a pastor full time to live in the community and give the aid which he would be able to give by living and mingling with the people he is serving.

In looking forward to the results of my labors as a minister it would be hard for me to prophesy what might be the results. What might be considered success by some may be considered failure by others. The only way it can be measured is by the full measure of God's blessing bestowed upon the same.

I have tried to give in a few words what I would do if I were a minister. Perhaps others may not agree to some things that I have said but the discussion of these subjects proves a benefit to all.

In conventions connected with the work in which I am engaged one of our greatest helps comes from the ministers who are invited to address our meetings; their friendly criticisms and helps offered on the conduct of our work as they see it, prove of great value to us. Hence we are all one great family endeavoring to accomplish and do for mankind the greatest good possible.

Children's Book Friends

KNOW you what it is to be a child? It is to be so little that the elves can reach to whisper in your ear; it is to turn pumpkins into coaches, and mice into horses, lowness into loftiness, and nothing into everything—for each child has its fairy godmother in its own soul.—Francis Thompson.

A MOTHER observed that her little girl was playing in a different fashion from the usual. She played new games, used odd words and re-named her aunts and cousins, and her dog. At last she asked her, "Why are you playing so? Where did you learn those words and how to use them correctly? Why do you call Aunt Mary by another name and why did you change your dog's name?"

"'Cause I want to be like Betty," responded the child. "That's the way Betty does."

"And who is Betty?" asked her mother.

"Betty that Aunt Lila reads to me about. She read me a whole book about Betty and then she read it again when I asked her to and now she is reading it to me another time. I like Betty and I'm going to do what she does."

Thus do children make companions and ideals of the persons they become acquainted with through books.

Could anything emphasize better the care that should be used in selecting books that will introduce children to a worthy company? When a boy reads of noble deeds his higher nature instantly responds. He aspires to nobility in his own life. When he reads of desperado acts, such is the plasticity of the child mind, that he immediately wants to go out and play murderer and robber.

A keen, alert child is incurably, and often unconsciously, imitative. His nature takes on the characteristics of those who companion him in the mental world as well as of those who surround him in the physical. Like a little chameleon he assumes the coloring of his environment.

This is why the story of the Bible is always the book that holds first place among those to be placed in the hands of children or to be read to them. The stories of great and noble men and women, of boys and girls who have done brave deeds, who have succeeded in spite of great difficulties, will supply worthy ideals to the child reader.

There has been within recent months a movement against the fairy tales. The former plea for the multiplicity of them was that they stimulated the imagination of the child. Do they more so than the story of Columbus, of the Pilgrim fathers, of the pioneer struggles in the settling of our country, the story of Joan of Arc, the stories of the Old and New Testaments? It is doubtful. Neither, in spite of the reaction against them, would it seem wise to delete all fairy stories from the reading of children. There is little doubt that they do give an elasticity to the mind, a power of thinking beauty into the commonplace. But there are fairy stories and fairy stories, and of them all only a very few are worthy of the attention of a little child.

As carefully as a child's playfellows are selected should the stories that are to be his companions be censored. A book that has not been read by a competent adult and adjudged helpful by him should not be given to a child.

An Old Book Shop

STORY books and childhood books and books of living flame,
Books from some forgotten hand and books each heart can name—
Books of verse and history, and books of thrilling prose,
Books that are a household word, and volumes no one knows.

Books that you and I have read, while sitting side by side,
Books that failed, and other books that preached both far and wide;
Books that we were taught to lisp while on a mother's knee,
Books that tell of far-off lands that we shall never see.

Books of fact, and books that creep through fancy's vivid realm,
Books that pilot through the dark—for truth is at the helm!
Books of a forgotten past, lit with the sunset's ray,
And other newer books that tell the story of today.

Dingy shops and dingy shelves and dusty tables spread
With the books that we have loved —that, loving, we have read.
Dingy walls and dingy light that filters from the street,
But the memories and dreams that cluster here are sweet!

Medical Department for Our Missionary Enterprise

The importance to our whole Baptist missionary enterprise of keeping its personnel fit.

By Charles H. Parkes, M.D.

WE are commanded to evangelize the world for Christianity, and in obeying this command the majority do it by proxy, sending missionaries in their stead.

The two fundamental factors underlying the missionary enterprise of our denomination are: (1) A few individuals must go as missionaries; (2) the many, that is, every member of the denomination, must give of their time and money to support the few. Thus the few become the representatives of the many, and in this, as in any other contract, not only is the principal responsible for the acts of the representative, but he is responsible also for the support and welfare of the representative and for debilities incurred in line of duty. Since we invest our funds in a representative, why jeopardize our risk by making it more hazardous through neglect on our part to secure a 100 per cent representative, and through slovenliness to fail to keep him up to 100 per cent efficiency?

Our Representatives

Translating this into a-b-c terms, let us say, every Baptist has a real, substantial interest in the missionaries. To obey the Lord's command "to carry the gospel into all countries," unless some men and women become missionaries, each and every one of us would be obliged to go into "all countries" and pay his own expenses. Such a plan would be impossible, but, fortunately for us and our obligations to our church, a plan was developed whereby the gospel may be carried into all countries and each of us may participate in that work. This plan was the introduction of the organizations for missionary work both at home and abroad—one great work organized to systematize the effort by centralizing the administration, thus eliminating waste.

The organization is far from perfect, but constant improvements are being effected, and will be made in the future, to obtain the utmost from the means available.

Thus we all have our part to play—the missionary to do the actual work of evangelization; the administrator to direct the work and to keep track of what the missionary is doing; and the member of the organization (which means every one of us) to supply the enthusiasm, the moral support and the money.

The physical fitness of the missionary personnel has a direct bearing on the expense account of the organization. When we accept a missionary recruit who is physically unfit, the expectancy will be that all funds spent in his education, transportation and maintenance will be a total loss. When a missionary who enters upon the work becomes partially incapacitated in line of duty, and we fail to provide means for his repair, he becomes a partial loss. To plug this leak in our organization plan, a thoroughly efficient medical department should be established promptly.

In the establishment of this department, which is a certainty because of its vital need, let us take advantage of past experiences. Our organization has been made needlessly unwieldy by the existence of numerous divisions, or, rather, independent societies: American Baptist Home Mission Society; American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, and Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. Under existing conditions, a medical department would be indicated for each society. The establishment of so many medical departments would be better than nothing at all, but the most casual consideration would show a needless potential confusion.

Suppose we sketch the outline of an ideal medical department, taking as models the United States army, the large insurance companies, and the large industrial plants:

1. General medical director, with an office at general headquarters.
2. District medical directors.
3. Medical personnel in all the large cities.

The medical personnel in the large ciities responsible to and appointed by the district directors.

The district medical directors appointed by the general medical director and responsible to him.

The medical director appointed by the board of directors of the Northern Baptist Convention, and responsible to that board.

With such a department, the services of the best doctors would be easily obtainable, and the work systematized to eliminate ignorance, carelessness and inattention, thus promoting efficiency.

An applicant to any of the numerous societies for entrance upon the life of a missionary would need only to be referred for examination to the nearest doctor appointed for that section. Every missionary returning on leave, within a reasonably short time could be referred to one of the organization medical examiners and be given a thorough examination. If found to be below par physically, proper treatment could be recommended and instituted promptly. When a missionary returns to duty, another medical examination could be made to determine fitness, and with an established medical organization, such an examination would be made without delay.

Reports of all this work should be forwarded by the one making the examination, with recommendations, to the office of the general medical director for his action.

With such a department at the service of all the societies, it is not hard to forecast that a tremendous waste both of health and funds would be eliminated.

Perhaps it is too much to expect that so great a divergence from precedent and custom take place as a unification of the home missionary and the foreign missionary sides for any purpose. In things missionary the idea of home and foreign has been so firmly engrafted upon our mentalities that we have developed single-tracked minds when dealing with such matters. It is a strange situation and hampering to real progress.

The establishment of a medical department or a medical service department must come. It will be a new departure and will not have the handicaps of century-old habits behind it. In this one activity, why not start with the wholehearted idea of union? With one medical service department at the call of both home and foreign societies, prompt, efficient, intelligent work could be expected from that department.

For Economy and Efficiency

Suppose that in the army during the Great War the infantry had had its own medical department, the artillery its own, the air service its own, the quartermaster corps its own, and so on, throughout all branches, and that the medical service in each branch had been entirely independent of the other. Is it not clear that great confusion would have occurred in all the medical activities in the army? The high efficiency mark reached during the war, in the recruiting and training of personnel, the obtaining of supplies, the advancement in methods of sanitation, and the treatment of the sick was made possible because the medical department was under one administration, with all branches of the army going to that department for all things of a medical nature.

So, in our missionary enterprise, one medical department would be more economical, more dependable, and more efficient.

With the stimulus of the departmental pride, and the backing of the great weight of the Baptist missionary effort, it is not beyond the bounds of possibility that right within our own medical activities some great discoveries might be made in medicine to eradicate some of the ravages of disease.

The responsibility for launching and furthering this important departure should not be left to rest upon the shoulders of the officers of organizations so vitally concerned. It should be keenly urged and supported by the rank and file of Baptists, focusing to the point of a strong resolution in our next convention.

Let me ask: "Do we recognize the importance to our whole Baptist missionary enterprise of keeping its personnel fit?"

The State Conventions Hold Yearly Meetings

New York

By R. E. Farrier

ANOTHER year of our state convention has passed into history. As Dr. J. F. Vichert remarked in closing the sessions, "We are prone to consider the latest the best meeting and we think this the best, but whether it be the best or not, it certainly is the largest attended in our history."

The registry showed 1156 delegates; but there were many delegates who failed to register. Thirteen hundred would be more nearly the delegation from the churches; this number was increased by the public who attended the sessions of their choice.

Dr. Chester F. Ralston worked diligently setting up the meetings till about a week before the opening day, when his strength failed and he was obliged to return to Oberlin. He did a fine work.

On account of having the Loyalty luncheon and the Bible and Missionary Conference in connection with and a part of the convention program, and because, for the first time, there was a small fee for entertainment, it was decided not to have any registration fee for the Bible and Missionary Conference.

Monday, Oct. 22, was given over to the Loyalty luncheon and the Bible and Missionary Conference. With Mrs. Montgomery and Doctor Eubank as the speakers and under the efficient direction of Mrs. B. C. Clausen, the whole program was an inspiration and a financial success. cess.

Pastors' Conference

Tuesday was pastors' conference day, Rev. H. Clark Colebrook presiding. But the day was given up largely to speakers representing the Bible and Missionary Conference which thought prevaded all the sessions.

The speakers outside the state who brought inspiring and stirring messages were: Dr. H. F. Stilwell, Dr. F. E. Taylor, Dr. M. D. Eubank, Dr. E. W. Rafferty. Those from our own state were: Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery, Dr. F. A. Agar, Dr. J. C. Robbins, Prof. F. O. Erb, Prof. Antonio Mangano, Pres. A. H. Norton, Dr. Guy L. Brown, Dr. F. W. O'Brien, Revs. H. C. Colebrook, F. W. Tomlinson, Geo. A. Hobart, Elbert Beebe, Harry S. Myers, Dr. R. E. Farrier, Dr. E. C. Kunkle. Miss Alma Noble presided at the W. W. G. representation and Rev. Charles Briggs and Miss F. W. Tomlinson at the Sunday-school Conference.

The general expressions of the delegates pointed to the outstanding helpfulness and spiritual uplift of the devotional meetings led by Doctor Taylor and the stimulating and practical help that was given by Doctor Agar.

Doctor Norton presented Keuka College in an impressive appeal for $600.000 of added endowment, illustrating the work of the college by a moving picture. The rooms of the college are already full, though in the third year. What shall be done with next year's class?

Dr. Bernard C. Clausen's warm welcome to Syracuse and the First Church was emphasized by the cordiality and hospitality of all the Baptists.

Dr. J. F. Vichert was reelected as convention president; Dr. A. H. Norton and Mr. William Travers Jerome, Jr., as vice-presidents; Orrin R. Judd, treas.; and Frederick L. Anderson, rec. secy. All state directors were reelected.

The whole program was highly commended by the delegates. The only criticism heard was, "There is too much for any one to take it all in." Another remarked, "It is like the Northern Baptist Convention without even a whisper of discord."

Pennsylvania

By H. W. Stringer

THE sixteenth anniversary meeting of the Pennsylvania Baptist General Convention took place in Scranton, Oct. 15-18. The sessions were held in Immanuel Church, C. H. Rust, pastor.

The outstanding features of this year's convention were fine weather, large attendance, perfect harmony, good reports, addresses of high order, excellent music, delightful fellowship, the ratification of the report of the Northern Baptist Convention on our future denominational program, the alumni reunion, the laymen's banquet, the women's banquet, and the appointment of a committee of eight "to make a thorough-going study during the year 1923-1924 . . . so as to bring our denominational work in the state up to the highest possible level of efficiency....to report at the next annual meeting its findings together with recommendations in any and all points which it believes will make the work of the convention more effective."

The missionary women of the state were first on the ground and held women workers' conferences, morning, afternoon and night, on Monday, Oct. 15.

The fifty-seventh anniversary of the Ministers' Union was held in the evening, with the president, J. A. Maxwell, of Chester, in the chair. The especial feature of the meeting was an address on "The Mediating Ministry," by Carter Helm Jones, pastor of the First Church, Philadelphia. The officers elected for the ensuing year are: Pres., S. J. Arthur, Erie; vice-presidents, W. S. Dunlop of Harrisburg and B. L. C. Baer, of Scranton; secy.-treas., W. H. Stringer, of Germantown, Philadelphia.

The sessions of the convention proper began on Tuesday morning with an address of welcome by Hon. J. F. Durkan, mayor of Scranton, followed by C. H. Rust, greeting, on behalf of the Baptists of the city, the delegates from all over the state, of whom a total of 355, including representatives, enrolled. The president, Ray L. Hudson of Philadelphia, completing two years in office, made fitting response and then gave an informing address on the present status of our state work and denominational problems.

The convention sermon was preached by Rev. Abner J. Davies, pastor of the First Church, Conshohocken, from the text, Hebrews 13:8—"Jesus Christ is the same, yesterday, today, and forever."

The president gave tender expression to the sympathy of the convention for Mrs. C. H. Rust, wife of the pastor of the entertaining church, about to undergo a serious surgical operation, and the convention stood while Mrs. J. S. Wilds of Philadelphia led in prayer for her safe recovery.

The afternoon session began with the consideration of the ninety-sixth annual report of the state mission board, presented by General Secretary C. A. Soars. Before the adoption of the report, brief addresses, descriptive of their work, were given by associational missionaries and missionary pastors introduced by Doctor Soars. Mrs. Elizabeth M. Finn of Philadelphia, delivered an address on "The Church program for Its Children," bristling with good ideas. Dr. E. T. Tomlinson, executive secretary of the M. and M. B. board, spoke on "The Care of the Minister." The afternoon session closed with a devotional period, conducted by Rev. C. S. Roush, of Wilkes-Barre. The closing half-hour of each afternoon session was spent in this way and each service was a benediction to the convention.

Over the Lackawanna Trail

The convention adjourned early to permit the delegates to be taken in autos over the famous Lackawanna trail, to visit Keystone Academy at Factoryville, and inspect our Baptist school at that place. Abut 200 delegates went and were delightfully entertained at supper. At the evening session a hearty vote of thanks was passed to Principal Coe, for the courtesies shown, and the delightful supper served, by the principal, the faculty, and the student body.

A great crowd, taxing the capacity of the auditorium, was present at the evening session, the outstanding feature of which was an illustrated lecture by H. S. Meyers, of New York City, on the meetings of "The World's Baptist Alliance at Stockholm." The first speaker introduced by Vice-President C. S. Joshua, of Union City, who was in the chair, was Lady Anne Azgapetian, a native Armenian from Tiflis, who delivered an address in the interest of Near East Relief and thrilled the great congregation with her impassioned address on "The Glory of America in the Near East." The male quartette of Bucknell University Glee Club, was present at all of the evening sessions, rendering vocal and instrumental music, under the direction of Ralph F. Hertz. The quartette choir of the church also sang at the evening services. Mrs. Nathan R. Wood of Massachusetts, foreign vice president of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society delivered an address on the work that is being done by that organization

The session of Wednesday morning bristled with live addresses and dis cussions which came to a climax, after Rev. S. J. Arthur, of Erie, had rendered a plain-spoken report as chairman of the committee on social service, and Arthur C. Baldwin, of Philadelphia, had delivered a fine address on "Is Prohibition a Failure," when the convention, on motion, instructed the president and secretary to notify Governor Pinchot, that the convention, speaking for the Baptists of Pennsylvania, was back of him 100 per cent in his program of law enforcement in the state, and also instructed the resolutions committee to submit a resolution, in their report, in favor of the enforcement of the Volstead Act. Preceding this W. D. Gherky, of Philadelphia, had presented the report of the Baptist Institute for Christian Workers, prepared by C. F. Dodd, of Philadelphia, and Clayton Grinnell, the report of the Inter-Church Federation of Pennsylvania, the raising of funds for which was referred to the executive committee for consideration.

The rest of the morning session was given over to educational matters. The eighty-fourth annual report of the education board was presented by the retiring general secretary, Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser who becomes a member of the faculty at Crozer Seminary. The morning closed with three spirited addresses by C. O. Wright, director of the Y. M. C. A. at the University of Pennsylvania, on "Boys—Their Problems;" Fred B. Igler, also of the university, on "The Work of the Student Pastor," and W. A. Hill, secretary of missionary education of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention.

A "union re-union dinner" of the alumni, with their wives, of the Baptist colleges and seminaries represented at the convention, was held at noon, in the Hotel Holland with 118 guests present. J. R. Wood, of Bucknell University was toastmaster. Brief addresses were delivered by H. J. Whalen, for Colgate; I. J. Beckwith for Rochester; Rev. Herbert Agate for Brown; Pres. J. M. Wilbur for the Baptist Institute; Pres. M. J. Evans for Crozer, and Pres. E. W. Hunt for Bucknell. A rising vote of thanks was tendered to Rev. W. C. Leinbach, of Dalton, who proposed, and made all of the arrangements for, the reunion dinner.

The Women Meet

From 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. the ladies took possession of the auditorium, which they filled, for the third annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of Pennsylvania. The writer was not present, either at this session, or the missionary banquet at its close in the church parlors, but heard both events described in superlative terms. Apart from the various reports and business transacted, and the introduction of visiting missionaries, there were addresses by Mrs. H. H. Skerrett, of Philadelphia, president of the Atlantic District; Miss Ida M. Cheesebrough of the foreign society; Mrs. W. E. Chalmers, state president; and E. T. Thompson, missionary on furlough from Tokyo.

At 3:30 o'clock, the brethren who had been attending ministers' and laymen's conferences, and getting their pictures taken, returned, and the convention as a whole listened to the annual report of the board of promotion as presented by the director, W. G. Russell, followed by the report of the treasurer, Joseph W. Hill, of Philadelphia. Following the adoption of these reports, the director delivered an address on "Our Present Year's Progress."

Fear Not

By Caroline E. Grayson

"FEAR thou not, for I am with thee,
Be not thou dismayed;
I am thy God and will deliver,
Be thou not afraid."
What a comfort fills the soul
As we listen to his word;
More than all that is against us
Is the Christ our Lord!

"Fear thou not, I'm with thee alway,
I'll ne'er leave, nor thee forsake;
I will soothe thy many sorrows,
And straight paths for thee will make."
How truly blessed to abide
Beneath his shadow ever;
He that stretcheth forth his hands
Will strengthen and deliver.

"My angels shall have charge o'er thee—
In all thy ways to keep;
With long life I will satisfy—
And guard you as you sleep."
Oh, what a heritage to own;
Protector and defender!
When sin and sorrow o'er us roll
Our God will e'er deliver.

While the women's missionary banquet was taking place, the annual meeting of the Laymen's Council of Pennsylvania was being held in the Y. M. C. A., preceded by a supper, at which the forty-five brethren were the guests of E. S. Williams, of Scranton, second vice-president of the convention. Harvey Bartle, of Pittsburgh was re-elected president and Chas. H. Button, of Frankford, Philadelphia, secretary-treasurer. Three addresses were delivered. The principal address of the evening was delivered by Benjamin R. Weeks, president of Bacone Indian College, Oklahoma, who gave an account of securing gifts from wealthy Indians which had been responsible for $600,000 of the present endowment of Bacone. Bucknell University was well represented, not only by the male quartette, but the new dean, R. H. Rivenburg, successor to the late Llewelyn Phillips, was presented to the convention, and made a brief address; Joseph R. Wood, assistant to the president, delivered an address on the growth and present needs of that institution, and Prof. Ralph Hertz, director of the Glee Club, spoke of that organization as a denominational and university asset.

Election of officers on Thursday morning resulted in: Pres., John Henry Stauff, Pittsburgh; vice-pres., E. S. Williams, Scranton; W. D. Gherky and Mrs. H. H. Skerrett, Philadelphia; secy., H. W. Stringer, Philadelphia; treas., Joseph W. Hill, Philadelphia; exec. secy, C. A. Soars; director, board of promotion, W. G. Russell; gen. secy., education board, J. W. Elliott; gen. secy., state mission board, C. A. Soars. The trustees, associational and additional members of the boards, and special representatives for educational and other boards, were elected in accordance with the printed report of the committee on nominations, as submitted by the chairman, Rev. W. G. Watkins, of Scranton. The retiring president, Ray L. Hudson, was elected state representative on the General Board of Promotion.

For State Efficiency

Rev. W. C. Chappell, city mission secretary, of Pittsburgh, presented the resolution adopted by the Pittsburgh Association, in the interest of state efficiency, which was adopted by a practically unanimous vote after an amendment had passed that the committee be increased from seven to eight members, and that the retiring president, Ray L. Hudson, of Philadelphia, should be the eighth member of the committee which includes: W. C. Chappell, of Pittsburgh, chairman; Mrs. Charles E. Burke, Pittsburgh; Mrs. W. E. Chalmers, Philadelphia; Rev. W. S. Dunlop, Harrisburg; J. A. Maxwell, Chester; R. M. West, Lewisburg; W. H. Dennis, Bradford.

The morning session closed with an address by President Emory W. Hunt, of Bucknell University, on "Baptist Cooperation in Education Advancement."

In the afternoon session interest centered in the address of Dean J. F. Vichert, of Rochester, New York, chairman of the committee on future denominational program of the Northern Baptist Convention, who conducted a conference on "Our Future Denominational Program," following which the report of the special commission of twenty-five, appointed last year to take into consideration the program to follow the expiration of the New World Movement, presented by the secretary, Rev. H. W. Stringer, of Philadelphia, and which recommended the ratification of the entire report of the Northern Baptist Convention's committee, was adopted by the Pennsylvania Convention. Rev. E. T. Thompson, of Tokyo, Japan, delivered an address on "The Present Crisis in Japan."

The closing evening session of the convention began with the report of the committee on registration, adopted by a rising vote, in recognition of twelve years of faithful service by the chairman, Rev. J. H. Cooke, of Hazleton. Mrs. M. E. Bloomer, of New York City, treasurer of the Woman's Home Mission Society, gave an informing survey of the work being done in the various fields of that organization. P. H. Lerrigo, home secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, gave an address on "The World Vision at Stockholm," and described his experiences on a missionary tour in Europe last summer. Following a brief closing address by the retiring president, Ray L. Hudson, in which he summarized the impressions the convention meetings had made upon him, the benediction was pronounced by P. H. Lerrigo, and the sessions of the sixteenth annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Baptist Convention were adjourned.

Iowa

By J. O. White

THE Iowa Convention held its annual meeting with the First Church of Muscatine, Oct. 23-28. The splendid new edifice of the Baptists proved to be a good place in which to hold our sessions. Not a little of the value of the convention was due to the careful preparation of the pastor, Rev. W. H. Rogers, aided by his faithful and loyal people. After a visit with these good people it is easy to see why the Baptists are in the front ranks of the religious life in the "Pearl City."

The convention proper was preceded by the pastors' conference which proved to be one of the best ever held in Iowa. Dr. C. W. Gilkey gave two thought-provoking and heart-searching addresses. One was on "An Adequate Spiritual Dynamic." Baptists are spiritual democrats but democracy involves responsibility. Our power must be attached to a load. Great loads are a deepening sense of spiritual need, the task of living together without quarreling and the spirit of disillusionment which is manifested in the cynicisms of today. The gospel has an answer which is found in the reproduction of the life of Christ in the individual and in our organizations. His second message dealt with the problem of the present trend of literature toward religion. This proved to be a keen analysis of the character of our present literary output. Literature rather scoffs at religion than confirms it. We are in an age of dearth of real spiritual literature. Another outstanding feature of this conference was Dr. Howland Hanson's Bible expositions on Isaiah.

The convention proper opened on Tuesday evening with Vice-President J. N. Mercer of Burlington as presiding officer. The illness of President Tuthill made it impossible for him to attend the conference. An outstanding feature of the convention was the message of Dr. Curtis Lee Laws who spoke to us on nine separate occasions. His messages centered around the following thoughts: Walking with God, the Christian in his prayer life, the need for patience, the place of temptation in the Christian's life, personal holiness and the Christian life, the authority of Jesus of Nazareth, the merry heart, the psalmist's picture of a happy life, and personal worth. These messages were heart searching, and no doubt the result will be found in a deepening of the spiritual life of everyone who heard him.

Other speakers on the program were Doctor Chalmers, who stressed the matter of training. His definition for religious education is "Religious education is the introduction of control into human experience under the domination of the ideals of Jesus Christ through evangelism and training; to Christianize the habits, ideals, attitudes and skills of childhood, youth, and adults, individually and socially." Doctor Mitchell took us on a trip with him to Stockholm and made us all feel that the Alliance was one of the biggest things among the Baptists in the world for a long time. Doctor Lagerquist gave us some personal glimpses of his own home life in Sweden that stirred us deeply.

Religious education received due attention. Rev. V. N. Witter, state director of religious education, is accomplishing a great work in Iowa. He is challenging the state with a practical program. One of our great needs is that religious education in its finer and better aspects shall be included in the program of every church. Our summer assembly is aiding us in the training of leadership. There are many other churches besides Muscatine being built and others are being remodeled to meet the needs of religious education.

The religious situation amongst Iowa Baptists is a matter of deep concern to us all. The reports of the field workers were most encouraging on the whole. There was a closer insight into the actual situation than we have ever had before. The country church is one of our big problems. Following a report on the rural situation there was a season of prayer in behalf of the rural churches of our state and of their pastors. One of our problems can be briefly stated in terms of the following situation: At present there are only twelve pastors in our state who have been on the same field for five or more years. There are only thirty-three pastors in the state now that were here twelve years ago. There are only three members on our state board of managers who have served on it for twelve years or more. These facts present one of our great problems. They are startling facts and are a matter of deep concern to us all. The Baptists of our state are just beginning to realize the importance of work in student centers. We have done a little but we are far from meeting the situation. Seventeen new pastors were introduced into the state and there are at least thirteen more new ones who were not present.

"My life on the altar for Jesus,
In glad consecration I lay,
To be used when and where as he pleases,
Or just set aside, as he may.

"Take me and make me
All thou wouldst have me to be,
Fill me and use me;
Have thy way, Lord, in me."

The women's sessions were especially fine. The women of Iowa are making progress in kingdom work. Mrs. Manly spoke about breaking into the Indian home. The medical missionary in serving the needs of the child life in the home finds the avenue of approach wide open. Great enthusiasm is being shown in the Loyalty luncheons and in the preparations for the Bible and Missionary conference to be held in Des Moines, Nov. 12-14. Mrs. Leacock of Chicago led the women into the centers of Christianization and gave them a glimpse of the needs, problems, and accomplishments of these centers. They are oases in desert spots of American civilization. Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Manly led us all into the inner life of the Indian home and in dialog form presented one of the most powerful missionary appeals that Iowa Baptists have ever heard.

The young people's sessions were an inspiration to everyone. Rev. J. O. White of Indianola, state president of young people's work, presided at the young people's banquet, which was a time of fellowship and inspiration. Rev. L. H. Koehler of Normal, Ill., gave a challenging message to young people on Sunday afternoon along the lines of preparation for kingdom service. Between the enlistment and the field of action is the training center. Soldiers had to pass through it; Christian soldiers must do the same. He gave an appeal for life service which resulted in new recruits for life service work. The young people's meeting on Sunday evening was a time of strengthening the ties of Christian fellowship. Young people's work is one of the going phases of Baptist work in Iowa. Our officers are alive to their opportunities.

The Laymen

The laymen of our churches are coming into a deepened sense of their responsibilities. They held a great banquet and had the privilege of listening to several good messages filled with wit and humor and solid meat. Among the speakers was J. O. Jasperson, executive secretary of National Council of Northern Baptist Laymen. He brought an encouraging message which challenged every layman to go back to his local church and do the work of the King's business in such a way that the church might be a blessing to all men. Surely a new day in laymen's work is at hand.

The eighty-second annual convention came to a close on Sunday evening, Oct. 28, Dr. Laws bringing the final message. The spirit of fellowship was splendid throughout the convention, despite some newspaper reports to the contrary. It was undoubtedly one of the finest conventions held for several years. With this spirit of good-will prevailing our state Baptists are sure to make a marked progress in the next few years. We are on the way for better things.

Our Junior Constituency

By Arnold Look

How to interest and hold young people and children is a problem for which the church has been unable to find any generally adequate solution. With rare exception, the mature membership of a a church can be definitely relied upon, but the "teen" age youngster seems to be an uncertain factor. In this critical adolescent period when over 80 per cent of church membership is gained, and when, too, over 70 per cent of all crimes are committed, the church faces its most vital challenge. Which shall the boy and girl be, Christian or criminal?

To a certain extent every church must work out its own salvation in winning the youth of the community to Christ, but in so doing the experience of other churches may be of great assistance. The plans which follow have been tried out by the Upland Baptist Church, Pa., with at least a fair degree of success.

The Junior Church

A list of the names of children between the age of four and fourteen was collected from the Sunday-school and daily vacation Bible school enrolment for the past year. Over 150 names were thus secured of children who were not connected with any other church and who might ordinarily be expected to attend the Baptist church. Investigation revealed that less than a dozen of these were regular attendants at church while mosf of them never attended church at all. It was therefore decided to organize a junior church to be held every Sunday evening in the Sunday-school auditorium at the same hour as the evening service, under the direction of a junior pastor, a pianist and a song leader. Parents were urged to bring their children to church, leave them at the junior church and call for them there at the close of the regular evening service.

The junior service is a shortened church service specially adapted to children with a children's sermon, stereopticon pictures presenting Bible or missionary material and plenty of singing, using illustrated hymn slides. The result has been that about 100 children who did not go to church are present every Sunday evening and we are just beginning to realize the possibilities of religious education and devotional training which the junior church affords. We are fortunate in having a Sunday-school auditorium entirely separated from the church and the assistance of a trained leader from Crozer Seminary, but with some modifications the plan can be carried out by the average church with equal success. Slides can be secured from the state office of the Board of Promotion, and the set featuring the life of the Mono Indians, for example, will attract every boy in town.

The Junior B. Y. P. U.

Another plan for young people's work was carried out by reorganizing the junior B. Y. P. U. into two sessions. The first session is general in nature and corresponds to the conventional junior B. Y. P. U. program. The second session is in charge of the members of the senior B. Y. P. U. who teach graded material to classes divided not according to age but according to public-school grade. Outside of doubling attendance at the junior union, two advantages of the plan have been marked. First, the children are given an additional period of systematic religious education in place of an often haphazard program of miscellaneous stories. Second, nearly all the older young people of ability who were not already employed as teachers in the Sunday school have been given definite religious work to do.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 25

CHRISTIANS CALLED TO BE MISSIONARIES

Lesson: John 17:18; Matt. 28:16-20; Acts 1:6-8

Golden Text: Matthew 28:19

Introductory

John 17 is the record of Christ's great intercessory prayer for his disciples, for the world and for himself. The verses from Matthew have for a background the meeting of Jesus with his disciples after his resurrection at which time he gives them the Great Commission. The setting of the third selection is on the Mount of Olives, near Bethany.

The Lesson

"As thou didst send me . . . even so sent I them into the world"—volumes might be written and mortal tongue exhausted in explanation of the call of a Christian, but nothing could be added to this brief summary of Christ's. It is all there—as he was sent, so we, his disciples, are sent.

The eleven disciples had gone into Galilee to the mountain where Jesus had appointed them, and here he came unto them. There were probably many others assembled with the eleven—some give the number as 500. The disciples worshiped him, but some among these outsiders doubted. At this meeting Jesus told them of his universal dominion—"all authority has been given unto me in heaven and on earth." Then comes the Great Commission and the sustaining words, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

They had assembled on the Mount of Olives to meet Jesus and the question arose, "Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom of Israel?" "It is hard for you to know times or seasons which the Father hath set within his own authority," is the comprehending answer of Jesus—some day the kingdom will be restored, though not in the material sense they have in mind. Following came the promise of power and again the commission—"ye shall be my witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Leading Thoughts

1. The man who truly believes in God is filled with desire to have others know him. 2. He who tests his life by the Christ's in every thought and act is a continual witness. 3. "The missionary enterprise is not the church's afterthought; it is Christ's forethought."—Henry Van Dyke.

Something Different

Something different were the results attained by the program committee of the W. W. G. at Ypsilanti, Mich., when the chairman, Miss Bessie Foley, worked out the following plan: From letters reports and pictures appearing in Missions the last year, and written by guild members on many and diversified topics and from fields all over the world, the interesting matter was taken and rewritten as personal messages from the guild about which the item was written to the individual members of the Ypsilanti society, making fifteen letters in all. One of the girls, as postman, delivered these rewritten letters to the membership assembled, and each girl read her missive to the entire group, exhibiting the clipped pictures which had been attached as illustrations. In some cases an added note directed the reader to take a special part on the program in song, or with instrument, thus interspersing the reading of the letters with a program of music, vocal and instrumental. Miss Margaret Gotts is president of this guild at Ypsilanti and Mrs. Clarence S. Burns, councilor.

The commission on recruiting for the ministry reported to the National Council of Congregational Churches that fully one-fourth of the churches of the country are pastorless. When the commission began its study in 1919, the ministers in active service numbered 3400 or about 700 less than in 1914. There are today 1300 pastorless churches. Last year there were 107 men ordained and their eight theological seminaries had a total of 119 students. The commission declared that since the churches were not producing the men in sufficient numbers to meet the need of the churches, the churches were turning to other sources for them. Many of the pastors thus secured were poorly equipped for work.

The House with a Book in It

(Children's Book Week, November 11)

SHE smiled.

It was the kind of a smile known officially as an "up-the-sleeve" variety, owing to the fact that the two young ladies bent on buying a wedding present for a third young lady were right at her elbow, and it would hardly have been polite to laugh outright when one of the shoppers cried to the other: "Oh, Mable, don't buy her a book! She's got a book!"

She's got a book—one! Just one. You wondered what that book was which was considered all-sufficient for the starting of a home. Was it biography? How some one else actually faced life? Was it fiction? How some one else lived happily ever after? Or was it, perhaps, a cook book, telling explicitly how you might face chops and steaks and carrots and beets—and live?

Mrs. Hathaway smiled.

One book! It was so ridiculously inadequate, whatever it was.

And then, suddenly, she frowned.

"I am doing that very thing, myself," she gasped, as she remembered the three children in her little household, and she providing no mental nourishment for them. "I clothe their bodies, I feed their stomachs, I furnish their home, but the insides of their precious invaluable little minds I neither clothe nor feed nor furnish. Yet they've got to live with those minds all the rest of their lives! They've got to grow old with those minds! No matter where they go when they grow up it's their minds that will be almost the most important thing in life to them, and I'm leaving that mind to hired schoolteachers, well-trained women every one of them, but with dozens of other boys and girls to care for, and of course they haven't the ideals I have for my children—they can't possibly know what little visions I'm painting of my particular family, grown-up, useful, dependable—Um! What a frightfully single-book-track mind I've had."

And the moral of that is that she began a silent hunt for some of the best books which a Baptist mother can give to girls and boys. Possibly you—mother, or grandmother, or aunt, or older sister, or "just" a friend to some child—would like to have such a list on hand to file away in that special out-of-the-way spot where lists do get themselves filed for future use! Every one of these books, we know for a fact, is excellent in its way.

For Boys, 10-16:

"The Book of Missionary Heroes" (Doran) by Basil Mathews. Surely there never were men like these men! Any boy will have his enthusiasm fired by their bravery in the face of danger and difficulty.

"The Life of John, Jr., Paton," by Paton (Doran). Full of thrilling adventures of this hero to the cannibals of the South Sea Islands.

"Judson, The Pioneer," the wonderful story of Adoniram Judson in Burma.

"Livingstone, The Path-Finder;" the lion on the cover whets the appetite for the contents!

"Uganda's White Man of Work," (Fahs) the story of Alexander Mackay, a Jack-of-all-trades in Africa.

"The Black-Bearded Barbarian," (Keith) the story of George Mackay in Formoso.

"Do You Know Them?" by Miss Parsons (Revell) a collection of thirty-five brief lives of favorite authors and heroes about whom our boys and girls will be interested to know more.

"Jungle Tales," and "More Jungle Tales," by A. E. Musser (Doran) are really thrilling true stories of modern life in India, the kind that make a boy's hair stand up!

"Captain Pluck," by Mrs. Mullins (Doran) is a splendid story of an American boy's adventures in life—a tale to be followed breathlessly, and remembered.

For Girls (10-16):

"Ann of Ava," by Ethel Hubbard, the matchless story of Ann Hasseltine Judson's bravery in Burma.

"The White Queen of Okogong," by Livingstone (Doran), is another unforgettable biography of a Scotch lassie, quiet, timid, who braved the depths of Africa with the strength of ten.

"Bells of the Blue Pagoda," Jean Cochrane (Westminster Press)—a story of life in China, with delightful local color and charm throughout.

"Through Judy's Eyes," by our own Miss Vickland of Assam, who wrote this interesting story of girls in Assam and dedicated the book to the Baptist girls in the World Wide Guild!

For sheer fun and amusement:

"Let's Play," by Edna Geister (Doran) gives numberless games that are fascinating fun for both small and large groups.

"The Land of Punch and Judy," by Mary Stewart (Revell) is a charming set of puppet plays for children to give—they are fun to present and fun to watch.

"Fun, Folk and Fairy Tales" (Revell) are stories that has been tested and tried, and proved as "best" during ten years of story-telling in the Junior Chautauqua programs, which have had such a popularity north, south, east and west, over our country in all sorts of communities.

Bible Stories:

"Aunt Charlotte's Stories of Bible History" (by Charlotte M. Younge) for ages 5 to 8.

"Old, Old Tales from the Old, Old Book" (by Nora Archibald Smith). Old Testament stories for ages 8 to 12.

"When the King Came" (by Dean Hodges). The life of Christ, for ages 8 to 12.

"Stoke's Wonder Book of the Bible" (by Helen Ward Banks). Ages 8 to 14.

The above books are merely suggestive of many others along their several lines. Where the publisher is not mentioned, these books can be ordered through our own American Baptist Publication Society.

The Only Magazine for Baptist Boys and Girls.

Among all your favorite dreams about a Certain Child is there not included at least one truly Christian dream of that Certain Child loving his world and knowing his world and helping his world in a fashion which you yourself have never known quite how to manage, adequately?

Loving—knowing—helping—how are such qualities aroused? The answer is: Stories!

Stories of adventure—true, imaginary, vivid, courageous, gripping, inescapable. Stories to be built into the very warp and woof of impressionable young minds. Stories of other children, children whose skins are brown—whose skins are black—whose skins are yellow. Stories of every-day little brown feelings, every-day little black longings, every-day little yellow lives. Stories to make the ends of the earth come to that Certain Child's front doorstep once a month in the form of an attractive little magazine. Stories to make that Certain Child grow up versed in all the lore of the world's habits, in all the lure of the world's call. Is there any dream for that Certain Child of yours more Christian than this?

Yet, for a mere dollar and a half, you can help make that dream come true. The answer is, of course—"EVERYLAND."

There is no other magazine for boys and girls with a plan so beautiful and a result so enjoyable. The fact that our own Mrs. Peabody edits it, insures a charm and a sanity as well as a definite religious atmosphere in which any boy or girl can breathe deep, and cry for "more."

There is a delectable little Everyland exchange department in one section of the magazine each month, in charge of Mrs. E. C. Cronk. She always has the most original devices for drawing out the skill of the boys and girls themselves, but perhaps the most interesting part to grown-ups (especially to prospective subscribers such as yourself!) is the column of letters in which the enthusiasm of the Everylanders for their precious magazine bubbles over into little oft-repeated but genuine phrases: "I can't wait for it to come," "I do just love it, every word, but the part I love best is"—Oh, yes, they know just what they like best, and why!

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Surely you are already putting it at the top of your Christmas list for that Certain Child, and also for that Other Child whose parents are the absorbed, visionless, passionless Christians, whose only apparent interest in their child centers in stomach, tonsils, apparel and dancing school.

Besides the splendid advantages of the magazine as a builder of world friendships there is the added niceness for the subscriber of premiums, for with each subscription (new or renewal) comes the privilege of securing free a paper-covered copy of any of the new mission textbooks—"Creative Forces in Japan," "The Leaven in Japan," "The Debt Eternal," "The Child and America's Future," "The Honorable Japanese Fan." Or, for two subscriptions, you can secure a cloth-covered copy of one of these books and also of "Taro," a picturesque Japanese story for a child of primary age.

All orders should be sent to Miss M. H. Leavis, Everyland, West Medford, Mass. In conclusion may we add this word: What lovelier gift can you make in the name of him who was mankind's first Christmas present than to put into the heart of a Certain Child a glimpse, month by month, of "peace on earth, good-will to men," operating among the nations?

Food For Thought

(A Fairy Story for Children's Book Week.)

By Peggy

THERE was a revolution going on in the library—a bloodless one, to be sure, but really frightful in its consequences! It all began at 2 a. m., that dire and fateful hour when there is generally a pretty free frisking around among all household furniture, due to the fact that the staid human owners are sleeping soberly. But this was not like the usual rumpus; this was no mere "hop" when the tables stretched their stiff legs and the parlor clock clapped its hands and made a face! No, this time (November 10 was the date) it was the Books who had gone on strike. It was pretty bad! Really it was, for of course you realize that books are "cramful" of words, and the way they began juggling those words, hurling them back and forth, was really amazing. Shocking, too.

For all the books that had foot-notes for instance, stuck them out and simply demanded shoes and stockings. "Who ever heard of going barefoot in the winter?" they asked pathetically. But it was all put on, for who ever heard of anything so utterly silly as their request? Unless it was the wail set up by the books that had appendices.

"When Joan had an appendix they took her to a hospital, and there was a very expensive doctor who took it out of her. And then there was an expensive nurse to sit beside her. One nurse by day, and another nurse by night. Here are six of us, each with an appendix! We want a surgeon, we demand a hospital, we insist on a nurse, so that we can get rid of this dangerous thing inside us."

"Nonsense! Nonsense!" snapped the Fairy-Who-Fixes-Things, putting her foot down hard, for this was all quite absurd. "Foot-notes," she ordered, "toe the margin instantly! And every book with an appendix please turn over a new leaf, for I should think you would realize what a distinct honor it is to have one. Surely you know that you aren't human enough that you should ever have indigestion or appendicitis."

But there was oh! such grumbling, and oh! such quarreling. The Fairy was almost in despair, until she thought of a certain plan.

"Listen, my dears," she called. "Let's have a feast. Now of course you realize that every book is really like a little pantry with food for thought stored on its shelves. So spread out that food, and let's invite the children to a dream feast, then we'll see which books agree with boys and girls the best."

This was a capital plan, and the books had a lively time setting forth a square meal for the children. When it was all prepared the Fairy-Who-Fixes-Things waved her wand over the sleeping children and they instantly scrambled to their feet, hungry as bears. You never saw anything so fascinating as the display before their astonished eyes, for various books had used their blank pages to make little placards which read:

"Digest us, and we will be to you like, a magic carpet wafting you to Fairyland—" and there was "Alice in Wonderland," "Anderson's Fairy Tales" and "Arabian Nights!" Like the White Rabbit, the children might have cried "O, my ears and whiskers!" as they frisked off into wonderland after a taste of the first page!

"Digest us, and we will be to you like seven league boots to carry you backward into the dim myths of ancient Greece"—and there was "The Wonder Book" and "Tanglewood Tales."

"Eat us, oh boys and girls, and you will have invisible playmates on every rainy day"—these books were (but surely you have guessed them!) "Little Women" and "Little Men."

"Nibble at us and you can have a zoo by you"—of course these books were "Black Beauty," "Beautiful Joe," "First and Second Jungle Books," "Just So Stories."

"Chew us, and you'll have a train of thought for every deed you perform"—this book was Aesop's Fables!

There were a great many others but none of the girls and none of the boys reached the other tables, for just as they had digested the last fable the first streak of dawn glinted through the curtains. Instantly every book hopped back into its stated place on the bookshelf, and even the Fairy-Who-Fixes-Things curled up in the fringe of the hearth-rug, for sunlight and morning are no time for Books to be holding feasts. Yet would you believe it? The boys and girls who had read those books looked at one another whispering: "We really have had food for thought, though, haven't we?" And in case any Young Reserve doesn't believe it, you can read these very same books for yourselves in your public library and prove it! For that's why we have Children's Book Week starting November 11—to give us food for thought.

The young people's rally at the Massachusetts State Convention was full of interest. Many societies came with their banners, songs and yells. President Marden arranged for each society to give voice to its self-gratulation. Mr. Albert P. Briggs of Cambridge was musical director. There were echoes from the Des Moines and Boston conventions; banners were awarded the society sending 100 per cent of its membership, distance considered; new societies organized since the last convention were recognized; officers were elected and Dr. Owen C. Brown of Philadelphia gave an inspiring address.

Topic for November 24

WHAT WE THANK GOD FOR
Ps. 146:1-10

Do we? Let's change it from the assertive to the inquisitive. Put the "for" at the beginning and insert the "do" in capital letters. For what DO we thank God?

"Thanks giving is thanks-living," as some one has well said. We are judged more by how we live than what we say. Are we living our "thanks"? How readily will the thoughts of those who attend the meeting for this last Sunday in November turn to the coming feast day, a truly American day. Thanks-feeling will be in the air as we anticipate this day of days. Suppose you capitalize on that feeling and turn it into expression. For what should we thank God?

As a means of inducing your members to give expression to their feelings, direct the discussion along these three lines: the reason for thanks giving, the manner of thanks giving and the things for thanks giving.

Why give thanks? Reflect for a moment. For how much of what we enjoy in life are we really responsible? Suppose you make a list of the things you enjoy and which come through your own efforts. Make another list of things you enjoy and which come through the efforts of others. Writer's cramp will come from making the second list rather than the first. James 1:17; I Cor. 6:19-20.

How give thanks? Does giving thanks come naturally, easily? Consider the child in the home. When he first begins to talk he is trained to say "thank you." Day by day his parents remind him of that necessary "thank you." Reflect upon how long it takes the child to acquire the habit of giving thanks. We are still children in the matter of expressing gratitude. We have to be reminded of the need.

We are not limited in the manner of giving thanks. "Actions sometimes speak louder than words." The most direct way to thank God is in our prayers. Let our prayers be more than a petition —a request for something. Let them express gratitude—for things we have. Matt. 11:41.

To help those around us who have some special need is another and effective way to thank God for what we have. Did not Christ say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me"? Many there are less fortunate than we. To help them is to express gratitude to God. James 2:14-18.

We are all God's children. In doing for one another we are doing for him. Let us, therefore, also show our gratitude —show it abundantly—to those who help and aid us. Upon many we are dependent for our joys of life. Should we not acknowledge it? Matt. 7:12.

For what give thanks? The difficulty here will not be a dearth of things for which to be thankful. There are so many that for a moment we will seem bewildered. Here are a few suggestions for expressing gratitude: Our nation, the outgrowth of that small company who through all their hardship and suffering had such gratitude to God that they proclaimed the first Thanksgiving Day; our homes, which through their spirit of love and sacrifice have given us so many opportunities in life; our schools, in which we have been and are being trained to appreciate the joy of living; yes, and for our church, in whose Bible school and young people's meetings so many of us have been nurtured and made to know more fully the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man and the Saviourhood of Jesus Christ.

Contrast is a great means of discovering blessings. Contrast our nation, our homes, our schools and our churches with what the world affords young people elsewhere and we will be overflowing with the spirit of gratitude.

Suggestions for the Meeting.

Thanks living which makes thanks giving is a result of atmosphere. As a means of making those who attend the meeting feel conscious of how an inward condition creates an atmosphere, place in the room (where your meeting will be held) a few hours before the meeting is called, a half dozen apples. When the meeting opens the room will be filled with the odor of apples which can be used as an object lession.

As a part of your program read the first proclamation which can be found on page forty-four in the back of the American Youth Hymnal. If you do not have this hymnal this proclamation can doubtless be found in your local library or in some history or in your encyclopedia. Also read President Coolidge's proclamation which appears in the papers the preceding week.

As a means of leading your members into a general discussion you might hand out slips of paper in the beginning of the meeting and in the early part ask each one to write five things for which he is thankful. Later in the meeting, invite each one to speak on one or more of the five things he has written. You might also later collect these lists and have two or three members compare them and see how many things are voted for and what receives the most votes. Inform the meeting of the results just before closing.

Something Done or Doing

"One of the neatest B. Y. P. U. year books ever received at our office" says the Ohio Baptist, and we heartily concur in their opinion, "is that of the union of the First Church, Hamilton. Mr. Don Hemminger, the retiring president, and his helpers deserve credit for this beautiful forty-page manual in gray blue covers. It contains among many other good things, a fine poem, 'Consecration,' 'Last Will and Testament of the Officers of the Senior B. Y. P. U., Year 1922-23,' a poem and an article, 'Our Own B. Y. P. U.,' by Rev. G. H. Young and other articles, 'History of Our B. Y. P. U.,' 'How Christian Brotherhood Leads to Cooperation,' 'Tithing,' 'Memories that Bless,' 'Social Progress,' and a prophecy, 'Imagination vs. Experience.' A list of charter members is given and also a list of present members, and a detailed treasurer's report. The editors and all who have made the book possible, are certainly to be congratulated. It was fine to dedicate it to the memory of those who have made the Hamilton Church what it is, and who have gone home to the Father's house."

The B. Y. P. U. of Chattanooga and suburbs is hard at work on its winter program. Miss Robinson, secretary, writes of the work as follows: "We have organized B. Y. P. U.'s throughout the city where it is possible as well as in our suburbs. We have a field worker who makes visits to the B. Y. P. U.'s of our city and suburbs and where the interest of the B. Y. P. U. is about to die out, he gets up a program and takes it to such a B. Y. P. U. and in this way tries to revive the interest, always keeping this particular union in mind and visiting it often, boosting it in every way possible. We have found this to be a great help. Another work we have started is a personal service club which was organized by the First Baptist B. Y. P. U. of our city. The object of this club is to win new souls for Christ, also to gain back the members who once were Christians but who have drifted away. Street meetings are being held every Saturday night on a corner of our main down-town street.

The regular, but not usual, monthly inspirational and social meeting of the Columbia B. Y. P. U. Federation will be held Nov. 20, in the Fifth Baptist Church. At these meetings no offerings are taken up, but refreshments are served. Last May when Doctor Clausen of Syracuse came there were 800 present. It is hoped to greet 800 again this month.

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

A Great Suburban Event

Just as I am writing there is beginning in the Washington Street Church in Lynn, the Massachusetts state meetings. Lynn is practically in Boston suburbs, and is right in touch with the densely populated sections of the state where hundreds of strong churches are located. It is expected on this account to be a record meeting. Also because of the present remarkable efficiency in the planning and pushing of our Baptist enterprises in Massachusetts.

We are getting the benefit of Dr. Heath's fine leadership. It is wise, earnest, practically competent, and his rich experience in large service, gives a noble guidance and backing to an unusually capable staff of helpers. It is surprising how sometimes difficult and discouraging developments in our denominational tasks have been met, and overcome, and a situation prevented that might seriously have put us back. The confidence that we have in the men at headquarters in the Ford Building will prove a large factor in the success of our state meetings at Lynn. The year's results are encouraging, and the promise of better things to come is welcome and inspiring.

Our Churches in Lynn

We have some strong ones. Of course the three leaders are Washington Street, First Church, and East Church. Essex Street and Austin Square are both vigorously working their fields, and with good promise. Rev. Chester J. Underhill is pastor at Washington Street. This church has a noble modern plant, superbly located, and a minister of initiative and soldierly vigor. He came to them from the "West front" with a record of service there of which all of us are proud.

At the First Church is Rev. Eben F. Francis, one of the many "Francis brothers" who punctuate our Baptist ministry all the way from the California coast to Boston Bay. Pastor Francis is a fruitful leader with all the attractive qualities of ministerial character. Dr. Arthur E. Harriman at the East Church, has for over twenty years been one of the institutions of the city. Lynn and Harriman are synonomous terms. But what is this we are hearing? That the Salem Church of New Rochelle, N. Y., has called him! We thought it would take an earthquake to dislodge Harriman from the East Church. But he has accepted! Alas, alas!

Pastor T. L. Cain of Essex Street, has pluckily held his post for seven years, and has won hearts and good confidence. Nearly 500 members, and more are coming. Lynn is one of the great "shoe towns." It is rich in a fine quality of factory people who make the best sort of church helpers, and also in throngs of young people who bring their wealth of hope and enthusiasm to the churches. They will all open their arms to the state meetings with eager expectation.

Is This Prophetic?

Something has happened at Quincy under the leadership of Pastor H. F. Widen that compels attention, and raises an interesting question: The organic union of a Swedish, and an English-speaking church into the Central Baptist Church of Quincy. So far the union succeeds, and is being consolidated by a joint building project. Both properties are merged, and the united church has laid the corner-stone of a new modern plant for worship and work, right at the heart of things in the city.

In their temporary meeting place, while their edifice is building, their plan calls for a service in Swedish on Sunday morning, and the other services in English. The Swedish Church was organized in 1885 with eight members, and had grown to 160. The Calvary Church was organized in 1889 with twelve members, and had become 130. They had struggled apart, now they struggle together with double strength, about 300 members, and with double promise and expectation. They have a leader with a vision, who is strong both in Swedish and in English. They have $22,000 cash in hand, and plenty of willing hearts. This is the question raised: Has Pastor Widen struck the ultimate trail for all of our foreign-speaking churches? Certainly it looks like it. The scandal of Protestantism is in splitting itself up into weak churches. Its wisdom will come when it unites them for strength and for power to achieve.

Victory Volts from the Bible and Missionary Conferences

These high voltage messages concerning the success of the Bible and Missionary conferences have come to Dr. W. H. Bowler, national director of conferences, from places where these great missionary meetings are already over, or about to begin:

The Tired and the Tiresome

Dr. James L. Barton's speech at the national Congregational assembly at Springfield, struck a welcome note on church unity. Where that desirable end is possible, he and his brethren are ready for it. But he well disposed of the tiresome Episcopalian overtures that are always the same, and always impossible. Here is the "nub" of his statement: "Any movement for reunion must meet us on the level. We shall assume no spirit of arrogance or superiority in dealing with others. Nor can we admit any affirmation or implication that acknowledges their superiority over us."

We have been saying "amen" to that sort of talk for some time. Our friends of the "rubric" and the "succession" ought to spare us their condescending approaches. Why not try them on the church of Rome?

The "Hub" a Tough Proposition

With uneven excellence, and good congregations, the noon-day addresses at King's Chapel continue. Some speakers hit the mark with palpable effect. Others, new and revolutionary in other latitudes, seem rather shopworn here. Evidently they forget that the "Hub" has long been an experimenting station for religious and social explosives. Sometimes a man who is tremendous in his particular line elsewhere, seems like a last year's almanac in Boston. One eloquent pulpiteer came here, a few years ago, vaunting that he came to Boston to do three things—kill evolution, rip up Unitarianism, and demolish Charles W. Eliot. He was several years at his job, but hardly anybody outside of his own church knew it. Evolution was not even "scotched," Unitarianism has since grown mildly revivalistic, and President Eliot is wearing on his young, nonogenarian brow, more laurels than ever! Boston is a hard nut, and it takes more than hot air to crack it.

Crisis in Public Education

We are facing something critical in our educational task. Each mayor is ambitious to keep down the tax rate. But sentiment sometimes "puts him to his trumps." When that sentiment gets into a "referendum," the tax rate is threatened, and more besides. The last wave of sentiment is a demand for equal pay for men and women teachers, and we are going to vote on it. At the "top," the sentiment has gotten into cold figures. It will take $1,500,000 to do it, and since increasing the tax rate is out of the question, our school committee warns us that the money must come out of the salaries of the men teachers.

It is an interesting fact that fifty years ago, one out of every two of our teachers was a man. Now one out of ten is the proportion. What will be the proportion of men teachers, who have families to support, after their salaries have been shaved down for the benefit of the teaching spinsters? Of course "referendum" is now a fashionable indulgence, but what of this one that promises to put public education entirely in the hands of women? It is a good time to "stop, look and listen."

Is It a New Peril?

Or is it an old one newly conceived? One of the great religious journals has a striking editorial on the "Peril of Oratory." It claims that oratory "can only be indulged at great risks; that the orator can rise high, and sink very low." It is really the old Grecian conviction come back again. Protestantism has let the orator loose. How many have come to agree with the editorial when it says that "the church may keep this priceless treasure only at the hazard of untold loss?" Sometimes when the "sacred orator" becomes an amplifier of exaggerated excitation, we recall the melancholy note of Thomas Carlyle: "It's a sair sicht when folks get into a pulpit who owt to be in a circus!"

Philadelphia Letter

By Arthur C. Baldwin

The Missionary and Bible Conference was held Nov. 5 to 7. Rev. Floyd L. Carr has been doing a fine piece of work in setting up the conference. Immediately following the conference, Secretary Russell with a small team holds conferences in six centers up state. Behind all this stirring and pleading stand two facts that ought to come home to every Baptist heart. The first is a debt, the largest and most burdensome that the denomination has had in its history. The second is the fact that there are subscriptions sufficient to cover all our debts, pay all our current expenses and leave millions of dollars in the treasury. The debts are not here because the societies went into unauthorized expenditures. When we pledged the money, they had a right to believe we meant it. I wish, and I have said this to my own church, that every church would underwrite the pledges it made to the New World Movement and make good on them this year.

The number of baptisms reported at the Philadelphia Association during the first week of October was 1490. While this number is gratifying, there is cause for serious thought in the fact that it represents but one baptism to every twenty-nine people during the year. I note that in the annual report of our State Mission Society there are twelve baptisms reported for every missionary pastor in the state. When we consider that the mission churchs have an average membership of sixty, this means a baptism for every five members. If the Philadelphia churches had been similarly successful we should report 8,600 baptisms instead of 1,490. The problem of church life in the cities persists.

Recognition services are reported at the Hebron Church, welcoming the new pastor, Rev. John H. Blair; at Bethlehem Church, welcoming Rev. Norman F. Douty; at Manatu Church, Rev. J. Havergal Sheppard.

On the first Tuesday of November this city will elect a new mayor and a council that will serve for four years. I wish that I could report stirring political meetings, energetic efforts for reform, processions and red-fire, and all the other things that betoken immense popular interest. Instead, all is as peaceful and quiet as a summer day. The new mayor, a machine man, and the council, nineteen out of the twenty names to be reelected, machine men, will be elected without opposition. In the coming four years immense sums, aggregating perhaps $100,000,000 are to be spent on subways and a new water supply; and all this is to be put into the hands of men at whom big business would not look to hold a minor office. 400,000 qualified voters were not interested enough this fall to register their names. They have left democracy to care for itself; and less than the number who failed to register will elect the officers who are to handle these immense sums. Why do we do it? Every one knows that maladministration, with dirty streets, a lax police administration, and waste and inefficiency everywhere, affects the well being of every man, woman and child among us. What would Jesus do—he who had compassion among the multitudes? Some of us perhaps are too busy looking up into the heavens for his coming to see what is needed down here. Others of us are simply too busy with other things. But it is all wrong. There is some relation between churches that do not function evangelistically and a religious sentiment that counts for nothing at the polls and for good government.

There are some encouraging signs, however. The papers are reporting a great movement among the churches for law enforcement. In Frankford, in North Philadelphia, in West Philadelphia, mass movements among the churches are in evidence. The open saloon, the public dance hall and vice conditions are arousing the people. The Church Federation is pushing a "Wardens of the Ward" movement. Governor Pinchot's campaign is awakening the church element. We are with him, while the Washington papers are talking about politics and the influence of Pinchot's attack upon his political fortunes. We are thinking of the business in hand, which is to stop this open defiance of constitutional law. If a move to do the thing that is self-evidently right will help Governor Pinchot in politics, well and good. In the meantime the feeling here among church folk is that we must get busy. Perhaps there will be a relation between this aroused church and public conscience against the saloon and the seeming indifference of the church to other political matters. On the whole I feel encouraged, for when the American people are convinced that a thing is wrong, no matter what it is, that thing will have to go.

Contai News Letter

Dear friends at home

We are glad for the opportunity to have another little chat with you. The first of June this year was extremely hot. It seemed as though the country was heated "seven times more than it was wont to be heated." The hinges on our American gold-medal camp cot were so hot at noon-time that we could hardly bear our hands on them. The butter in our lunch basket became liquid. Our eyes and cheeks burned just as they do at the time of high fever. In one house where we stayed, there was about a foot of space between the thatch and the top of the mud-plastered bamboo wall. Through this gap the burning air poured in like lava. This made life too interesting for the spiders on the ceiling so they fell on the white man below giving him a sting of assuring welcome.

Last Sunday was a special Hindu feast day in honor of the goddess, the full moon. The bazaar was considerably brightened by sellers of little armlets of green, yellow, red and purple tufts of hemp and cotton. Wear one of them above your elbow and the Hindu priest will bless you saying, "May you walk in a truthful path, be rich and live forever." Then give him some money and he will go away with a smile.

Even in India, elopement appears attractive. A man who had supported a girl from infancy was opposed to her marriage. He accused his neighbors of encouraging her in her desire to elope, so the two families were not on speaking terms. After much prayer, they were brought together. The accused man made this statement, "'Tis true, your girl came to me one hour after dark and wanted me to help her to elope. I forbade her. Had it not been for me, she would have run away." When the facts were known, there was a speedy reconciliation with a praising of God.

In a Christian funeral recently, we saw an interesting practical custom. In the grave above the body a foot thickness of earth was thrown. Above this was strewn a two-foot thickness of thorn-bushes. Then the grave was filled and rounded over. The thorns prevent the body from being pulled from the grave by the jackals.

You may be interested in this other bit of local color. One day after a meal, the uneaten rice was thrown out. It spread over a nest of little yellow ants. A neighboring dog was suffering with "an itching stomach" which is one of the expressions here for hunger. While the dog was devouring the rice the ants were preparing to enjoy his blood. As a result, suddenly the dog began to dance in great glee, then off he shot trying to shake off the ants. Again he returned, ate and danced to the great enjoyment of the onlookers. A personal experience with ants a few Sundays ago taught me a new way of gaining the attention of my audience. I had just started my talk, when I discovered that ants had taken generous possession of my pedal extremities. The stinging was so severe that a clog-dance was irresistible. The full attention of the congregation was immediately obtained. Of one thing we are quite sure, all enjoyed the introduction immensely.

Hindu beliefs often cling to the minds of new Christians. An old witch found Jesus and is trying to follow his will. Had it not been for the refuge she found in the mission house, she would have been murdered and thrown into the river. The other day she was meditating aloud and said, "Now, if it were really true that I have eaten a large number of boys and girls, why have I not become fat?"

God has given our Christians one victory after another over their persecutors. The Hindu police official wanted to prove to us that our people were guilty of eating opium, so he called an old man addict as witness. The old man, seeing us, trembled and said, "Why should I tell a lie? The accused neither comes to my house nor smokes opium balls." A Hindu festival was in progress. Christians were asked to contribute toward the expense. These unlearned jungle Christians courageously answered the Hindus' threats thus, "Beat us if you will. We will neither attend your festival nor contribute toward it." Hindus went so far as to accuse Christians of murder. One Christian was guarded by the constable constantly. We went to the scene of the murder. The Hindu police official said, "A terrible thing occurred here last night. There lies the man murdered—dead." We looked at the stiff body covered with a white cloth which was spattered with blood. We then sat down at the base of a nearby rice-straw stack to see the result of the investigation. We looked toward the corpse and it was breathing! We felt queer and said to the official, "That's the funniest dead man we ever saw." Then the official "backed water." A day or so after, the "murdered man" was examined by the doctor and found to have a slight bruise or two. Our Christian was proved absolutely innocent, for which we praise God. In that village there are a goodly number of inquirers.

We never knew of a time of greater hopefulness. A teacher said, "I certainly will become a Christian. A woman who for seven years has resisted Christ now says she will follow him. The members of a family, who for nineteen years have heard of Jesus, tell us they will soon be his. A well-to-do young man is settling his property, preparatory to becoming a Christian. When he comes he will bring quite a number with him. An entire grass-cutters' village is very near the kingdom. There are at least sixteen Santal men who would accept Jesus today if their wives would come with them. The harvest truly is plenteous. We are very eager to do some reaping. At this critical time let us beseech of you to pray as never before for a wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit in convicting power on our field. Your faithful prayers mean more to us than all else beside. Please pray definitely for the seekers just mentioned that they may all speedily yield to Jesus. Let us suggest that you get a copy of "Praying Hyde" from the Sunday School Times in Philadelphia. Will you not offer this petition, "O God, make the Howards prayer-consecrated, spirit-filled, mighty winners of souls?" We remember you to him.

You all have a big place in our hearts. Your letters give us great courage and cheer. Be sure to write us soon and often.

John A. Howard and Family.

A Son's Tribute to His Mother

On Oct. 17, 1923, Mrs. Christian Y. Wyant, who had lived with her husband on a farm near Kittanning, Pa., for fifty-two years, passed on to the better land in her ninetieth year. Rev. A. B. Bowser, of Jersey Shore, Pa., whom they had financed in his early schooling, preached the sermon to a congregation that more than filled the church.

Mrs. Wyant had three sons and three daughters who have received ten university degrees in arts, literature, law, philosophy, theology and medicine.

In her girlhood she taught school at $6 a month; four of her children became teachers. She was a midwife for nearly fifty years, making no charge for this neighborly service, and three of her children are practicing physicians; another is a lawyer, coal operator and United States congressman.

At the close of the sermon Dr. A. R. E. Wyant, of Chicago, arose and standing by his mother's casket, paid her an unusual but merited tribute. It was a great blessing and honor to have had such a mother. During the past thirty-one years his annual trips from Chicago to visit his mother have aggregated more miles than the distance around the world.

She was like the worthy woman of Proverbs, "Many daughters have done well, but thou excellest them all." She had made his first linsey-woolsey suit from flax and wool grown and manufactured by hand on their farm. She had made a prize quilt of 7,000 pieces and woven thousands of yards of linen and carpets. He told of her unusual physical vitality that enabled her to do as much work as a half dozen modern women, of her keen mental vigor and interest in her children's education, and of her firm faith in God. For many years she read her Bible through annually. Hers was the religion of the Good Samaritan. "Her children rise up and call her blessed," and have tried to be what their mother thought they were.

Her husband who was thirteen days younger, born Oct. 19, 1834, died on March 24, 1910. He was a man of genuine sincerity, scrupulous honesty, extravagant generosity and practical piety. It has been honorably charged against them both that they broke the second great commandment by loving their neighbors better than they loved themselves. Having had such parents their children do not need inheritance of money, but gladly acknowledge their gratitude for the richest of all earthly bequests in body, mind and soul.

MRS. EMMA S. LOUNSBURY

Mrs. Emma S. Lounsbury, widow of the late Dr. Edwin W. Lounsbury, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William George in Aurora, Ill., Thursday, evening, Oct. 25, less than six weeks after the death of Dr. Lounsbury which occurred Sept. 15.

Mrs. Lounsbury was born in Ohio and resided in that state until her removal to Aurora.

She was an active helpmate to her husband in all of his work, during his pastorates at Canton and Dayton, O., and his second pastorate at the First Baptist church, and throughout his ministry in the Park Place Baptist church, of Aurora. She was for years, and at the time of her death, a member of the woman's board of the central district of the Woman's American Missionary society.

Her local activities were many—notably her work with certain foreign people.

She was a member of the Woman's club of Aurora and also of the West Side Reading circle.

Hers was a sterling character, ever devoted to her husband and to his good work. Well educated, she was possessed of a most clear, cultivated, analytical mind that gave her a remarkable poise. Her affection for family and friends is well attested by those who knew her in her varied walks in life. Among her nearest neighbors as well as among those farther away, her sweet personality will be greatly missed.

With her own health rendered feeble, partly on account of the ceaseless vigil and long continued physical strain, during the long illness of Dr. Lounsbury, she seemed to have had a premonition that she would not long survive him. She even welcomed the thought that ere long her remains would rest by his side, and she be reunited with him in the Better Land.

She made all the plans for her funeral service, which took place at the Lounsbury home on View Street, Saturday, Oct. 27, 1:30 p.m., Dr. M. P. Boynton of Chicago, who also preached Doctor Lounsbury's funeral, officiating. Doctor Boynton, a special friend of the family, based his remarks on the description of a perfect woman as found in the last chapter of Proverbs.

He said he knew of no one to whom that entire passage of scripture would apply better that to Sister Lounsbury. She was an ideal minister's wife in every way, and much of Dr. Lounsbury's wonderful success in the pastorates held during his long and fruitful ministerial career, was due to the wise counsel and prayerful cooperation of Sister Lounsbury. They were "fellow laborers together with Him."

She is survived and mourned by her daughter Mrs. William George of Aurora and her two granddaughters Mrs. Eliot W. Morrill of Dayton, O., and Miss Elizabeth M. George, now attending the University of Wisconsin, both of whom were present at the funeral.

"Save America"

BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

IF you have not seen this book you have missed the most distinctive publication of the year. It is a book of 128 pages, issued by the Woman's National Committee for Law Enforcement, under the editorship of Elizabeth Tilton. Mrs. Henry W. Peabody is chairman of this committee, which represents the great national civic and religious bodies of women, such as the National W. C. T. U., the National Y. W. C. A., the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions, the Council of Women for Home Missions, etc.

Thee book is unique in many ways. It has telling articles by Evangeline Booth, Lady Astor, Ida Tarbell, Mrs. Pennybacker, Kathleen Norris and other equally eminent women. It has opinions of judges, law-givers and national officials. It discusses the scientific aspects of temperance, and quotes authorities. It looks at it from the law-enforcement angle, and gives some discouraging and some encouraging facts. It tells what is the real experience of France, Germany and Italy, and moreover, quotes Italian and French men. It is bristling with facts that you can use to counteract wet propaganda. It has material for any number of programs. It has ammunition for magnificent sermons. We Baptists ought to be proud to think that it was the insight of a Baptist woman that brought about this alignment of the moral forces of the women of America! Mrs. Peabody is the very heart of the movement. Mrs. William Tilton has put such expert editorial work into the volume that you have an embarrassment of riches, good things that you just want to quote.

This thick volume sells for 25 cents per copy. This price was possible only because the first edition was made up of 100,000 copies, and the second edition is already under way. The slogan is, "A million copies of 'Save America.'" This can easily be realized if we can have the cooperation of church women. There is no bigger task confronting our missionary societies than the task of lining up Americans to stand back of their vote to outlaw the saloon. If America fails in this, a blow will be given to missionary operations throughout the world. Such failure will go far to deprive America of its position of missionary leadership.

The plan is to make January 16—the fourth anniversary of the coming of prohibition—a great law-enforcement day, and from that time for two months to have a campaign of law enforcement. The book will be used in programs for clubs, churches, prayer groups, bodies of young people, all leading up toward great registration rallies in the spring of 1924, with the hope of getting every last "dry" voter to the polls, voting right.

The indefatigable chairman of the committee suggests that we place "Save America" in all our libraries; that we get a review of "Save America" in different papers, etc. Here are definite things for individual men and women to do. The first step is to form a "Save America" committee in every church and city federation, and then to work every plan that can be worked to give the widest possible publicity to the book, "Save America."

I am calling upon all our auxiliaries—and if I were where I could reach Mrs. Coleman, I know she would join with me in this call—to make the circulation of "Save America" a part of their missionary activities for the year.

The Young People's Paper

BY R. R. COON

The latter part of the nineteenth century saw the uprising of the young people's movement. The Christian Endeavor Society was organized Feb. 2, 1881; the Epworth League was started May 15, 1889; and the Baptist Union, July 7, 1891. In the first two instances the organization was established and the paper followed as a result; in the last case the paper was established and, to a great extent at least, the organization followed as a result.

The first national Baptist Young People's paper. The Loyalist, was issued Oct. 16, 1890; its founders and editors were Rev. J. M. Coon and Rev. O. W. Van Osdell; the first named of these resigning his pastorate and moving to Chicago to carry on this work. Starting a national young people's paper was no ordinary enterprise. We well remember what numberless enthusiastic messages of approval came to the office. "It was a bell whose ringing awoke to action the youth of the denomination;" as described in a history of the movement, "It was the event that called the denomination to organize the Baptist Young People's Union," said a leading minister in that great gathering.

In December, 1890, the Baptist Publication Society, seeing an opportunity, took over the paper with the consent of the founders. It was moved to Philadelphia and given the somewhat cum-

A SPECIALIZED HOSPITAL SERVICE

THE THREE Baptist hospitals, although conducted as general hospitals, have each been adapted for an individual service, increasing efficiency and avoiding duplication. A specialized medical service for women, a specialized service for mental and nervous diseases, and a specialized service in surgery are thereby offered which could not otherwise be made available.

brous title, The Young People at Work. Perhaps no Baptist paper has had such a record in so short a time.

In July, 1891, the B. Y. P. U. was organized and arranged to direct the publishing of the paper. So it was moved back to where it started, to where it belonged, and named Young People's Union. It continued a weekly paper for some years, then for some unaccountable reason changed to a monthly. "Thus it is hoped to enlarge its power and usefulness," its proprietors announced. That hope seems to have been unrealized, The name it then bore was: The Young People's Service, and later Service, published in magazine form. Some years later another change was made and Service became a quarterly, a little magazine you could put in your pocket without folding; a lesson quarterly. The Publication Society is again publishing it, and has for years.

The paper has had four titles, four forms, four places of publishing and at least four managements; indeed a varied existence. Had it remained as planned by its founders, a young people's paper, there seems no good reason why it should not be in existence today and comparing favorably as it did formerly with Christian Endeavor World and Epworth Herald.

That it is not rendering the service needed and expected, is evident from the fact that at the last national meeting of the B. Y. P. U. a resolution was passed "to publish a paper for the society," as reported in newspaper accounts. If a paper well established and circulated in the enthusiastic days of the Society declined for lack of patronage, the prospects of the career of another paper should be fully considered by the advocates of such a proposal.

Choice Books for Boys and Girls

A Boy's Life of Grenfell of the Labrador, by Dillon Wallace. Revell. $1.50 net.

"In a land where there was no doctor and no school, and through an evil system of barter and trade the people were practically bound to serfdom, Doctor Wilfred T. Grenfell has established hospitals and nursing stations, schools and cooperative stores, and raised up people to a degree of self-dependence and a much happier condition of life. All this has been done through his personal activity, and is today being supported through his personal administration." The story of Doctor Grenfell is one of achievement with an utterly self-less purpose in view. It reads fascinatingly. It is such books as this that should be placed in the hands of boys. "If you would be great, young man, read biography," said Doctor Gunsaulus.

The Daughter of Titus, by Ella Hutchinson Ellwanger. New York: Revell. $1 net.

A story of New Testament times told in a direct and interesting fashion. One of the worth-while books for young people—older ones will like it as well.

Prayers for Little Men and Women. New York: John Martin's Book House.

The dedication by John Martin is:

"This little book and all it holds
Is just a simple story of
The constant need of every child
For wisdom strength and guiding love. ,
It hardly can be called a book
Unless our daily lives are part Of life's Great Book whose pages keep
God's record of the human heart.

It has but one intent and aim—
That every thought it holds may give
To some young heart a clearer sight
Of life and all it means to live.
To children of the child-heart, then,
I give this little book of prayers.
LOVE only made it mine to give,
And love alone can make it theirs.

Could more be said? Only that it will be a lovely thing for every child to have this book with such a beautiful "one intent and aim."

Some Boys and Girls in America, by Margaret T. Applegarth. New York: Doran. $1.50 net.

Characteristically Miss Applegarth places above the "Contents" as her foreword this: "There may be fatter books and thinner books, but how we do hope that you will like the contents of this particular book, the very best in your library!" Miss Applegarth may have written fatter books, we know she has written thinner books, but we like the contents of this particular book the very best of any she has written! And that is saying something, as the readers of THE BAPTIST who have become acquainted with Margaret Applegarth through her Chimney Corner pages know.

Jack-in-the-Pulpit, by Avery A. Shaw. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1 net.

Short talks to boys and girls that are bound to hold their interest and direct their thoughts upward. A whole year's supply of material for children's sermons, finding a climax in talks on Christ suitable for the season of evangelism in the church and Sunday school.

Boys Own Book of Adventurers, by Albert Britt. New York: Macmillan. $2.

Mr. Britt is the editor of Outing, which alone establishes his status as the writer of such stories. He has made a book that will thrill boys, because not only is it full of adventure, but it is true—being the stories of such men as Stanley of Africa; Chinese Gordon, soldier and martyr; Burton, the Pilgrim adventurer.

Merrimeg, by William Bowen. Illustrated by Emma Brock. New York: Macmillan. $2.

A story for each day in the week—seven delightful tales of the fairy adventures of Merrimeg, a normal little girl who did not always mind her mother. Two extraordinarily polite gnomes, Nibby and Milkin, brothers, were always on hand to help Merrimeg when she got into difficulties. Not a small part of the attractiveness of the book is due to the illustrations. Some in black and white, others colored.

Rip Van Winkle, by Washington Irving. New York: Lippincott. 75 cents.

Yes, it is the old Rip Van Winkle but in such a fascinating new dress—ragged Rip would be quite surprised could he see the fine setting in which he has been placed (so, perhaps, would Washington Irving), all so that he will please the eye and appeal to the brain of children. There are four full-page illustrations in color, by Edna Cook, and a number of pen and ink drawings. Rip Van Winkle is a classic that every child should know as told in Irving's own words.

The Young Knight, by I. M. B. Boston: Page Co. $1.65.

The appeal of knighthood and chivalry to the youth of America is general and when the action takes place during the time of the Crusades and is coupled with religious enthusiasm, it is certain to win the heart of the modern boy. The story is about Michael Faversham, a mischievous and impetuous lad, who nevertheless has a sincere love for Christ, and how he saves the fortress of Rhodes. His heroism, bravery and Christlike spirit are unusual and will make boys want to follow his example.

"Chatterbox" is such an old favorite that the mothers and fathers of many of today's boys and girls—perhaps sometimes even very young grandparents—can tell of charmed hours they have spent over its pages. It has been published for forty-five years—each year producing a perfectly fresh "Chatterbox," not a hashing of any material appearing elsewhere the publishers want it distinctly understood. It is a big book packed full of long stories and short stories, poems articles on sports and games, descriptions as to the construction of toys with pictures to show you every step in the making of them. It is a storehouse of good things. Whatever you draw is sure to be of interest, and there is such a variety that every taste may be suited For this reason it makes an especially good gift for a houseful of children. The book is plentifully illustrated.

More Jungle Tales, by Howard Anderson Musser. New York: Doran. $1.50.

What boy doesn't like jungle tales? These are especially worthwhile because they do more than give thrilling glimpses of jungle life—they show as well what brave men will undertake to further the spread of the story of Christ. This is Mr. Musser's second volume of his thrilling adventures with wild things—beasts, reptiles and men.

One of the "Little Cousin" series. Geography, history and nature study are blended in an interesting story of the adventures of Billy and Betty Maynard, who visit the farm of their grandfather in Saskatchewan. The story of the origin and work of the Royal Mounted Police and of the Hudson Bay Company will prove fascinating to boys and girls.

Short Missionary Plays, by Margaret T. Applegarth. New York: Doran. $1 net.

This is a collection of short home and foreign missionary plays that any church, no matter how primitive its arrangements for dramatic work may be, can produce with telling effect. The plays teach missions to children in a way that will not be easily forgotten. The titles of the plays are: "Color Blind;" "Kimona;" "The Latest Victor Record;" "Just Suppose;" "The Girl Who Fell Through The Earth;" "Seven Keys to Mr. Bald Pate;" "Hands Up!"; "Fare, Please;" "Indelible;" "The Gospel According to the Telephone Book;" "Pain Street."

The Bible Story, by Rev. James Baikie. New York: Macmillan. $5.

There are many Bible stories—each year sees its quota issued by various publishers. "The Bible Story" in question is not, however, "one of a thousand," it is "one in a thousand." Mr. Baikie begins with the world's childhood and ends with the vision of John—it is the complete Bible story, disentangled from details that, for children at least, impede the progress of the narrative, and detract from the interest. Not for a moment does the author consider it a substitute for the Book of Books. In his own words—"the book is sent out . . . not with the vain idea that it may in any sense be a substitute for the wonderful volume from which its narrative is drawn, but with the hope and prayer that it may lead some readers to a new and more intelligent appreciation of the infinite treasure of interest and wisdom which is stored in the Bible, and send them back to the Word of God with a quickened sense of its unsearchable riches." Although the exact biblical phraseology is not used, yet the story is told with a dignified simplicity that maintains much of the original savor of the authorized version. The work, consisting of nearly 500 pages, is illuminated by fifty full page illustrations in color made from paintings by J. H. Hartley, who visited Palestine especially for the purpose of getting the background and local color for these paintings. It is a lovely book for either child or adult to have.

The Story of the Bible, by Hendrik Van Loon. New York: Boni & Liveright. $5.

What Hendrik Van Loon does is sure to have a definite individual touch of its own—even though it is the writing of the story of the Bible. His direct manner of writing always has an appeal which more wordy writing lacks. Then he has the gift of illustrating—he makes his text mean far more because he illuminates it with exactly the picture he feels is needed for the occasion. In this "Story of the Bible" there are about 150 black and white line illustrations and sixteen full-page plates in color and etching effect, all done by Mr. Van Loon. The author's comments on the writing of this book are worth more than any outsider's dissection could be. He says:

"This is a strange piece of work. And to tell the truth, I am a little afraid of it. Not for any tangible reason.

"Almost every day I get long and intricate (and often exceedingly unkind) letters from people who have heard rumors about what they are pleased to call the "Van Loon Bible." As a matter of fact I am not trying to rewrite the Bible or interpret the Bible or give a modern version of the Bible. I am leaving the Bible most severely alone. The Holy Books have been translated with extreme competency by our great grandfathers. I have a profound respect for their labors. I shall not offend their sense of the ludicrous by a futile attempt to improve upon the King James version.

"Neither dare I confess to that profound theological knowledge which is necessary for a critical examination of the Old and the New Testaments. Those who expect to read a Bible written against a background of the latest archeological and philological discoveries will be disappointed. The book merely tells the story as I personally (and in a most uncontroversional fashion) would like to tell it to my own boys. Nothing more and nothing less.

"But if you ask me how I have done that job I would find it difficult to give you a concrete answer. I have never been very good at 'systems.' I have patiently read all the 'Modern Bibles' and the almost endless 'children's Bibles' of the last thirty years and none satisfied me for my own needs or for those of my sons. The story of the Bible does not seem to come under any prescribed rule-of-thumb of biblical exposition and it is a million miles removed from dogmatic exhortation.

"The earliest part of the Old Testament which contains the sagas and the folk lore of Jewish people has been told without further ado. These stories are now part of the common heritage of mankind and we had best leave them alone. The latter half of the Old Testament has been treated as so much history. Israel and Judah and the era of foreign domination were definitely established facts. They have been so described with due help of the Assyrian and Chaldean and Macedonian and Greek and Roman sources.

"As for the New Testament, the story of Jesus of Nazareth has been told against a background of mysticism. Not because I wanted to tell it that way but because I could not see it or feel it in any other mood. That perhaps is hardest of all to explain to the American reader. But those queer people who confess themselves followers of Erasmus and Montaigne are strange mixtures of a very delicate mysticism and a very sober realism. The holy is familiar to them and the familiar is holy. They write of the things of heaven as if they belonged upon this earth and they write of the things of this earth as if they were part of heaven. It sounds very complicated. But it is really very simple as you will see when you read the book."

In his direct fashion, Mr. Van Loon makes occasional statements, however, that the reviewer should prefer not to have made to little children, such as "The Gospels bear fictitious names. They are called after the apostles Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, but it seems very unlikely that the original disciples had anything to do with these famous literary compositions." Of the sincerity of Mr. Van Loon in writing the story of the Bible in such a manner as he would like to have it presented to his own boys, none can doubt. He has labored over a magnificent piece of work.

Some Chinese Dolls

BY MARIE A. DOWLING

"OH, mother, look!"

"Look at what, Peggy mine? What have your bright eyes found now in this multitude of interesting things to see? There I know. It's that little Chinese girl with her Chinese doll which looks so like herself!"

"Mother, dear, do you think while we are in Shanghai we could buy one just like it to take home?"

"We will see, daughter."

That night at the dinner table Peggy told of the doll she had seen, and learned that at an American store on Nanking Road she could see many kinds of interesting Chinese dolls; so next day she and mother went there the first thing after breakfast, and while Peggy chose her doll, mother became absorbed in the beautiful cross-stitch luncheon and tea cloths. It was her turn now to exclaim over the novel patterns which she wanted her friends in America to see, all done with such fine and even stitches.

While she was admiring a set with a proud peacock with his long sweeping tail, a lady came in to the store with a bundle of new designs representing Chinese legends and beliefs. There were the eight fairies, and the fan painter, and the man with the musical soul, and one of the oddest of all—a husband and a wife meeting each other in the clouds.

The lady with the new designs proved to be a missionary from Shaohsing, Chehkiang Province, who was conducting an industrial work to help women there transfer their attention from the making of spirit money, to something more in keeping with Christian living.

Peggy, with her new doll in her arms, caught sight of the cross-stitch and exclaimed, "Mother, what's that man riding on a cow for?" The lady from Shaohsing laughed and said: "Little girl, that isn't a cow, it's a water buffalo. Would you like to have me tell you the story of that piece of embroidery?"

"Yes indeed, I would," said Peggy, "I just love stories."

She listened intently while the lady told how many Chinese believe that after a husband and wife die they are permitted once a year, on the seventh day of the seventh month to meet each other in the spirit world, and this particular piece of embroidery represented that time.

This story led to so many questions that Peggy and mother and the missionary lady became well acquainted with each other and it resulted in an invitation to Shaohsing to see for themselves the work represented by the dolls and the cross-stitch.

They arrived Saturday evening tired from the trip, but a good night's sleep refreshed them for the Sunday morning service at the church. There they saw the men and the boys from the schools sitting on one side, and the girls' school, the women's school, the hospital nurses and the industrial workers on the other side. One of the ushers, who took up the collection, was pointed out as the Bible woman and matron of the Industrial Home.

After the preaching service was over, the Sunday school commenced, and Peggy and her mother saw the industrial workers, many of whom are non-Christians, go into classes just the same as the Christians; and just before New Year these same workers, they were told, had pledged over $45 toward the running expenses of the church, besides paying the larger part of the cost of digging a well on the industrial compound, and giving a goodly contribution to famine relief. So they not only received benefit from the church, but had their share in helping as well.

Monday they visited the Industrial Home where about twenty-seven people were living, though most of the hundred employes took work home once a month and returned it the next month.

Two who lived on the place were pointed out as those whose homes had been destroyed in the flood of August, 1922. Then there was a mother with two children who were desperate in their need of a livelihood. Since coming there, the sickly baby had grown fat and healthy looking, and while the sister took care of the baby, the mother worked; and when the baby slept, the sister worked too. There was a poor widow with her little adopted daughter, and a crippled girl who had one foot cut off in the hospital, and had a new foot made by the carpenter, who said he would take no money for his work if the girl could not learn to walk with it. This girl went into the hospital a poor ignorant idolator and came out an earnest believer in the God who had made people so kind to her mother and herself, and now in the Industrial Home she was learning how to support herself. Here was a young woman who did beautiful work and was straining hard over some cross-stitch on very fine linen handkerchiefs.

Peggy's mother said: "What wonderful patience and application these people have. But what about their eyes. Don't they ever get tired?" "Yes, they do," the missionary replied, and she grew a bit excited as she told how exacting and unreasonable some people were in demanding very fine linen for the work so that it was almost impossible to distinguish one thread from another, "and no doubt," she said, "one might find some of these very women active in reform measures, and yet asking women to blind their eyes over bits of work with which to deck their tables. A reasonable grade of linen where the thread may be counted is all right, but more than that is cruel, and when such orders come in they are refused."

Besides working for a living these people are being given by precept and practice a knowledge of Christianity

Each one devotes some time each day to study: chiefly reading, Bible and a little arithmetic.

Peggy thought the nicest part of the Industrial Home was the room where the dolls were being dressed; and sweeter than the dolls even were the bright-eyed little boys and girls playing around in the court yard, so happy and safe in their clean environment, and watched over by those who prayed and lived for them that they might grow into strong Christian manhood and womanhood.

"Man looketh on the outward appearance but God————."

BY ROBERT LINCOLN KELLEY

THEY tell us that Elsie's sight is almost gone and we know that because of this she has had some years of study at the Janesville State School for the Blind. We know that Elsie's mother has a similar affliction. They also tell us that formerly Elsie was afflicted with necrosis of the bone in the spine and we are aware that this trouble has sent her more than once to seek expert medical advice with the X-ray diagnosis now and again. We are under the impression that once because of this disease she went under the surgeon's knife. Today Elsie's physical strength is at best but weakness.

We know that one day, some summers gone, Elsie timidly asked us if she might unite with the church and to that end if she might be baptized. We remember at the time that we asked her if she sincerely loved Jesus Christ and desired to live the life he would have her live, and we know how definite was her affirmative that day. Elsie was baptized and ever since has been constant in her faithfulness in attendance upon Sunday and mid-week services. When the season permits flowers to grow in Elsie's garden, the week rarely passes when flowers lovingly picked and arranged from that garden fail to give their message in the mid-week service of the church. That same mid-week service knows the choice quotations from the Good Book and sacred literature that are ever Elsie's contribution to the hour's inspiration and helpfulness, some of them read by the finger-touch reading of the Braille system, but more often quoted from memory. It is only through Elsie's permission that the following letter received from her by the writer is printed. The letter speaks for itself; it is a photograph of Elsie's soul:

"I just wanted you to know the blessing and experience I got one night as I sat in church. I came to church that night with a family problem upon my heart and when that song was sung, 'There's a Wideness in God's Mercy,' it seemed to go right through me. I went home feeling so touched and shortly after I had gone to bed I heard a sort of whisper which seemed to have come directly down from over head of me, where I was lying. I turned and listened but was unable to catch it. A few minutes later I felt a sort of touch upon the aching heart which again seemed to have come directly down from overhead of me, where I was lying. I felt relieved of the heartache and the tears could not come any more. I fell asleep and thought I was in a beautiful garden of flowers. There were white and pink flowers on bushes like a bridal wreath. I thought I was walking in this garden with Him and we came to a bush that had pink flowers on it and one of these was opening like a poppy and he said, 'This represents the Rock of Ages and the center of the flower is hiding in thee.' Then I thought it closed its petals in the shape of a rose. O pastor, you have been such a blessing to me in your ministry here. The Bible seems to me like a deep gold mine; the farther you go into it the more you get out of it."

We have filed this letter of Elsie's away and the file in which it is found is entitled, "The Lord's Treasury." Some day, if that day ever comes, when we have laid aside, at life's evening hour, the activities of the Christian ministry, and we find that we need a bit of soul refreshment, we will hunt up this file and abstract therefrom Elsie's letter. There is a sentence in the same which has a bit of that compensation of which the Master once said, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of."

Why Is a Fig Tree?

By Frank S. Harwood

IN the thirteenth chapter of Luke is the story that Jesus told of an unfruitful fig-tree, a story that is different from the others he has given us in that it seems to be unfinished. Elsewhere he told of the piece of silver the woman lost and how she swept the house until she found it. He told of the one lost sheep and how the shepherd left all the rest in the fold and went after the lost until he found it. There is the immortal story of the son who went away from home and wasted all he had in riotous living, but he had sense enough to see his folly and come home in penitence. Great was the rejoicing over that which was lost. And our Lord assures us that the angels of heaven likewise rejoice over one sinner that repenteth. The sower went out to sow and the seed fell on diverse kinds of soil and we are told of the result in the harvest. A certain rich man made a great feast and invited his friends, but they were inconsiderate of his thoughtfulness and wished to be excused. Then he was so disgusted with them that he changed his plans and sent the servants out into the streets and alleys and highways to gather in the unfortunate of every description and bring them to his feast. He had the grandest time of his life by being generous to those who could never do as much for him. All of these stories have definite and satisfactory endings, but in the case of the fig-tree that had been unfruitful for three years, we are not shown what became of the tree. The master of the garden ordered the tree cut down but he was dissuaded by the gardener who wished to give it one more trial. At least, we suppose it was left for another year, although we do not know even that.

Did Jesus forget to finish this story, or did the recorder leave off the ending by mistake? In all probability the parable is recorded just as Jesus related it, and a little thought will reveal the fact that this is one of the most forcible and complete parables ever presented. It matters little what became of that particular fig-tree. The point of the story is that a fruit tree is expected to bear fruit, and if it doesn't it has no right to cumber the ground! What could be the use of cultivating a vineyard of figs and grapes or an orchard of apples and peaches that never produced anything? Every one knows that a fruit tree is expected to bear fruit. If it doesn't it is simply occupying space to which it is not entitled. It has no right to stand in good soil and be blessed with the care of God and man and be unfruitful. If a tree could be ashamed, it ought to be ashamed to do such a thing.

But of course Jesus was not primarily interested in trees. The story was intended for our benefit. If a fig-tree should bear fruit how much more a child of God! Surely this needs no argument for every one must admit that we are here for a purpose. And if a person enjoys the blessings of God and makes no return of gratitude how despicable is he! No tree was ever so unworthy. Naturally, we begin to ask ourselves if we are bearing fruit in the kingdom of God, and we answer in the affirmative. Perhaps this statement is rather confident. But if we are not actually answering in the affirmative why do we not make a radical change in our conduct? If we are not convinced that we are fruitful how can we think that we are members of the kingdom at all? We believe we are Christ's. We think we are worth something to him. The only question then is, are we deceived? There can be no harm in a proper appraisal of ourselves. If we are worth something in Christ's kingdom by the good we do, then let us rejoice in that assurance and go on to better things. Yes, let us even boast a little to ourselves of the fruit we bear if by so doing we are strengthened in the work. Let us not boast to others lest our reputation be spoiled! But many people who have two talents think they have only one because they undervalue themselves. They do not appreciate what fruit they are bearing nor what they might bear. Yes, we may rightly assure ourselves that we are doing something for our Lord, and that we are not like the fig-tree of the parable, for did not that good example the apostle Paul rejoice in the accomplishments he had reached?

However, it may be that we are not unfruitful and yet our fruit may not be abundant. And if such be the case we shall have to admit that we are not in the fullest fellowship with that prodigious worker Paul whose example in self-confidence we were trying to follow. We have not yet learned the secret of the one who came that we might have life abundantly. Not alone for ourselves should we crave abounding grace but for the world which lieth in need. Through us, his followers, the world will be enriched or impoverished. Here is an apple-tree. On it are a few apples scattered over the branches. There is a peach-tree. Here and there is to be seen a peach—fairly good but not plentiful.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL SONG.

"Dear Mrs. Schroll: I did not get time on Saturday to tell you how beautiful I thought both of your songs were, and especially the first, 'The Beautiful Garden of Prayer.' I think it the most beautiful thing that I have heard in years. The lady who sang it had a lovely voice and sang it with much expression, but I liked the words so much of both songs. I thought, as I sat listening to them: What a wonderful talent you have? You are to be envied, indeed, to give the world two* such songs. With love, Signed) "Adaline H. Tatman."

The above note was addressed to Eleanor Allen Schroll, the author of two songs that were sung recently at a meeting of The Cincinnati Women's Press Club, a fraternity of literary women, of which Mrs. Tatman is Vice-President and Mrs. Schroll a member.

The publishers of "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer" are receiving similar testimonials from many sources, and are desirous of getting the song introduced as widely as possible.

If the reader of this is a singer and will agree to sing the solo publicly—or, if the reader, not being a singer, has an acquaintance who sings—he or she may write for a copy of the song to present to this friend, with the request that it be sung publicly.

The price of the song is 50 cents. All we ask for this souvenir copy is ten 2-cent stamps, to cover handling and postage. This offer is for a brief period only.

Address The Fillmore Music House, 524 Elm Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

*The title of the second song referred to is "If I Could But Tell All the Glory," or "Telling and Living." It is a duet for soprano and alto, but is also sung as a solo. The reader may order it also on the same terms—ten 2-cent stamps.

Singing to the Wrong Tune

By W. H. Morse

IT was in the early spring, and the Baptist church was "trying out" the candidates for places in the choir in the year commencing the first of May. On a certain Sunday a tenor singer came to exercise his gift before the congregation, including a very select and careful music committee. He had offered his services, instead of being invited, as the other candidates were, and according to custom he was given his opportunity. At the time he was still under engagement in one of the Congregational churches, and was well commended.

The chairman of the music committee had some peculiar ideas of his own, and one of these was that both tenor and bass candidates should sing "Coronation" as a solo, and after the sermon should lead the singing of the same familiar hymn. Hence when a soloist stood to sing, and sang that hymn, it was patent to all that he was a candidate. But this was not all. Preliminary to the trial the candidate met with the music committee, and read the hymn. Oliver Holden, who wrote the tune, had said in his preface to his hymn-book, "America's Harmony"—"With respect to the manner of performing the music, the author wishes that the time, in general, might be slow and the strain soft. Doubtless singing choirs in general are too inattentive to those important parts of music. By hurrying a piece of music, performers are more likely to sing harshly; in consequence of which good pronunciation is lost. To remedy this it is necessary that the words be read, and the subject well understood before the notes are applied." With the largest respect for the author, it was necessary for the candidate to follow these directions carefully:

That respect was of long time standing. For was it not Oliver Holden's "Ode to Washington" which, somewhat modified, was sung on the occasion of Lafayette's visit? Holden had written the ode in 1789 when Washington visited Boston, and under a triumphal arch on State Street a choir had sung it. It ran

"Great Washington, the hero, has come!
Each heart exulting hears the sound!
See! thousands their deliverer throng,
And shout his welcome all around!"

The refrain,

"Now in full chorus burst the song!
And shout the deeds of Washington!"

had been changed to read,

"Now in full chorus sing them yet,
The valiant deeds of Lafayette!"

Moreover, Holden had been one of the strictest of Baptists. Although as a young man he had worshiped in the Congregational church at Shirley, Mass., where the Rev. Dr. Jedidiah Morse was pastor, he with others had seceded and organized a Baptist church, and somewhat later, having been converted to the idea of weekly communion, he had led out a faction and established the town's second Baptist church.

Not improbably the candidate, when reading the hymn and receiving the compiler's instructions, had it impressed on him that "Coronation" was a tune direct from Baptist hands. If so, however, he did not attend to that which was told him.

He sang his solo, and from the first verse the congregation, including the music committee, listened with wide ears. It was a good voice and the uplifting words were plainly and inspiringly enunciated, but—it was not "Coronation."

If the people had paid attention they would have seen the chairman of the music committee leave the church, and from the rear of the singers' seats motion to the candidate to come out; and they saw the candidate go out. He did not return, and the sermon was well in progress when the chairman came back, his face very red, and resumed his seat. As the closing hymn "Coronation" was not sung. The congregation knew the chairman, and understood the reason.

The candidate had sung the Rev. Edward Peronet's

"All hail the power of Jesus' name" to the tune of William Shrubsole's "Miles Lane," which is generally used throughout England and previous to 1793, when "Coronation" was first sung, it had some vogue in this country. Why the candidate had done such a thing, or what the chairman said to him when he called him out, is not on record.

Why Is a Fig Tree?

Over yonder appears a plum-tree with just a small number of plums. Altogether the crop of fruit is meager, and the demand is great. The demand cannot be supplied for the trees bear only sparingly. Here is a Christian. He is good-hearted and does something in the kingdom, but not much. There is a Christian. She responds when the need is so clearly presented that she cannot escape, but she has not sought to take the initiative in giving service. Over yonder is a Christian. Neither has this child of God learned the meaning of the abundant life. Altogether the accomplishments are small compared with what should be done. The needs of the world are appealingly great, but the servants of Christ are not yet bringing forth fruit to capacity.

The Challenge of the Chaplaincy

By a Navy Chaplain

THE navy needs chaplains, needs Baptist chaplains, and needs them at once. The call for them, as well as for those of other denominations, is urgent. The secretary of the committee on army and navy chaplains of the Federal Council of Churches has even addressed letters to theological seminaries making an appeal for suitable men. The navy is allowed by law 151 chaplains. At this date it has only eighty-four, the most undermanned corps in the United States navy. Sixteen chaplains are to be added soon, which will bring the total up to 100. The appeal for these sixteen is the one being made now.

Just what are the opportunities of the chaplaincy? Why should a young man give serious consideration to it? If he is seeking to invest his life where it will bring the greatest returns for the kingdom, why should he think of the chaplaincy?

Briefly, these are some reasons:

1. The chaplain deals with men who are usually not connected with any church and who do not come under any religious influence other than that of the chaplain. They are away from home, and do not stay in one place long enough for the proper religious influence. They are of various types, usually the normal men of from eighteen to twenty-five.

2. The chaplain has many ways of approach to men. Besides his religious work, he can reach them through books. He is librarian, and if he loves books and knows books, he will be able to direct the reading of a host of young men. On the athletic field he can get another point of contact. To him men come for all manner of advice. Romance and tragedy, as well as the commonplace things of life, as told to him are every-day occurrences.

3. The problems of the chaplain are, for the most part, the problems of youth. Men are eighteen when they enlist and the greater majority of the men in the navy are still in their teens and early twenties. Men, thus in the middle of their adolescent period, are interesting. Their bodies are changing and things are going on with them of which they are not aware. Their minds are changing, and they are developing new attitudes toward many things. Starbuck calls this the "storm and stress period." And it is, indeed. Amid it all, the chaplain is often turned to as a helmsman to steer the youth along in safe channels. This is the period when character "sets." Wrong starts are to be corrected and right ones commended and aided. This is the age when lasting friendships are made, and it is important that these friendships be the proper kind. Tragedies are in the making in this period and it calls for tactful and sympathetic dealing to avoid them When they do come, the chaplain has the privilege of standing by the side of the youth pointing him to something better. Romances come, and they must be shared with some one. Why not the chaplain? This is the age when insistent demands come for social self-expression, and the proper methods must be given for that social self-expression. It will come, and it should be of the best. How often the chaplain must be a parent-by-proxy and tell men things that fathers should have told them years before.

4. The chaplain has the opportunity to be a continual Good Samaritan, for to him men come with all sorts of problems—problems of sex, home, education and promotion, finances, vocational guidance. He must always be ready to listen, sympathize and advise.

5. The chaplain is the spiritual adviser of the men. If he is not that, he is a misfit, for some one else can do all the other work delegated to him. It is the chaplain's blessed privilege to be the minister of God on a ship or station. As this minister of God he is in supreme command of all things religious. He can preach as often as the minister, have as many Bible classes, and lead as many to Christ. Visualize this: A ship, 600 feet long, 50 feet wide, and on it 1,200 men! No man is over 300 feet from the chaplain at any time. There's a concentrated parish! It's a city of 1,200 with only one minister! All of these men have precious souls. All of them are as approachable as the men of the street, the offices or the farms. All of them are as responsive as any type of men. If that is not a challenge, then I do not know where one is.

The chaplain must be a kindly man, a man's man, a good preacher, able to get along with men, level-headed, and above all a man of convictions which he will not surrender. The demands on him are as exacting as those in the pastorate.

He is acquainted with "the far-flung battle line" of Christianity, for navy chaplains today are preaching God's word from Constantinople to Chefoo, to Chicago.

Lastly, and less stress is laid on this, the chaplain is well cared for financially. There is no specter of want in old age, for the chaplain is retired with an adequate pension. The government cares for its ministers much better than the church cares for its ministers.

Think of this, then: 86,000 men, 4,000 officers, 5,000 men under training, in the navy, plus 20,000 marines. Total them: 115,000, approximately. And caring for all these men are eighty-four chaplains. That equals 115 churches of 1,000 membership; 230 churches of 500 membership. And only eighty-four pastors! Think of it! Think of that need!

It is not a spectacular job; the chaplain is not in the public eye; but for downright hard, satisfying, sacrificing work—work that counts mightily for the kingdom, this is a job. There is a magnificent challenge!

A Guardian Angel

DEAR God, I am a growing child:
Each day of living brings
A hundred puzzling thoughts to me
About a hundred things.
Sometimes it's very hard for me
To tell what I should do,
And so I say this little prayer,
And leave it all to You.

So now I need not be afraid,
For Love is near to me.
A Guardian Angel holds my hand
And helps my eyes to see.
When I am puzzled over things
His help is sure and true.
You are my Guardian Angel, God;
I leave my life with You.
Amen.

The Unexplored Bibl

QUITE too largely Bible study in the past h or the discovery and assembling of proof-texts n the result that much of its great teachings remain yet unexplored. The best vindication of Bible study in the past is the inestimable good it has brought to humanity. The best argument for its more thorough study is the reasonable assurance that the good already accomplished is but an index to the greater possibilities realizable through its more careful study and more general application in individual and associated life and conduct.

Let no one misunderstand. This is not said to discredit in any sense the importance of reliable doctrinal standards. They are a necessity. A doctrineless church, like a doctrineless state, will be a spineless church. The Fatherhood of God; the deity, humanity, and Saviorhood of Jesus Christ; the blinding, ruinous reality of sin; the cross of Christ its only remedy; the deity, personality, and presence of the Holy Spirit; the kingdom of God, and the life immortal, and related fundamental truths must abide or disaster will come to the church and chaos to the world.

But the Bible is not all doctrine, in the technical sense of that term. The Bible is also practical, and sets forth a combined system of truth, doctrinal and practical, which if ascertained and adequately applied will result in the complete rectifying of the individual, and as well in the complete transforming of the whole of human society.

Rev. A. W. Lyons, whose faithful work at Muskegon Heights Church, Michigan, was interrupted by the illness of a member of his family which required a change of climate, has become pastor of the church at Stromberg, Neb.

Hon. J. J. MacLaren, president of the World's Sunday School Association, and Mr. Arthur M. Harris, of New York, together with other officers have issued the official call for the ninth convention of the World's Sunday School Association. This great meeting will be held in Glasgow, Scotland, June 18-26, 1924.

It is with genuine regret that the church at Marshall, Mich., accepts the resignation of Rev. J. B. Bouwman. Mr. Bouwman has accepted the call of the Barrington church in the vicinity of Chicago and will complete his work at the University of Chicago. Under his leadership the church has rendered splendid service, its influence reaching far beyond the limits of the city.

Rev. James S. West has closed the first year of his pastorate with the First Church of San Francisco. Two hundred and three members have been added, fifty-eight of them by baptism. The net gain was 150, as against a net loss of ninety-nine for the period of ten years, preceding. The attendance at the Sunday services has been multiplied by approximately four, and that of the evening has grown to be the larger, reversing the proportion of past years. There was an increase of 100 per cent in money actually raised for current expenses. Three members were added to the staff, during the year, an assistant pastor, a visitor and a secretary.

The spirit of interdenominational fellowship and ministerial friendship as it exists among the seven Protestant churches of Wilmette, Ill., again expressed itself at the funeral of Francis Carr Stifler, Jr., eight-year-old son of the Baptist pastor. The ministers of the other six churches acted as pallbearers. The service was conducted by the pastor's brother, Rev. James Madison Stifler of Evanston, and by Rev. George N. Luccock of Wooster, Ohio, father of Mrs. Stifler. Two other ministers associated with the churches were also present at the funeral services. Though the lad had always seemed to be a specimen of health, it was discovered on Tuesday, Oct. 30, that he was suffering from an acute case of diabetes, and despite the heroic efforts of specialists the lad died the following Saturday morning.

Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, who has served for some years as pastor of the First Church, Portsmouth, N. H., has been chosen as one of the general workers of the Massachusetts Baptist Convention.

The church at Warren, Pa., has called Rev. Harold F. Stoddard to its pastorate. He has been serving as the assistant pastor of the First Church, Pittsfield, Mass.

The Calvary Church, Daytona Beach, Fla., has called Rev. E. B. Webber, pastor of the First Church, Haverhill, Mass.

William Jewell College this year opened its doors to the girls and seventy-six are registered for the first semester. It will be only a question of a short time before the number of girls will equal or outnumber the boys.

Five new school buildings in Atlanta, Ga., the first in a score of years, are nearing completion. They are fire-proof and built at an aggregate cost of over a million and a quarter of dollars.

The Marantha Church, of Van Wert, Ohio, composed of members who formerly belonged to the First Church of that city, issued a call for a council to consider the ordination of Mr. E. A. Piper. The new church has not as yet been recognized by the association and some of the delegates, feeling that the council was irregular, withdrew. The church, however, proceeded to ordain its pastor. W. R. McKay of the church at Wren, was moderator, and Alfred Myers, was clerk.

Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, writing from Yokohama, says, "The disaster at Yokohama beggars description. Any horror you may have imagined through newspaper report you may double and double yet again and you will not have an exaggerated conception of the severity and awfulness of what has really taken place. The proud, magnificent city of Tokyo Bay, a city a few days ago of 450,000 souls, is prostrated tonight in one vast spread of silent, pathetic ruins."

According to the "Boston Transcript," Rev. Edgar Y. Mullins, speaking before the Connecticut Baptist Convention said, "Two theories exist today concerning the progress of the world. One claims that advancement or retrogression is but the result of blind forces working through the ages without guidance or control; the other asserts that progress is the force or the personality and the will directed by and in conformity with the law of God. When we subscribe to the latter view we see how necessary leadership becomes to the attainment of progress. Individuals must become voices, and not echoes only. The great calling of the ministry in particular needs the characteristic of leadership and education, and education comes first. No great leadership can develop without the background of erudition. A necessary quality of leadership is the belittling of the value of one's opinion and an increasing confidence in one's ability. Let the leader do things in the imperative mood, and let him keep in mind the three judges—conscience, history and God, and there will develop a leadership worthy of the name."

We Have Reformed

"Advocates of spelling reform might begin by lopping off a few superfluous D. D.'s" says the Religious Telescope. THE BAPTIST from the beginning has "lopped" off all degrees tacked to the names of persons appearing in our news columns. We have letters on file protesting against this practice of ours. It would give us a fiendish delight to print these letters in this kollum but we would not further humiliate these brethren. We would save much good paper and ink if we could "lop" off the "Reverends" as well. Nothing makes us shrink to such small proportions as to be addressed in a tone of condescension "Now, Reverend."

Advertise Your Paper

James Cleary, who has helped build the circulation of a metropolitan daily newspaper up to nearly 600,000 says: "It is not enough to get out a good newspaper. Other men will get out good newspapers, too. If you are to lead you must sell your good newspaper. Even if you have the only newspaper in the community you must sell it—advertise it—if you want to reach the greatest number of people."

THE BAPTIST is your newspaper. Its circulation can be greatly increased. Two things are needed. Good advertisers and good salesmen. The atmosphere in which it will be easy to sell the paper can be produced by an expression to others of your interest in the articles, editorials and news. The folks who are selling things in your church can sell THE BAPTIST by an application of the same approved selling methods. The time is ripe for a big increase in the number of copies of THE BAPTIST and Missions in your church. Listen to James Cleary.

The Lord Save Us From Orators

The following story is from the Weekly Clarion edited by the inmates of the Missouri state prison at Jefferson City:

A negro met an acquaintance of his, also colored, on the street one day and was surprised to see that his friend had on a new suit, new hat, new shoes and other evidences of prosperity.

"Hey, boy," he said, "how come you dressed up this way? Is you got a job?"

"I'se got somethin' bettern' any job," replied the other, "I'se got a perfession."

"What is it?"

"I'se a orator."

"What's a orator?"

"Don't you know?" replied the resplendent one in surprise. "Well, I'll tell you what a orator is. If you was to walk up to a ordinary nigger and ask him how much was two and two, he'd say 'four,' but if you was to ask one of us orators how much was two and two he'll say, 'When in de cou'se of human events it becomes necessary to take de numeral of de second denomination and add to it de figger two, I says unto you and I says it without fear of successful contradiction, dat de result will invari'bly be four.' Dat's a orator."

If you were rewriting our news it would seem to you that most of our news contributors are in the oratorical profession.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. George MacDougall, who served several churches in Montana, is now pastor at Arco, Idaho.

The White Temple at Portland, Ore., has recently dedicated a set of Deagan chimes. It is now a feature in the ministry of the church. Rev. T. J. Villers is pastor.

The First Church, Hillsboro, Ore., is thoroughly enjoying its beautiful new church building which was dedicated a little over a month ago. Its old building had been in service for over twenty-five years. Dedication day was a great day for the Hillsboro Baptists.

The Memorial Church, Bridgeport, Conn., on Nov. 5 held a reception for its new pastor, Rev. J. W. Grainger who was formerly pastor of the Calvary Church of that city. On account of a severe accident nearly a year ago, Mr. Grainger has been incapacitated from active work.

A well-known writer and student has been making a study of the pulpit work of a number of ministers. The Christian Register, commenting upon impressions of the writer, says: "It is interesting that the criticism is in a number of cases the same. They lack homiletical, structural ability. They cannot be charged with preaching sermons that are without form and void but only without form.' The editor goes on to say that it is an art to build a sermon which lays hold of a single idea and carries it on to completeness so that the hearer is stimulated to become a doer. Many talks are called sermons. This kind of work may have other names but the right name is carelessness. A real sermon will do more than any other instrument "to nurture the spiritual life, invigorate the church and save the world."

D. H. Otis, a layman in the church at Madison, Wis., extended the welcome of the church to its new pastor, Rev. Norman B. Henderson. In the course of his address he said, "In my judgment we should not act in church matters with the thought of hurting or not hurting another's feelings. I do not believe in putting a man in office merely to keep him in the church. Men who must have their own way or must hold an important office in order to keep them going have something wrong in their spiritual life. Our influence and our votes should be directed to secure the best interests of the church and not to further the personal ambition of any individual. Too many church members look upon the pastor as a man who should preach orthodox sermons. I suppose he should, although I must confess that it would be a little hard for me to define just what orthodox means. There are two sides to this sermon problem. Too many of us desire sermons that entertain rather than sermons that stimulate us to action." Mr. Otis assured the pastor they welcomed him as team mate, a co-worker and a coach.

Rev. Thomas Nightingale, secretary of the Free Church Council of Great Britain, speaking in Philadelphia recently, said, "The two foundation stones of a nation are industry and morality. War smites both. It is anti-Christian. There is a more excellent way, the way of mutual understanding and good-will. If two neighbors should dwell together in peace, two nations should dwell together in peace. We have seen what organized butchery could do, let us now try organized brotherhood. That alone can melt mutual hatred into mutual love. International security is not to be found in any other way. Peace is not going to be had by touching a button or waving some magic wand. It can only come by changing the ideals of a nation from ideals that are war-like to ideals, industrial, economic, moral and spiritual. My Christianity tells me two things: that life is a precious thing and that I must seek man's good and never his ill."

"And He Thought of It Himself"

BLESSED is the man who has a well built-in self-starter. "And he thought of it himself."

Don't wait for a push to start. See the thing to do and do it. Five hundred things wait to be done; all are ready and right at hand. Here is your call:—A pin on the floor, a cob-web in a corner, a stranger without a hymn book or a welcome, a boy hungry for a friendly word, a girl responsive to attention, an electric light out of order, a broken chair, a torn cushion, dust on church furniture, new hymn books first for the church school and then for church worship, those sick in the hospital, some fellow member growing cold, two hundred new Bibles, a flower to send, a letter to write, a call to make, ministry to the shutins, a church calendar to mail, a play with a child, a birthday greeting, a basket of fruit, a word in season, an invitation to dinner, an hour with the one you would win, a good time in your home for the youth of the church, new rooms for the beginners' department, new rooms for the primary department, new rooms for the junior department, the piano tuned and repaired, electric motor for organ and the organ of fine tone made modern, the best for our boys and girls, the witness of a good word for Jesus Christ, a prayer plus personal work, a church office, a new program for the youth of the church.

Yes, 500 and more needy, beautiful, worth-while things wait to be done. And he thought of it himself! Set these words going in our church and success starts with their saying.

—Glen Falls, N. Y., Church Calendar.

Rev. William L. Young, of Madison, Wis., has been appointed interchurch student pastor for the University of Montana located at Missoula.

Mr. W. H. Hamilton of Battle Creek was unanimously elected president of the Michigan Baptist Convention to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. George A. Prescott of Tawas City, who was elected to this office at Hillsdale last May.

The program for the Chicago Ministers' Conference for Nov. 19 announces Rev. J. M. Stifler of Evanston as the speaker. On Nov. 26 the Union Ministers' Meeting will be held at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium and on Dec. 3 Prof. Edgar G. Goodspeed will speak on "Translating the New Testament."

At the Edward Hines Jr. Hospital in Chicago, a government hospital for the care of afflicted soldiers, there are about 900 patients of whom 60 per cent are Protestants. John A. St. Clair is the chaplain at the hospital and the representative of united Protestantism.

On Nov. 1 the First Church, Toledo, celebrated its seventieth anniversary. Dr. Alvah S. Hobart and Mrs. Hobart of Yonkers, N. Y., were present, having stopped off on their way to California. Back in the eighties Doctor Hobart was pastor in Toledo. It added interest to the anniversary occasion to have the presence of these well-known workers.

The large number of ministers in the Middle West who have been urging the stereopticon department to make moving pictures available in Chicago, will be glad to know that on and after Nov. 15 a number of moving pictures can be booked by writing directly to the Stereopticon Depository, 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago. There are four reels in each of these films and they are printed on non-flam safety standard stock. The price will be two dollars plus the express each way. This is the exact cost for storing and caring for the film.

Rev. S. D. Bawden, stationed at the Kavali Criminal settlement in India, writes: "A Dasari member one day came to us with his wife and new-born son. They said that all the other children had died. This one they wanted to have named 'Devadanam,' that is 'gift of God,' also meaning 'gift to god.' They asked that Ongole Moses, the evangelist, lead all of us in prayer for them in their endeavors to bring the child up right. The little incident has been an encouragement to us in the midst of the daily routine work of Erukala Criminal Settlement. Another bit of encouragement was the fact that these people out of their poverty and small earnings have given about Rs. 100/-. They recently voted Rs. 20/- from this fund to help one of our settlement schoolboys who has married and taken over a village school. He is doing good work and creating an increasing desire among the people there for a good school-building."

The Heart of the Cross

THE cross is the unchanging symbol of the Christian church. Originally a gibbet for the capital punishment of criminals it has been so transformed by the grace of God that it is now recognized in all the world as the sign by which the religion of the Christ is differentiated from every other religion. The cross has its history culminating in the death of Jesus—a history which every intelligent Christian should know. It also has its philosophy which any one may read who is willing to take the pains necessary to wade through the various systems of theology. But pulsating in the cross are eternal principles which make the cross the outstanding symbol of the very heart of God himself.

The heart of the cross is the ultimate revelation of the eternal heart of the Father incarnated at a definite point in history. The cross of Christ set up on Calvary did not effect any change in the heart of the Father. It did not change him from hate to love, from anger to favor, from vengeance to mercy. The heart of God is eternally the same. He is unchanging Love, immutable Holiness, infallible Wisdom. Jesus is the embodiment of the heart of the Father. In Jesus the heart of God was embodied in the breast of the Son of God, and the cross upon which Jesus was crucified is his unchanging testimony to the truth about God whom he incarnated. Calvary, therefore, is but the historical emergence on earth of those principles and attributes of the divine nature which are eternal and universal.

But the heart of the cross is also the full and final revelation of the individual and social heart of the human race reconciled to God and held together in the bond of Christian brotherhood by obedience to the law of vicarious sacrifice. Jesus was the whole human race incarnated in a single individual. The first man of the earth, earthy, represented a race opposed to God, to brotherhood, and to vicarious sacrifice. But Jesus, the last man as the head of a new race, represents the race reconciled to God, held together in the unity of the Spirit by obedience to the law of vicarious sacrifice. "Therefore if any man be in Christ he is a new creation, old things have passed away, behold, they have become new."

This is the heart of the atonement. Men reconciled to God by the sacrifice of Christ and redeemed by the re-creative power of the Spirit, and these reconciled men held together in the bond of brotherhood by living and serving in obedience to the eternal law of sacrifice is the atonement in action. The heart of the cross becomes the heart of the at-one-ment for the individual and for the race when the cross is the symbol of crucifixion for us as well as for Christ. The things for which the cross is significant constitute the only workable bond of a Christian social order. The blood of the cross must be mixed in any social cement used to build a bridge across the gulf that separates men from God and men from men. Only as men and nations die to the old racial hatreds and suspicions and intolerance, and live in the new racial love and righteousness and wisdom embodied in Christ and him crucified shall the atonement become dynamic and practical.

The cosmic heart of the universe redeemed and beating in rhythmic harmony with the eternal purpose of God is also revealed in the heart of the cross. Here we push out into the deep. The cosmic element in the cross is tremendous in its implications and significance. The cross is the sign of universal redemption. Jesus made peace through the blood of his cross in order to reconcile all things unto himself whether they be things on the earth or things in the heavens. The whole universe must ultimately be bound back to the heart of God by the cords of love in the bonds of righteousness. The groans of the whole creation are but the birth pangs of a world yet to be born again to the love and holiness and wisdom of the heart of the Father revealed in the cross.

IN this sign we Baptists must conquer. The cross of Christ is the only symbol of our brotherhood. For this we live and serve as individuals and as institutions. And as an agency of our churches we pledge THE BAPTIST to the furtherance of this gospel of the cross. For us the offence of the cross has not ceased. We court neither popularity nor favor at the expense of the cross. The heart of the cross with its dynamic power, its evangelistic message, its social application, its missionary passion, its educational implications, its philanthropic impulses, its universal outlook, is the bond of our unity, the inspiration of our activities, the basis of our fellowship. In Baptist ranks there is plenty of room for difference of opinion, for shades of interpretation, for change of method; but we must keep close to the heart of the cross if we are to be saved from all the things which make for disintegration, recrimination and ultimate condemnation. The cross spiritually interpreted and practically demonstrated is the center and substance of evangelical religion. Baptists are evangelical. Therefore the heart of the cross must ever be the motive force of all our unity and fraternity as we push on to make our full and distinctive contribution to the kingdom of God with an aggressiveness that is never intolerant but always vigorous, sustained and spiritual.

Principle and Process

THE principle of a thing is primary; the process is secondary. This rule holds for everything in life. We sit in our homes and enjoy the concerts that come to us over the radiophone, but the full explanation of the process is still in the land of mystery. Nobody quarrels over the process of radio. All who use it are united in their praise of it. This does not mean that the process is unimportant; it only means that the process is secondary. We must inquire, ask questions, search and study with the indomitable courage and unfailing industry of an explorer if we are ever to learn about the process of things. We must search for truth as the explorer in the face of danger and death searches for new rivers, inaccessible mountains, unfamiliar lands; as the true historian goes to original sources for his facts; as the scientist patiently and at great sacrifice seeks new chemical combinations or some new law of life; but at the same time we must be tolerant and patient with all who have not found the processes of truth and humble in our attitude toward those who have gone far in advance of us in the discovery of truth, always remembering that the processes discovered are subject to change and revision by additional light.

There are many applications of the difference between principle and process. The Baptists for more than 100 years in America have believed in the principle of Christian missions, education and philanthropy; but the method or process of carrying out that faith has changed again and again to meet changing conditions. The first support of missions was given by individual churches acting separately without organization. Then came distinctive organization for the promotion and administration of missions; then separation on account of abolition agitation; then the Northern Baptist Convention; then the General Board of Promotion and the New World Movement. The process has been enlarged and improved, but the principle is the same. Still further improvements were made in the process at the Atlantic City Convention which will be put into operation after May 1, 1924. Cooperation is only a process. When any local Baptist church refuses to cooperate in any given method it is within its rights, because any method of cooperation among Baptists must be voluntary. That is the Baptist position, and it is more important to conserve local church freedom than it is to secure cooperation at the expense of it. But it is always beautiful to see minorities yield to majorities when no principle is violated. The distinction between principle and process is all important in our thinking along all vital lines if we are "to think without confusion clearly, love our fellowmen sincerely, act from honest motives purely, and trust in God and Heaven securely."

Men for the Ministry

THE daily papers have been carrying a circumstantial account of a drive for candidates for the ministry to be carried out by the leaders of a prominent Protestant denomination. In making the effort it is announced that they hope to secure a number of worthy young men by concentrating the attention of the churches upon the great need of candidates for the ministry of their communion. We hope the effort will succeed. Furthermore, we hope that men of large capacity and real heroism will give themselves for this valuable Christian service. The Baptist theological seminaries do not recruit their student body in the manner previously referred to. We get most of our candidates for the ministry and missionary service from our Baptist schools and colleges through life-work conferences in the summer assemblies, through appeals made by church leaders as they go from church to church, and finally through the splendid work of pastors who continually present to their young constituency the call to the gospel ministry. Many of our candidates therefore are hand-picked men and a visit to our theological seminaries the last year revealed that the mental, spiritual and physical equipment of the students was of a high order and growing better from year to year. We must continue to send our best men into the ministry, not the weaklings. We must see to it that every candidate for the gospel ministry gets every needed preparation.

Our seminaries are doing good work, often under difficulties caused by a lack of adequate financial support. We ought to give them larger resources in the future so that they may be able to do even better work than is now being done. We ought also to remember that our Baptist schools and colleges furnish us each year with much of the choicest material for the ministry and our force of missionaries at home and abroad, and therefore when we support them with adequate financial resources we are contributing to a proper supply of ministerial material in the years ahead of us. A strong ministry means a conquering church.

Something Must Be Wrong Somewhere

ACCORDING to the Methodist Recorder the results of a recent questionnaire in West Virginia are disconcerting. Approximately 1,000 high-school boys and girls, the greater part of the number Sunday-school scholars, were asked to name five books of the Old Testament, five books of the New Testament, and to tell in what books the ten commandments were found. They were asked as to the authorship of the beatitudes and requested to write any one of them. They were told to write the first ten words of the Lord's prayer. Twenty-seven per cent of these high-school pupils answered correctly the first question, 29 per cent the second, and only 9 per cent could tell who wrote the beatitudes or quote one of them. To us this raised the question as to the methods of teaching the Bible and the great facts about it. We certainly need teacher-training classes, Bible conferences and directors of religious education in our local churches. We wonder how an old-fashioned course of Bible reading about the fireside would work?

A Page of Opinion

The Hughes Proposal

INTERNATIONALLY considered there is nothing more important than the attempt now being made to solve the problem of German reparations. Under the caption "Page of Opinion" we are glad to give to our readers this very clear statement from the Outlook of the situation so far as the United States is concerned.

"America has not assumed to be an arbiter between France and Germany. The suggestion which Secretary Hughes made ten months ago and which the governments of Britain and France have now agreed in principle to approve was not an offer of arbitration. Unless this is clearly understood, the peoples of the three principal nations involved—America, Britain, and France—may make it difficult for their respective governments to carry out the plan successfully.

"If this plan fails of its limited but desirable object, the consequence will be more than failure; it will be the creation of new difficulties and new obstacles.

"Nothing can make failure more certain than false expectation based on a misunderstanding of the plan itself.

"It is therefore highly important that neither the French nor the British should think that America is setting up herself as a judge.

"There are two obvious reasons why America cannot be an arbiter in this case. First, as Secretary Hughes pointed out when he made the suggestion and has now pointed out in repeating it, America has not been asked to assume the role of arbiter. Second, only a neutral can be an arbiter, and on the great issue between France and Germany the American people are not, and ought not to be, neutral.

"It was on December 29, 1922, that Secretary Hughes first made public his proposal. When he made it, there was, so far as we know, and we believe we can assume so far as Secretary Hughes himself knew, no assurance that France, whose interests were chiefly involved, would either accept or reject it. As a matter of fact, France neither accepted nor definitely rejected it. The conference of Allied Premiers that was about to be held to inquire into the question of German reparations had the power to come to an agreement without calling in any such group of experts as Mr. Hughes proposed. In making his proposal Mr. Hughes based it on a condition. He said (and we italicize the significant words): "If statesmen cannot agree, and exigencies of public opinion make their course difficult, then there should be called to their aid those who can point the way to a solution." It was not certain before the conference was held that statesmen could not agree.

"When that conference broke up, it was with Britain in a minority of one.

"Up to that time France had been making concession after concession under pressure from the British. At this point, however, France decided that further concession should not be made, and, with Britain alone openly disapproving, proceeded to occupy the Ruhr. In the intervening months the German will openly to resist has broken down, and France has arrived at a position of such independence from foreign pressure as she has not enjoyed for a long time. In response to inquiry from Great Britain addressed to the United States, France has now agreed to the appointment by the Reparation Commission of a body of experts to inquire into Germany's capacity to pay damages for the injury she did to her neighbors.

"From the inquiry which the experts chosen in consequence of the Hughes proposal may make it will be harmful to expect results which are not a part of its purpose.

"Certain questions, therefore, should be clearly settled in the minds of the people, as well as in the minds of the governments, concerning the object of this inquiry.

"First, will it have for its purpose or is it likely to have for its effect a revision of the Treaty of Versailles? Those who have been hoping for such revision should make up their minds that they will not find it through this body of experts, and those who have been fearing it may dismiss their fears. This body of experts will have no independent status. In his letter of Oct. 12 to Secretary Hughes Lord Curzon mentioned as an alternative an inquiry "entrusted to the Reparation Commission or to a body elected by them." It is this alternative which the French have accepted. The inquiry will thus be under the authority of the Reparation Commission, and therefore under the authority of the treaty.

"Will the purpose of this inquiry be to find out how much Germany can be relieved from paying? Those who hope that this will be the purpose should for their own sake become disillusioned. In his letter in response to Lord Curzon Secretary Hughes made it clear that America would participate (even by suggesting an expert to be appointed by the Reparation Commission on behalf of America) in no enterprise for the relief of Germany from her obligation. The sole purpose of this inquiry should be Germany's capacity to pay.

"In such an inquiry should there be any consideration of the debts which the Allies owe to America? Secretary Hughes made it clear that the consideration of debts to America can have no place in such an inquiry. If the object were to let Germany off easily, then France might well ask to be let off easily from her debts, and England from hers, and Italy from hers, and so on along the line. But that is not the object of the inquiry. It is solely to ascertain how Germany can pay, and that question is unaffected by any amount that any other country owes to America."

Books and The Book

It is at once the most human and most divine book in all the world's vast library of books. It is rooted in the religious nature of man.

BY JAMES H. SNOWDEN

"BOOKS are boats loaded with cargoes of ideas, the most valuable goods and vital wealth in the world. They come floating down the stream of time, it may be from distant days and far lands and various climes, and bring us freight infinitely more precious than the silks of India, or the spices of Araby, or all the ivory and diamonds and gold of Africa. Yet are they so plentiful and cheap that no one is so poor but may be rich in this treasure.

"Books are the fossilized brains of thinkers that are gone. The ideas that glowed in Plato's luminous brain or soared in Shakespeare's imperial imagination kindle their fires or spread their wings in our minds and hearts. They are vital arteries through which the thoughts and deeds, visions and victories of men of genius pour into us and throb in our pulses. They crowd the glorious consciousness of these gifted souls into our minds so that we see through their eyes and think with their thoughts and are strong with their strength and rise on the wings of their spirits.

The Wizardry of Words

"Words, the first and oldest human invention, are still the most magical things in the world, incomparably surpassing all our modern wonders. Loom and locomotive, telephone and wireless radio are small achievements compared with the wizardry of words. The sign which consists of only a few strokes of a pen or a mere puff of breath yet comes nearer to being the incarnation of the soul and the very life of the spirit than any other device of man. It distills and condenses and crystallizes the living content of one soul and transports it to and dissolves it in another so that two minds think the same thought and two hearts beat as one. A single word may thus diffuse ideas around the world, compel multitudes to think and act together, and shape the history of coming centuries.

"Beware of a word: a thousand thinkers and a hundred generations and countless heroes and martyrs may have distilled their life-blood into it, and at its call they may awake and come forth to fight for it and with it. It may seem impalpable and impotent as so much empty air, but its few innocent-looking letters may contain more condensed potency than all the dynamite on the planet. It may unify and electrify a nation, make a million bayonets think and conquer the world. The simple word democracy has in modern times put kings out of business, overturned all despotic thrones and uprooted some of the most ancient special privileges and most sacrosanct customs among men. The sceptres of kings and emperors are puny playthings compared with these magic wands.

"Books are battalions of words that in their massed might are charged with mysterious and almost miraculous power of molding and merging many and even millions of minds into one thought and purpose and life. They resurrect the past, create the present and foreordain the future. They are the great university and contain all ideas and visions and carry in their bosoms the promise and potency of all achievements.

"Of all the books in the world the Bible is incomparably the greatest and best. It was slowly produced, as diamonds are distilled and crystallized atom by atom, through a thousand years at the convergent and crowded crossroads of the ancient world where all civilizations and languages and religions met and flowed into it. Not only was Palestine compressed into its pages, but so also were Babylon and Egypt and Greece and Rome. All the world was taxed and rifled of its treasures to compose and enrich it. A great many-sided literature of the most gifted people religiously, it is the expressed essence of their history and experience. Historian and psalmist, prophet and poet emblazoned its pages with their pictures of the march of God through time, tossing impenitent nations out of his path, and with the most glorious visions and colors of their inspired imagination. The Hebrew was the most richly endowed child of God and yet also was the most wilful and wayward and passed through the deepest waters and the fiercest fires. He poured his burning, throbbing soul into this book so that it flames with his ardent dreams and hopes, is jubilant with his joyous triumphs, smeared and stained with his sins and tears, darkened with his tragedies and sobs with his sorrows.

"No other book is so varied and picturesque and colorful, so surcharged and saturated with the distilled fibres of the human soul. It is at once the most human and the most divine book in all the vast library of the world's books; and like an old rose jar it will ever retain and emit its precious divine aroma; out of its ancient moss-covered rock will ever gush forth living streams of life. It has been and is the most prolific soil and seed-bed of other books, and out of it have grown vast forests of literature. It can never pass out of human interest and become obsolete, any more than can the majesty of mountains and the mystery of the sea, the beauty of the Parthenon, the plays of Shakespeare, or the soul of Lincoln. It is rooted in the religious nature of man and will endure as one of the permanent and perennial interests and values of our human world.

The New and the Old

"The New Testament is the best part of this greatest and best book. The New is the blossom and fruit of which the Old is the root. It contains the most precious truth distilled out of the richest and most sensitive spiritual souls and brings it to our minds and dissolves it in our hearts. It comes to us out of the greatest period of human history, the First Century of the Christian Era which still overtops all the centuries. It is full of picturesque scenes and stirring stories and dramatic moments. It grows out of a great background and is full of great biographies. It is written in every-day speech in simple words level to the common people and to children, and the simplicity and beauty and majesty and music of its style have been the charm and praise of all the Christian centuries. Translated into no fewer than 770 languages no other book has come near it in circulation over the entire globe. It is read on every continent and island and is incomparably the best seller in the world today. It is a profound book in whose depths scholars may lose themselves, and yet it is a popular book and the common people read it gladly.

"It is a highly composite book, produced by many writers and containing various kinds of literature, history and doctrine, gospel and epistle, parable and prose-poem and panoramic apocalypse, and yet it blends this wide variety into a rich unity. Woven of many notes and chords and melodies, it yet all melts into harmony and makes one music. It gathered honey from all the fields and flowers of the ancient world. It considered nothing human foreign to it and

Unto the End

Having loved his own that were in the world he loved them unto the end. John 13:1

From dawn to evening's dial
When light and darkness blend,
His love bridged every trial,
He loved them to the end.

He washed the feet of traitor
Still in the guise of friend,
No service could be greater,
He loved him to the end.

The cross was Love's last token
When grief his heart did rend,
"'Tis finished," glad words spoken,
He loved us to the end.

Such love my soul enraptures
Both mind and heart commend,
My life it wholly captures,
I'll love him to the end.

taxed all the world for its own enrichment. An oriental book, it is yet equally understood in the Occident. It crosses all continental and racial and linguistic lines and is everywhere familiarly at home. While deeply colored with the soil and ideas and customs of Palestine its pictures are true to the life of every land. It speaks to the universal human soul and sweeps all the mystic chords of the human heart. Never can it grow old and out of date, nor can custom ever stale its perennial freshness and infinite variety. One of the oldest books which we know, it is yet one of the most modern and matches and meets all the experiences and needs of our day and life.

"All its lights are thrown upon its central Figure and supreme Personality. It sets in its frame a Portrait unique and unapproachable in all other literature which no human pen ever produced out of imagination or myth, but which was simply drawn from life and brings us face to face with the living Reality. So realistic and modern is the picture that Jesus seems to step right out of these pages into our homes and streets and marts and all our life.

"The New Testament is an intensely human book, and yet it is none the less but all the more divine. It is not easy to separate and define this divine element, just as it is not easy or possible to draw the dividing line between the human and the divine in providence or in our own consciousness. But this divine element is present as a golden thread woven into all its web, or as a flame that burns all the way through it, or as a relish that is found in all its pages. The book is earthly clay fused with celestial fire, human flesh filled with divine spirit. Its vessel is earthen, but its treasure is heavenly. The breath of God is blowing through this book; nothing else will explain it.

"To know this book is in itself an education. It broadens the brain, kindles the imagination, purifies the heart and transforms the life. More than any other book it has shaped and colored the history of these nineteen Christian centuries, and with every cycle of the sun it is infiltrating its teaching and spirit more deeply into the highest and finest civilization. But as yet it is sadly true that only dimly and slightly is its light seen and its power felt and its truth transmuted into life, and its great days and deeds are yet to come.

"There is vastly more light to break out of this book. Countless seeds and innumerable harvests yet slumber in its soil. When these seeds have been sown around the world and are sprouting on every shore and blossoming in every heart, when all its truth has been turned into bread and assimilated into the life-blood of the race it will be seen and experienced that its words are spirit and life."

The Aftermath of Quake and Flame

By William Axling

THROUGH the combined work of earthquake and fire 67 per cent of Tokyo's map was blotted out, 638,525 houses destroyed and 1,356,740 people made homeless. Throughout the whole devasted area 1,569,743 houses were destroyed, leaving a host of people, still unnumbered, without shelter. The tragic list of casualties is still incomplete. The known dead for Tokyo and suburbs alone is 119,208, the wounded 33,984 and the missing 17,366.

In one of Tokyo's most congested wards 32,000 people perished together in an open compound where they had taken refuge from the pursuing flames.

Yokohama with a population of 350,000 was utterly wrecked by the earthquake and then wiped out by the fire. Although seven weeks have passed since that dark September day the roll of casualties here is still in the making.

Debris Marks Tokyo

Nothing but fire-swept debris marks many of Tokyo's once bustling industrial and commercial centers. Out of 28,274 factories in greater Tokyo 13,063 were destroyed. The loss of the city's commercial and industrial firms totals $1,119,325,000. This paralysis of industry and trade has thrown hundreds of thousands of people out of work and added unemployment to their loss of home and personal property. Japan's total losses in the earthquake zone leaps across the $5,000,000,000 figure.

Notwithstanding the fact that some 600,000 refugees have fled to other cities and the country districts, there still remain 800,000 people in Tokyo and its suburbs who are dependent upon relief measures for housing, clothing, bedding and food. The situation for Yokohama's refugee population is even more desperate.

Rough lumber shanties are springing up over the destroyed districts like Jonah's gourd. For the multitude who cannot even build a shanty the government is erecting temporary barracks in different sections of the devastated area. In these barracks each family is crowded into a 9x12 foot room. Rice is rationed out to the refugees daily and every third day a can of milk is given out for children under five years of age and for invalids.

Christian Institutions Hard Hit

The cataclysm swept away seventy church buildings, and scattered their constituency. A large number of Christian social service centers, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Salvation Army, the American Bible Society and other Christian agencies lost their working plants. A dozen Christian educational institutions were wholly or partially destroyed. Materially it will take millions of money to put Christian institutions back on the map of Tokyo and Yokohama. While Christian leaders and Christians suffered the loss of homes and property in large numbers there were remarkably few deaths among them. The Christian man-power remains practically intact as an incalculable asset for the work of building up a greater and more efficient Christian movement in the ruined regions.

Baptist Suffer Severely

Baptists and Baptist institutions stand near the top of the list of heavy losers. The Mabie Memorial School in Yokohama is a sad and sickening wreck. Absolutely nothing remains that can be salvaged. The Tokyo Misaki tabernacle was completely gutted. The Sarah Curtis school plant, the Shiba, Kyobashi and Fukagawa churches were burned. The newly built Yotsuya Church building and Scott Hall at Waseda University were badly damaged. The just completed Yokohama Memorial Church was gutted and the business men's dormitory and English night school buildings were burned.

The pastors, with one exception, of the destroyed Baptist churches, 239 of their members and hundreds of their constituency were burned out and scattered to the four winds. Pastor Sawano one of our pioneer preachers and Professors Yuza and Ohashi of the Mabie Memorial School lost their lives. The Wynds, Holton, Gressitts, Fishers, Covells, and Toppings lost their homes with all their contents. Misses Carpenter, Russell, Newbury, Acock, Kludt and Jenkins lost everything.

What little property remains will need extensive repairs. Over $500,000 will be need simply to put our work back on the old basis.

Gutted But Going

Kanda ward was the first section swept by the fire and the Tokyo Misaki Tabernacle was one of the first Christian institutions attacked by the flames. In an incredibly short time it was gutted. The partitions, floors, everything burnable was madly devoured. The fire-proof glass in the windows melted like snow. Even the contents of the safe were transformed into ashes.

The reenforced concrete walls, floors, stairways and roof however withstood the wrenching of the earthquake and the baptism of fire. With this gutted shell of a building as our only asset we plunged into the work of relieving the multitudes in distress. The building was cleared of debris and turned into a refuge for the homeless. At present sixty families are sheltered under its roof. These will be increased to 300 people. We secured from the Japanese authorities a large portion of the American relief supplies and became one of the distributing centers for food and clothing.

The city turned over to us the feeding and clothing of our section. It also entrusted to us the milk distribution for the infants and invalids of half of our ward. In this way we are now ministering to 100 families outside of the building. The front entrance and gallery were turned into a free dispensary and emergency hospital and a physician and two day nurses were added to our staff. An average of ninety-five people a day are availing themselves of this phase of our ministry. A free day nursery, free kindergarten and free legal advice bureau have also been opened. One corner of the lower floor has been shut off with rough boards and here dismayed, discouraged human hearts are brought face to face with the great Healer and Helper.

In spite of its wrecked condition the tabernacle and its staff are functioning as a rallying center for their stricken community, trying to inculcate a morale and contribute their bit toward the material and spiritual reconstruction of the ruined capital.

The Greater Goal

Tokyo, the proud metropolis of the Orient, is dazed but not dead. Its people are suffering, but their spirit is unbroken. With amazing courage they are facing the future. They are determined that a greater and better Tokyo shall rise up out of the quake shattered and fire swept debris.

America's quick and whole-souled response has profoundly touched the heart of the Japanse people. It will be strange indeed if this will not inaugurate a new and happier day in American-Japanese relations. The response of Christian America to the task of Christian reconstruction in this empire must be even more speedy and hearty. We are challenged to turn this blow into a blessing and seize this opportunity to make a great forward drive for Christ and kingdom building in this land. Defeat has no place in the Christian program. The future is God's and is as big and as bright as his purpose.

Mixing Steel and Religion

By John A. Howard

THE semi-annual mission conference of the Bengal-Orissa Mission this year was of unusual interest. It was held the last of July at Jamshedpur, that great city right here in our own Bengal-Orissa field. The missionaries, twenty strong, arrived at the station at 9 o'clock Saturday night in a drenching rain. Mr. Browne, our host, met us and helped us to unload our mountainous luggage and pack us away in the monstrous busses which took us three miles and deposited us at the door of his hospitable home, where after a bountiful dinner we and our luggage were finally sorted out and distributed to our various stopping places. Although we slept in different nearby houses, we had our meals together at the mission house. As we gathered around the long tables overflowing into the living-room, we from the smaller stations greatly enjoyed the fellowship of our missionary friends. and the varied fare provided so abundantly by our hospitable hostess. The sessions of the conference were held in a room in the mission house which is being used for church purposes until the completion of the fine new building. The new church, which is in the same compound with the mission house, is to be used for both English and Indian work. Jamshedpur has given generously toward this. Mr. Eller is there now pushing the building operations.

Jamshedpur is on the main line between Calcutta and Bombay. It is about eighty miles west of Khargpur, the nearest mission station, and most of us had never been there before. The low wooded hills, their beauty varying with the weather and the time of day, the shining waters of the winding river in full tawny flood, the factories with their tall chimneys, smoky by day and lurid by night, the beautiful roads, the pretty homes in garden compounds—these are some of the features that impressed us. When we were taken for long delightful rides, and were shown some of the wonderful work that is being done by the Tata Company and its branch industries, we realized as never before what marvels have been wrought in the short time since the company first started its work there.

Doctor Jones and His Message

The business of the conference was transacted with dispatch and to the general satisfaction of all. The usual devotional periods were helpful and inspiring, but the feature of supreme interest and inspiration was the presence of Dr. Stanley Jones, as our guest of honor and spiritual leader. The messages he brought to our conference were heart-searching and inspiring. We were soon aware that he knew missionaries and understood their weaknesses, backslidings and problems. His strength lay not alone in letting us see ourselves, but in that loving admonition and reproof which leads to sincere repentance. Doctor Jones impresses one as being a man of deep consecration, a man who lives and breathes in the realm of the spiritual, yet has his feet firmly planted on the earth. He has studied the Master, lived and walked with the Master, loved and worshiped him, until he unconsciously imitates him in social intercourse with man, in his humble and devout spirit, and in the method of his preaching, which has no uncertain sound. To him the Bible is God's Word, Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh, repentance and salvation, a work of grace wrought by the Holy Spirit, the shed blood of Calvary our only hope. Whether speaking to a group of missionaries, or to a crowd of educated Hindus, his central theme is Jesus Christ, the world's Saviour. Whatever his subject, its development leads to the foot of the cross. In these days when so many preachers avoid the cross lest it prove a stumbling block, and fear to mention Jesus Christ lest Hindus and Mohammedans take offense, it is refreshing to listen to a man determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified.

Doctor Jones is one of the greatest preachers of this generation. He is free to go anywhere and serve any mission or cause. His salary and expenses are paid by his board so that his services in Jamshedpur were a contribution from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

His coming just at this time was a special favor. He was spending July and August in a retreat and in teaching a course on Benjamin Kid's "Science of Power" at Shantinekatan, in Doctor Tagore's International University. As he said, "After seven years of continuous talking to India, I felt that I wanted India to talk to me a bit." This engagement was the only one that he accepted during these two months. We valued his presence and to his Master whom he loves and who brought him to us, we are bound in a new devotion.

The Indian Meeting

Doctor Jones is commissioned first of all to work among the students and educated Indians. He has already won a place of respect and influence among these classes such as few have ever enjoyed. He is overwhelmed with invitations from all sorts of Hindu social and religious organizations, covering his time for months in advance; the largest halls often prove inadequate and his services must be held in the open air to accommodate the crowds, and again it is proved that Christ, if lifted up, will draw all men unto himself.

While in Jamshedpur, he was invited to speak under the auspices of the Vivekananda Society, a non-Christian religious organization. The president of this society, S. Gupta M. A., requested Doctor Jones to speak on Jesus Christ. Of the two subjects given him to choose from, he chose this one, "Jesus Christ and the Problems of Today." The meeting was attended by 200 of the highest paid and highest-ranked non-Christian Indians in Jamshedpur. The room was packed.

Doctor Jones, after dealing with primitive religion, law and science which in turn have held the minds of men, and which have in themselves proved inadequate to solve the problems of men and the problem of sin, proceeded to deal with each of the problems of the present day and to find their solution in Jesus Christ. He fearlessly faced the problem of labor, and capital, of race, of war, and, finally, of character, and in each showed that only the transforming power of Jesus Christ can take from the lives of men the selfishness, the greed, the pride, the sin that are the causes of the problems. In conclusion he contrasted the pure, beautiful lotus floating on the pond with the mud at the bottom of the pond and showed that the only possibility of transformation of the mud into beauty was by its being drawn up into the life of the lotus and receiving new life. "Except a man be born from above, he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

As Doctor Jones came to his last point, the problem of character, and preached a direct and personal message of salvation through Jesus Christ, there was a breathless stillness, and the president of the meeting, the most highly respected Indian in Jamshedpur, and a non-Christian, sat there in rapt attention with the trace of tears in his eyes. As he rose at the close of the lecture, among other things he said, 'Never have we heard such a lecture as this in Jamshedpur. We shall always pray for Doctor Jones." He was right. They never had listened to such preaching. The president of the society, in proposing a vote of thanks, said that they thanked Doctor Jones for his lecture because he presented "not Christianity but Christ."

A mission conference in Jamshedpur! Is such an event in Jamshedpur too much for the imagination to imagine? Jamshedpur, the most conspicuous and flourishing steel center in Asia, where the whistle calls men to work seven days a week, fifty-two weeks in the year—would this place have time to listen to addresses on religion? Jamshedpur, a people whose taste enjoys such films as "The Devil Dancer," "Experimental Marriage," and tends to dislike all that "smells missionary"—would this same people have room for great hymns and great sermons? Jamshedpur, with 85,000 non-Christians, with a mixture of races, languages and religions hard to find anywhere else in the world, would such a tangle have room for Jesus Christ? Jamshedpur, a public that has seen and rambled on dozens of horse-races, that has crowds of thousands witnesses scores of football games—would this same public welcome a mission conference as well as a racing club from Calcutta and a sports' association from Madras?

The truth is that Jamshedpur was not asked what it thought of mission conference, because it had never had one, and did not know what one would be like. Plans were made for the conference in the faith that people are waiting to be guided by thought, reason and Christian principles, as well as to be swept along by impulse, instinct and pleasure, that they love God more than gold, and that they are satisfied with nothing less than the Father's presence, and the highest manifestation of that presence, Jesus Christ.

This faith was justified. The general manager of the Tata Company did everything that opportunity offered to make the conference feel at home. He furnished and turned over to the mission for the use of its visitors two bungalows, and gave the institute auditorium for the public sessions of the conference. The town administrator (mayor), the son of a Wesleyan missionary and a man with some Baptist ancestry, gave a very striking address of welcome at the opening session. The Vivekananda Society, with the cooperation of "Milanee," a large Indian dramatic club, arranged for one of Doctor Jones' meetings, and its president, the chief medical officer of the Tata Company, Dr. Chakravartti, presided.

All the public sessions of the conference were attended by more people than have ever before turned out to religious gatherings in Jamshedpur. Some put their motor-cars at the disposal of the mission. All the expense of the conference—the getting out of 900 hand-bills and the printing of 250 programs—was met by the English church at Jamshedpur. The only offering taken during the whole conference amounted to Rr.100/—and that was sufficient.

Forty of the Welshmen came from Golmuri to the opening session and sang "Jesus, Wondrous Saviour." Mrs. A. E. Hirsth, a member of the Christian church from Youngstown, Ohio, arranged a musical program for the reception the last evening. No member of the conference could escape the spirit of welcome that surrounded the gatherings and that Jamshedpur and Golmuri expressed especially on this last evening. The climax came when twenty of the missionaries were in the station bus at the front door of the mission house. The Welsh boys from Golmuri, who had contributed so much to the musical program, came outside together with all the Jamshedpur friends who were still present, and all sang with hearts touched with tenderness, "God be with you till we meet again."

Steel and religion did mix. Again faith won. For some valiant souls who had been in Jamshedpur, three, five and eight years without enjoying any such gatherings, these conference days were the happiest and sweetest of all their stay in India. Jamshedpur does respond to real preaching. When 200 of the most intelligent and highest ranked non-Christian Indians will listen with eagerness and breathless attention to genuine preaching and in the English language, let us be very slow to conclude that Jamshedpur offers no opportunity for preaching in English and rather rejoice that man's Christ maketh room for him.

The Source of Power

A message by Corwin S. Shank, president of the Northern Baptist Convention

FOUR years ago the Northern Baptist Convention fixed upon certain objectives covering a definite time. We are now approaching the end of this period. Our program was not set up by one church, but by the whole denomination, and it contemplated unity of action and oneness of purpose. Our accounts will soon be balanced and it will be for every church and for each member to answer squarely how well we have done team work to accomplish a common objective. In any great democracy there are always a few who do not see with the majority, and while some churches have failed altogether, and others have not lived up to their full opportunity, yet on the whole we should thank God that so large a percentage of our people have thrown themselves actively into this great work. We are not responsible for results, but we are responsible for doing our utmost to accomplish what we believe to be a plan divinely approved. If the churches are brought to a new realization of their responsibility by November 1 one-half of the budget as fixed upon at Atlantic City will be actually paid in.

Through the great program of Bible and missionary conferences now in progress it is ardently hoped that by the end of the fiscal year we can show our program completed in a way worthy of any great body of people engaged in a great work. While to many it seems that our objective is raising money, let us not forget that this is only a means to a great end. Our program has contemplated increasing missionary activity throughout the world and the extension of Christ's kingdom in all lands, as well also the enlargement of every home missionary activity that will tell for the planting of the banner of Christ more securely in our home land. Our real objective is not money or things, but soul winning, securing men and women everywhere to become born again and this time of the spirit of Christ in whose behalf we labor. There ought at all times to be real spiritual power coming out of any financial campaign, and conversely there ought to be real financial power coming out of any spiritual campaign. If I mistake not, we are accomplishing now in a large measure these results throughout our field. It is a happy circumstance that we are not lashing ourselves into a frenzy, but are calmly and deliberately putting forth every energy and leaving the results to the Master. With a great constituency of a million and a half people spurred on to a common objective, and with a consecrated spiritual leadership, there is no such word as failure.

Let us all keep ever in mind that Christ is the source of our power and remember if we do our duty he will produce the results that are best for his kingdom.

Our Teaching—A Stewardship

A church holds its young people by using them. Keeping all responsible tasks under control of experienced hands tends toward the reefs of one-man domination

By Morgan L. Williams

"LET me do it, mother! Let me do it!" was the earnest plea of four-year-old Junior, as his mother began pouring syrup on his breakfast waffle. And we all watched him take the big pitcher in his little hands while his mother, with loving patience, permitted him to attempt a new and difficult task. Of course he did not hold the pitcher as securely or pour the syrup in just the quantity and place that mother's hand could do; but he managed well and spared the table linen under the wise guidance of one who believes it of more worth to train her child than to spare herself the annoyance of accidents.

This simple incident has reminded me repeatedly of a serious problem in many of our churches. We usually find a mature parental hand doing the Lord's work; and often from force of habit that hand is thoughtlessly performing most of the tasks which inexperienced members should be trained to do. "Let me do it!" is the silent pleading of babes in Christ as senior workers pour the syrup. The juniors are greatly desired at the spiritual table, and it is a joy to serve them in Sunday school and church meetings; but we forget that they like to have active part in the operations. The easy way to run the church is to keep all responsible tasks under the sure control of experienced hands; they can achieve with less mistakes or embarrassments.

Reefs of One-Man Control

By such reasoning and lack of direction many churches drift toward the reefs of one-man domination. The number of capable, well-trained church workers is always limited; and if this staff is not supplied with other workers in training, death and other causes deplete the number of leaders until only a few "pillars" remain, one of which comes to bear greatest responsibility. This one man or woman may be a financial power in the community and a very worthy citizen, but the growth of the church is hampered in this monopoly of office and effort.

"We built our church thirty-seven years ago," remarked my friend as we approached the beautiful structure. "Our senior deacon was then chairman of the building committee, and from that day until last year he has been chairman of the trustees. He entered the work as a prosperous young business man, and he has been our chief support during all these years. And," he added with a twinkle in his eyes, "his record as superintendent of the Sunday school covers nearly fifty years." That city church is now wisely shifting responsibilities to other hands; and the hand that gripped church offices once so securely and permanently now cheers younger men in the work. God's blessing on the veterans in our Lord's service! We honor them by wisely training others to carry the torch.

Inexperienced young Christians have a right to responsibility, and opportunity to make some mistakes and blunders. Junior members of the board of deacons may tremble in self-consciousness when passing the communion service at first, but like all of us they learn by doing. It seems characteristic of many prayer meetings that the mature members do most of the praying. The leader calls for a "season" when several brief prayers are to be offered; and as a period of silence ensues, one or two devout souls pray long and fervently. This is well. No one disparages earnest prayer; but may there not be in the meeting some young Christians who would say: "Oh, we would voice prayers too if we were encouraged"? We need to ponder what Jesus did when his disciples asked: "Lord, teach us to pray." Like children they wanted to pour out their inner thought and feeling in worship, and Jesus taught them to do it. Those who offer long prayers in our meetings oft forget that they began praying publicly when, as trembling children in the faith, they were encouraged by their seniors. In many devotional meetings of our young people's societies the pastor and mature leaders are called upon to pray and take active part in the program; and the young leader and other immature members sit back, courteously inhibiting the expression that ought to cry out, "Let us do it! We want to learn by doing." Each society of young people may well have a few experienced parental souls in their midst, but these should remember their call to a teaching-stewardship.

Quality Meetings vs. Leadership-Training

The many facts bearing on this problem seem to indicate that our churches are more concerned in promoting good meetings than in training life. The syrup must be poured out with great care and precision. We are so particular about the quality of production that we fail to develop the inexperienced producer. Take for example the musical program. We have led our congregations to be critical of the production. Trained musicians are demanded for faultless rendition of works of art; and while paid singers are pouring forth beautiful harmony, the listening ear of a soul that understands may hear a silent plea from aspiring youth in the congregation: "Let us do it! We would learn to sing." Of course some earnest souls cannot sing, and their place of best activity is not in a church chorus. But all churches have voices to be trained. And chorus work gives them opportunity to render special selections occasionally. Let the trained voices guide them, and let the patient church family kindly excuse many imperfections in the production for the sake of developing life.

After baptizing two young men into his church membership the pastor said to his board of trustees: "Brethren, we must put these fellows at work if we keep them interested in our church. I propose that they take the responsibility for ushering at our evening services." And one of the two officials who had performed this duty for many years exclaimed: "What! Those young men usher and take up the offering? I know them very well, they are not dignified enough for that task." But the wise pastor risked the "dignity" of the service, and gave the young men a chance; and today they are faithfully doing the work to which aging hands were clinging. That church is holding its young people by using them.

Thrust Into Service

The eager unrestrained impulse of the little child at breakfast is hidden and subdued by the time he is a youth in the church family. Only as the junior nature has had growing expression in the life of the church do we secure a trained youth ready to accept large responsibilities. Very often because his seniors have neglected his development by trying to do everything for him, youth turns away from the family and goes into a far country where he can do things for himself. Many churches, if they save their young people, must literally thrust them into positions of active service and responsibility. "For twenty years I was superintendent of our Sunday school" remarked an elderly layman as we shook hands at the close of an interesting associational conference. "I got into the work when a young man," he continued, "by being elected assistant superintendent, and when the superintendent dropped the work shortly after the church said 'Let the young man be our leader.' I did my best in those inexperienced days, and under my leadership the school prospered." As he finished this question came to my mind but I did not voice it: "And did you push other young men into responsible positions under your leadership?"

Most of our mature workers came to their tasks after much encouragement and help from their seniors; and now as Christian stewards of the offices they hold, let them pass their capability and experience over to the junior members of the church family. The time was when every skilled artisan employed an apprentice at his side. Every trade was learned thus. Have we forgotten in this automobile age, that colts are broken to harness and pull of a load by hitching with trained horses? Let us look to our teaching-stewardship in the service of Christ Jesus.

Opportunities in the Far West

On the wrinkled, corrugated surface of a land that is largely desert live the souls who create the opportunity for altruistic service.

By G. Clifford Cress

WESTERN opportunities like the lure of gold ought not to be scrutinized by any who have not some degree of ruggedness in their makeup. A good many bones bleached along our western trails in the early days. There are still quite a few mountains of difficulty, alkali deserts and death valleys to be conquered by the pioneers who are blazing the way for the heavenly-minded commonwealth that is to be out here. If the opportunities hereafter noted seem to be bristling with cactus—like spines of difficulty; if they suggest problems calling for brain-sweat and agony of spirit; if they seem to summon us to grim sacrifice rather than to poetic contemplation, let it be remembered that all permanent spiritual conquest is achieved through personal and collective reenactment of Gethsemane and Golgotha.

By the far West we are thinking of Rocky Mountain America and the Pacific slopes. Here on the wrinkled, corrugated surface of a land that is largely desert live the souls who create the opportunity for altruistic service. Lest my reader fail to get the catalog, let me make it modern and list my beckoning opportunities—one, two, three!! And there can be only a few suggestions for each. The reader must use his imagination to clothe these gaunt outlines.

(1) The Isolated Homestead

There is a missionary in Montana, supported by the New World Movement money, whose field lies forty to ninety miles from the nearest railroad station. Boys and girls almost grown have never seen a telephone, electric light, brick building or train of cars. Corpses are hauled a hundred miles to the nearest cemetery for burial. There are mothers in lonely valleys bringing up families whose hearts ache for the word of God. The isolated homestead and the neglected souls of men are legion. No one has ever cared for their need. Whoever would serve these lonely stretches must share their life. Only vicarious ministrations by workers who will voluntarily accept exile will win, for these frontierfolk do not quickly give their confidence to strangers. The need of the isolated cannot be met by eloquent sermons relayed by radio but only by human fellows who can suffer in order to serve.

(2) The Migrant Groups

In every part of the West there are increasing bands of wandering men who shift about, following seasonal occupations. They harvest and thresh and market vast crops of wheat, oats and barley. They irrigate, gather, sort and pack the fruit crops of a thousand irrigated valleys. They catch and pack fish. Most of them are middle-aged or older men who have no homes or intimate family ties. They never go to church. In most cases the church does not go to them. There are in every gang of men some boys who yesterday knew a mother's care. They have begun the long tramp that ends so often in the poorhouse, county hospital or suicide's grave. No single denomination can reach them. It calls for a cooperative effort and must be area-wide.

(3) The Industrial Group Exiles

The vast clip of wool that annually goes to eastern mills, carries in its greasy ill-smelling bales the life blood of an increasing army of men who live and die in the forests, mountains and deserts caring for the flocks. No man cares for their souls. The cattle on a thousand western hills are watched, branded, rounded up and sent to market by another group of exiles. In remote places where the church seldom goes are large groups of miners, living, working and dying like rats in their tunnels to produce the metallic wealth of the nation. They number great bands of men absolutely exiled from what makes life dear to most of my readers. And then, there is that other group of exiles—the hewers of logs and sawers of lumber. Living in exile! Visit even the best groups and let your Master say what your response to this ought to be. And again, few people consider the need of our western railroad men. Trackmen, trainmen, supply and shopmen on the long steel lines, are, multitudes of them, living in forced exile from home and the gentler side of life. We accept the service of their isolation. Do we care for their souls?

(4) The American Indian

He still waits by tens of thousands on reservations of his conqueror's choice, and does not dream that the paleface has a God of love nor a Saviour whose keyword for human life is service. Multitudes of the original sons of the western soil, if they think at all, must regard us as devoted to a god called Power and inspired by an insatiable acquisitive lust of things. Where love and service have been given to the Indian, the harvest has been similar to returns from irrigated fields—surpassing great. He still holds out mute hands and beckons for help that comes with painful slowness and niggardly measure.

(5) The Yellow Asiatic

He is here. He is a numerous group. One says he is decreasing; another report says he is increasing. We send many missionaries across the Pacific to his friends over there, but over here we exclude him, segregate him, restrict him. He is a great producer of food from our soil. We eat his products and we are caring for his soul in a measure. But no one living out here is satisfied with our measure of service to and for the yellow brother. He is not more unreachable than many types of white men. When he goes to our schools he is more easily approached through a common language. The greatest of all American problems face out over the Pacific. Good citizenship as well as good Christ-likeness sends an S. O. S. to every sensitive soul among us to get busy and treat all Asiatics as human brothers. Will we listen in and get the message from our Great Leader?

(6) The Mexican

All over our West you will see him living in shacks and other wretched places. He comes at our request to work on our railroads and to raise our sugar-beets. He is ignorant and superstitious and nominally Roman Catholic and knows little of our democratic ideals. His children sit beside our children in many schoolrooms. In many localities he outnumbers the white American stock. He has a lower mentality than the Asiatic but he can be won to Christ and the better ideals through love and service as Arizona and California have so well demonstrated. Can we reach the group? There are over 600,000 here and still they come.

(7) The Mormon

Increasing as no other religious body in the United States of America in proportion to its membership, all our western land is being permeated by this mongrel religious faith. This revival of the primitive Phallic cult is mixed with smatterings of Christian ideals and hundreds of thousands of souls acknowledge allegiance to the first presidency of an ecclesiastical organization that for completeness of cohesion is not excelled by any on earth. It is now sloughing off some of its cruder externalities, but at heart it is just as pagan as it ever was. Missionary efforts for the salvation of Mormons have not been too numerous nor too strongly pushed. Baptists have an increased obligation to the Mormon opportunity. All our agencies for winning them back to simple Christianity should be greatly multiplied and generously supported. It is a challenging opportunity.

(8) The Denominational College

If Baptist schools are needed in the East to make their contributions to the world's need, then by the same token the West needs them too. One seminary at Berkeley and two colleges at McMinnville and Redlands and a junior college for girls at Denver—these complete our list. The opportunity is great, the difficulties are mountain-high, but the future leadership for the throbbing West will come out of schools. Can Baptists contribute leadership in the West tomorrow by training many of our sons in schools that are saturated with the life and passion of our Lord and Master? The answer rests with us.

(9) Our Neighbors and Our Children

They are all about us and ever with us. They are our nearest-at-hand open door. It would be tragic indeed if while we build programs for the other far-away groups we neglected those near at hand. There is a danger here. Our neighbors and our children call us to renewed devotion in our homes and churches already established. We who live in the West must get under our burdens anew.

Wherever there is distinct and outstanding need of service, there are our opportunities for missionary effort. There are many distinct areas of need in the great West. These challenge our attention and if we will but look at them until our attention becomes fixed, it will not be long until our sympathy will be stirred. Then if our wills are reinforced by the "mind that was in Him," we will not be needing any further call to service. Apparent destitution, our ability to relieve it and the inner Spirit will be a trinity pointing the way to opportunity to translate into action the faith and life that are in us. The New World Movement which we are bringing to a close this year is just the modern way of spelling out a lot of downright hard work. That may be one reason why it is not more popular with some people.

The New World Movement is closing. But the opportunities of the West are to be always with us. They will change as the evening lights on desert and mountains, but the responsibility of this generation is to those who are among us today. Our children will live in the world we are creating for them here on the sunset slopes. Our apathy and neglect will ripen into miserable results for them, for the sins of omission of the fathers are visited upon the children as are those of commission. If the kingdom of God rests on righteousness, truth and brotherliness we may be co-laborers with God today in laying these abiding values as foundations in the hearts of men who are pioneering in the rapidly developing areas looking toward the Pacific.

For what will it profit the West, if, while clearing off the forests, harnessing rivers and compelling mountains and valleys to give up their boundless wealth, we should lose Jesus who alone gives meaning and purpose to life? All missionary opportunity for the West as for the individual man everywhere, when stripped down to its final reality, simply means putting Jesus in all his regenerative and creative power right in the very heart of all life. On this all-inclusive conviction we Baptists must build our programs for East or West, for the individual and for the social group.

Annual Session of State Conventions

New Jersey

By Frederick Blaser

THE ninety-fourth annual convention of the New Jersey Baptists was held in the First Church of Asbury Park, Oct. 22-24, 1923. The theme of the convention was "Winning New Jersey for Christ." In spite of the "northeastern" with a deluge of rain for thirty-six hours, the enthusiasm ran high and the attendance passed expectation. The women—God bless them—were faithful in all the sessions, putting the men to shame in that they braved the pouring rain while many of the men toasted their feet at the fireplace in the hotel lobbies.

The program was well balanced, with a galaxy of stars as speakers such as Devan, Jones, Tomlinson, Swetland, Garabrandt, Roberson, Traver, Lynch, Goodall, Jerome, Foster, Mrs. Coleman, Miss Hughes and others. The themes discussed were evangelism, education, rural work, foreign work in cities, home and foreign missions, social service, finance, etc. At no time did interest wane on the part of the delegates, for the addresses were clear and to the point, the discussions brotherly and for the purpose of illumination rather than criticism.

The workers in the state office were alert and ever ready to answer questions, to furnish needed data and to give such assistance as was requested from time to time in the transaction and dispatch of business. The rich spiritual atmosphere was evident in the fine sermons delivered on Monday in the state pastors' conference by Rev. Arthur S. Devan of Plainfield, N. J., who spoke on the "Challenge of Youth" and by Carter Helm Jones of Philadelphia who swayed his audience by his telling address on "Christ's Representatives." Prof. I. H. Matthews of Crozer Seminary gave five devotional addresses that were helpful and inspiring and permeated the whole convention life and purpose.

The board of managers, through Recording Secretary Joseph M. Twomey of Newark, presented its annual report covering the many activities of the year and reflecting great credit upon the board for the efficient way in which the King's business had been transacted. Several amendments were offered to the constitution for the purpose of greater efficiency; these were unanimously adopted. It was noted that appointees to the board of managers who absented themselves from the board meetings, twice in succession without excuse, were automatically dropped—"Workers not shirkers" is the slogan.

A detailed report of the finances was presented by the treasurer, Charles D. Brady, involving receipts and expenditures of $117,741.27, and Judge Horace Roberson of the finance committee presented facts and figures making clear the seemingly involved report of the treasurer. In spite of the large increase of receipts in the state for the New World Movement, the convention has an accumulated deficit of nearly $50,000 which we are determined must be raised before April 30, 1924.

The future denominational program as adopted at Atlantic City was presented for ratification and after careful and prayerful discussion was adopted unanimously with a few suggested changes, chief of which was concerning eligibility of salaried officers on the board of missionary cooperation as found on page 11, article 3, of said report. The convention noted that such distinction was not wise, inasmuch as the executive secretary of our convention was well qualified to act in our behalf. The budget for the state for 1924-25 to be secured for all causes was noted as $500,000, of which $100,000 was for New Jersey missions, $25,000 for Peddie Institute and $25,000 for new work. The convention recognizes the impetus received during the New World Movement and would press on to even greater things.

The delegates listened with intense interest to the address of the executive secretary, Charles E. Goodall, as he, with telling logic, spoke of "Three Hopeful Signs in our Kingdom Task." Beloved by all the men and women in the state, because of his humanity and brotherly spirit, he was acclaimed as one of God's great leaders. By vote of the convention his address will appear in full in the annual. The election of officers was in keeping with the entire program. Who shall succeed F. Wayland Ayer as president? was the question of the hour. When the nominating committee presented the name of Judge Horace Roberson of Bayonne, N. J., for president, every one felt that the mantle of our illustrious leader had fallen on worthy shoulders. Many years had he served the convention in various capacities, and his knowledge of denominational affairs qualifies him to be our leader.

A. M. Harris of Plainfield, Howard Eastwood of Burlington, and Rev. W. D. Thatches of Trenton, were elected vice-presidents. Charles E. Goodall, executive secretary; Rufus M. Traver, field secretary; Charles M. Brady, treasurer, and Joseph M. Twomey, recording secretary. B. F. Fowler, active in convention business for thirty-two years, part of the time as treasurer, was elected an honorary member of the board of managers, with power to vote. Wildwood, N. J., was voted as the place of meeting for next year, on the hearty invitation of Pastor I. H. Fisher.

The Loyalty luncheon was attended by 187 women while the laymen's luncheon had 150 men present. At the closing session, which was a rally of the laymen and women of the state, enthusiasm ran high. The churches will feel the impact of this great gathering during the coming year.

At the close of the Wednesday morning session a tender memorial service was held recognizing the faithful service of seven pastors and two laymen who were members of the board of managers. Dr. Gibbs Braislun read the obituary report, after which tribute was paid to Francis Wayland Ayer, who for twenty-seven years served as president of the convention, by B. F. Fowler, D. G. Garabrandt, A. G. Lawson and Frank A. Smith.

The thanks of the convention are due David MacMurray and his good people, who so graciously, entertained us, placing at our disposal the church and parsonage that the King's business might be done promptly and in order.

Kansas

By J. T. Crawford

THE sixty-fourth annual meeting of the Kansas convention was held in Wellington, Oct. 16-18. It was preceded by an all-day conference of our ministers and an all-day meeting of our women. Both departments had excellent programs.

Wellington, the county seat of Sumner County, is a beautiful little city that takes pride in its streets, public buildings and the number of conventions it can entertain. We met in the new $40,000 building of the Wellington Baptist church. James Fisher, graduate of Ottawa University and of Rochester Seminary, is the active pastor. The church royally cared for the delegations. Heavy rains prevented the large attendance that had been anticipated, but the numbers approached an average.

The out-of-state speakers at the convention were Dr. W. O. Lewis, Baptist representative in Europe; Dr. F. W. Padelford of the educational board and the four women constituting the Loyalty luncheon team. They were all appreciated and brought helpful contributions to the convention.

A thirty-minute period of prayer was shared each morning, conducted by Pastors A. R. Hardy of Newton and H. A. Smoot of Parsons. Two exceptionally helpful quiet-hour addresses were delivered. Pastor W. A. Elliott of Ottawa spoke the first day and brought a serious message on sin. Pastor J. B. Smith of Wichita suggested three lessons from "The Angelus"—work, love and worship.

The report on state missions listed 105 workers under appointment during the twelve months, serving a total of 77½ years. They preached 9,529 sermons, made 24,178 visits, baptized 1,141 converts and welcomed 836 other persons into fellowship of the churches. These figures are 9 per cent above the highest number of baptisms and additions reported through missionary labors in any other year of the convention's history. The announcement sounded a note of encouragement in our missionary work.

The report of the committee on future denominational program adopted by the Northern Baptist Convention in Atlantic City was ratified by the Kansas Convention and a commission of nine was appointed to study out plans of cooperation and shape the financial budget for the state during the coming year. This commission has taken its task seriously and has already had its first meeting.

The educational session was of unusual interest. President S. E. Price of Ottawa University, was on the program for "Our Denomination and Its Colleges." He read a paper of exceptional value which, by vote of the convention, will be published. President P. W. Crannell of the Kansas City Seminary also delivered an address of high order on "Our Seminary and the Denomination." One year ago the convention appointed an advisory committee to meet with the trustees and executive committee of Ottawa University, study the work done in college and report to the convention. Among other things in its report, the committee presented the results of a questionnaire on doctrine, which had been submitted to the faculty for personal answer. An intense discussion concerning the college occupied altogether about one-half day. It was conducted on a high plane, void of personalities. In the general opinion, good was accomplished by the discussion and progress was made in denominational understanding and harmony.

At the close of the Wednesday afternoon session citizens of Wellington brought their automobiles and gave the delegates a delightful drive over the city. This pleasure was followed by the women's Loyalty luncheon and the men's supper. Both were well attended and at each a program of special value was enjoyed.

R. L. Parker, professor of history in the state teacher's college at Hays, was elected president; Pastor O. M. Showalter of Emporia was reelected recording secretary, and J. T. Crawford of Topeka was reelected general secretary and director of promotion. The convention will meet in Ottawa next year.

Connecticut Anniversaries and Centennial Celebration

THESE meetings were held in the old First Church meeting house, Hartford, now occupied by the Central Baptist Church of the city, Oct. 15-17. It was fitting that the Baptists of the state should meet in the capital city of the commonwealth, where on Oct. 29, 1823, the convention was organized in the then First Baptist Church, during the closing years of the pastorate of Rev. Elisha Cushman.

The ministers of the state met in the forty-second annual session, Monday, Oct. 15, at 11 a. m. Rev. M. W. Schuh conducted the devotional services at all sessions during the day. Changes in the ministry were reported by Rev. E. E. Gates. The new pastors were introduced by Dr. A. B. Coats and welcomed to the ranks of the elect by President P. F. Wolfenden, Rev. Wm. Ross, pastor of First, New Britain, and Rev. J. G. Osborne, pastor of Mystic Union, were the essayists. The work of the M. and M. board was presented by Rev. E. T. Tomlinson, New York. The following officers were elected: Pres., Rev. B. N. Timbie, Meridan; secy., Rev. A. D. Carpenter, Torrington.

While the ministers' conference was in session, the Central Church woman's society gave an informal reception, in honor of Mrs. Herbert J. White and Mrs. John Newton Lackey, the pastors' wives of the entertaining church, after which a luncheon was served by the woman's society. The president, Mrs. D. P. Gaines of Waterbury called the meeting to order and Mrs. H. B. Hutchins of Hartford read the minutes. Mrs. E. E. Gates, Hartford, and Mrs. J. G. Osborne, Mystic, paid eloquent tributes to the life and work of the late Mrs. M. W. Schuh, Hartford and Mrs. Chas. A. Merrill, Noank. Mrs. H. M. Thompson, Stonington, dean of Baptist ministers' wives in the convention spoke in her usual interesting and delightful fashion on the subject, "Pastors' Wives Whom I Have Known." Officers for the ensuing year: Pres., Mrs. Horace B. Sloat, Suffield; secretary, Mrs. J. G. Osborne.

Rev. M. W. Schuh, chairman of the commission on religious education, reported on the work of that department for the past year. A large audience listened with great interest and profit to Dr. Chas. N. Arbuckle and Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, while with clarity of thought and faultless diction they spoke respectively on, "The Outlook For Religious Education" and "The All-Sufficiency of Divine Grace and Gospel."

The Connecticut Baptist Education Society

This society, thought to be the oldest of its kind in the country, at least among Baptists, held its one hundred and fourth annual session Monday evening. The society is by no means showing any traces of age except the rare good sense and wisdom born of experience shown in the selection of the speaker for the occasion. Reports showed the society to be assisting seventeen students, with a balance in the treasury. The society needs more money and can be trusted to use it wisely. After the transaction of business, President H. J. White introduced Dr. E. Y. Mullins, who captivated the large audience with his lucid and humorous utterances on the subject of "Religious Leadership." In a significant sense Doctor Mullins is the embodiment of the philosophy he advocates. His message was strong, sane, searching. Fanatics cannot thrive in the atmosphere created through a trained "religious leadership." New officers: Pres. Rev. H. J. White; vice-pres., Rev. H. M. Thompson, Stonington; second vice-pres., Rev. J. G. Osborne, Mystic; auditor, John Starkweather, Ansonia; secretary, Rev. B. N. Timbie, Meriden; treasurer, Fred B. Bunnell, New Haven.

Convention Centennial

The Connecticut Convention convened on Tuesday, Oct. 16, at ten o'clock, in its centennial session. Rev. P. F. Wolfenden, pastor of the Bristol church, conducted the devotions throughout the day. Dr. Herbert Judson White, in the dual capacity of a co-pastorship and on behalf of Hartford Baptists, welcomed the delegates in a hearty and historical address befitting the occasion. Charles

P. Walker, formerly of New Haven Calvary Church, now residing in Hartford, the first vice-president of the convention, responded to the welcome. For the sixth time, Dr. John Newton Lackey addressed the Baptists of the state as president. By means of a historical retrospect he made a comparison between the conditions in which the churches in the past have labored and the conditions confronting the churches of today for the purpose of emphasizing the call to preach and magnify the ministry of the church to meet the world crisis. In no uncertain language Doctor Lackey emphasized the necessity of Christian people standing staunchly and unitedly for law enforcement. After which he reviewed the work within the state and urged upon all the churches loyalty to the denominational program. Dr. A. B. Coats reported for the board of trustees, and Charles Edward Prior, treasurer, followed, with his report. Rev. Chester H. Howe, pastor of the First Baptist Church, New London, preached the annual sermon on, "Stand Fast in Christian Liberty." It was an interesting and timely message. At the afternoon session, Rev. E. E. Gates, reported on his work as pastor-at-large, and Dr. James McGee reported for the committee on evangelism. After this a review on woman and the kingdom was presented: in Connecticut, Miss Mary L. Howard, Hartford; in Cuba, Mrs. F. J. Peters, Havana; in the United States, Miss Alice W. S. Brimson, Chicago; in the world, Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, Chicago.

Following the afternoon session 275 men met in Jewell Hall, at the Y. M. C. A. H. H. Dickinson, Hartford, presided. Rev. H. M. Thompson, offered prayer. The Suffield School Glee Club, led by Headmaster H. G. Truesdell, sang several selections. The speakers were: William Travers Jerome, New York; H. B. Dickson, Ohio, and Rev. A. E. Rapp, New Jersey. Mr. Dickinson was made permanent chairman of the state organization for laymen.

At the same hour the women gathered in the Y. W. C. A. 375 strong. Miss Mary L. Howard presided. Speakers within the state were: Mrs. J. H. Morshead, state director of the C. W. C.; Miss Edith Wing, president of the state W. W. G.; Mrs. G. C. Laudenslager, state secretary of missionary education; Mrs. J. F. Barton, white cross work and Miss Evelyn Cranska, Children's World Crusade. Mrs. F. J. Peters, Mrs. Andrew MacLeish and Miss Brimson were again heard with interest.

A large crowd assembled in the main auditorium for the closing session of the day. A report by the state board of promotion was presented by Rev. Horace B. Sloat, the director, and adopted by the convention. Mrs. F. J. Peters again sang the gospel message most effectively. Mr. Peters told of their work in Cuba. It was a thrilling message by a man of conviction. "Northern Baptists Uniting to Complete the Five Year Program with Honor" was the subject of Dr. Aitchison's statesmanlike address, after which he introduced H. B. Dickson and Rev. A. E. Rapp who both spoke briefly in the interests of the Bible and Missionary Conference which met in New Haven, Nov. 12-14.

State Tasks

Wednesday was the closing day of the convention and took on more generally the aspect of a centennial character. Rev. W. J. Barnes, pastor of the First Church Stamford, was in charge of the devotional services for the day. At the morning session our foreign work within the state was brought to the attention of those present by Rev. John Daviduk, Hartford, representing the Russians; Rev. F. Sannella, New Haven, the Italians, and Rev. L. Ravesz, Bridgeport, the Hungarians. Rev. J. C. Jackson, D. D., pastor of Union Baptist (negro) Church, Hartford, gave an illuminating and humorous address on "Our Work for the Negroes." The receipts of the centennial thankoffering, to that date, amounted to $7,282, as announced by Rev. E. E. Gates, chairman of the committee. At this point, Rev. D. P. Gaines, of Waterbury, chairman of the committee on revision of the constitution and our future policy read the report of the committee. This was virtually serving notice of proposed changes in the constitution and a realignment of our work under the proposed constitution somewhat in harmony with the report of the committee on our future denominational policy as presented at Atlantic City. The report is to be studied and action taken, one way or another, at the annual meeting in 1924.

In the fifth session of the convention the delegates returned to the consideration of the larger kingdom interests. Rev. Sherrod Soule, secretary of the Congregational Mission Society, brought denominational greetings. Many things of interest were contained in his congratulatory message, one of which was that there was a mighty difference between "living and lasting." He said, "Methuselah holds the record for continuity of breathing and the chore of making longer and harder work of dying than any other man. That is the only footprint he left on the sands of time as far as we can find out. The life that left the largest influence on the world covered only thirty and three years." With unabated interest the large audience welcomed William Lyon Phelps, Yale University, who made the historical address of the occasion. Doctor Phelps was born in Hartford and was at one time a member of the Asylum Avenue Baptist Church. His father, Rev. Sylvanus Dryden Phelps, was twice president of the convention. The speaker's birth, family, church, state and educational affiliations, together with his scholarly attainments and ever-growing popularity qualified him in an exceptional way for the service he so joyously rendered on this occasion. He traced the history of Baptists in general, and in New England and Connecticut, in particular, emphasizing the one fundamental principle, individual freedom, showing that while Baptists are usually religious radicals they are never anarchists in the light of the civil law. "The Strategic Hour for Baptists" was the subject of Dr. James H. Franklin's address. The secretary of the A. B. F. M. S. made it very clear that Baptists have now an opportunity to make good. There is need for their message and their interpretation of the scripture.

Following the opening exercises of the hour the work of the convention for the past 100 years was shown, in part, with pictures by Rev. H. B. Sloat. After which, Rev. Clarence A. Barbour, president of Rochester Seminary, brought the closing message "The Past is Secure, What of the Future?" Here again we have one who was born in Hartford and who grew up in the old First Baptist Church of the city where he was speaking. His reference to the past was reminiscent. The future had to do with the religious and educational life of the individual churches of the denomination. Taken all in all the gathering was one of unusual character. In an appropriate way it marked the culmination of a century of Baptist work in Connecticut. The program was unusually strong, and every address of a high order. The weather was exceptionally fine. The attendance unusually large and the spirit of fellowship delightfully refreshing. The hospitality of the church was unbounded.

Massachusetts

By C. H. Watson

EVERYBODY says that our state meetings at Lynn were at the pinnacle—in attendance, in bristling interest, in well-conceived program, and in almost dramatic disclosure of the varied activities carried forward by the different organizations comprised.

The city and the church proved an attractive rallying center. From beginning to end the programs were practically attractive, and were so arranged that each society culminated in kindling interest at the finish. Harmony was in the air. Only one ripple in sight, and that so little it was at once forgotten.

The First Day

Three societies take the first day. The state Conference of Ministers opened with their business and their addresses. One of the outstanding features of the entire three days of meetings was the address of Rev. H. C. Abbott of Maplewood on "What should the Mid-week Meeting Mean to the Church." Mr. Abbott showed how church, Sunday school, home—everything religious could be pried up by developing the prayer meeting. What made the speech the more effective was that he had done what he was describing and pleading for. What a background for real oratory!

In the early afternoon came the brief meeting of the State Charitable Society which cares for the widows and orphans of ministers. Heading the new officers elected is Rev. D. M. Lockrow, who in the presidency succeeds Rev. Geo. A. Lawson. The society is both solvent and useful.

In the later afternoon the Ministers' Conference came on again. They had a sort of symposium on the sermon: its sources, its process, and its objectives. Doctor Roselle, Doctor Babcock and Doctor Lake took the three parts in their order, and provoked a deal of ministerial cogitation.

Education Society

This anniversary came in the evening. President De Blois was in the chair, and speeded the annual business. Then came another symposium on the actual work of the society, which followed an admirable report from Mr. Everett A. Greene who voiced the vital connection of the Newton trustees with the society. The work among the students was described by two representatives of the student body, Miss E. G. Appleton and Mr. A. R. Perron. The work seen from the viewpoint of home and missionary pastors was described in addresses that captured the large congregation and provoked unusual response. These were by Rev. C. L. Seasholes, Rev. E. A. Elwell and Dr. J. E. Cummings of Burmah. A veteran, who is one of the best of judges, declared it "the best meeting of the Education Society in forty years!"

Second Day

The entire day is given to the state convention proper. The mayor of the city, and Pastor C. J. Underhill, said, "Welcome" in characteristic fashion. Nearly 1,300 delegates enrolled. Everything full, and everything perfectly prepared and handled. So notably smooth all things worked that Pastor Underhill was mentally voted a sort of genius. The reports of Doctor Heath, Treasurer Langhill, and Leland H. Cole for the finance committee were encouraging. The financial condition is solid. Excess of receipts over expenses is $4,069.

President A. H. Curtis closed an administration of marked efficiency, and Dr. Everett C. Herrick, of Fall River, is elected to succeed him. His welcome into the high honor and opportunity is enthusiastic. Secretary Dolan conducted an informing conference on the work among the churches, which brought out Rev. Benj. Lomax, Rev. W. Carter, and Rev. Elizabeth Campbell. The closing morning address by Dr. Maurice A. Levy on "Facts and Folks" rounded up a session rich in inspiration.

The afternoon brought on representatives from the women's societies—Mrs. F. L. Anderson, Mrs. Nathan R. Wood and Mrs. K. S. Westfall. Then followed an important conference on the denominational program for the year led by Doctor Heath, and a rousing closing address by Rev. W. Harry Freda on "Safety Last." Pastor Freda stressed our world obligation with power.

The women's society used the supper hour for a large banquet, Mrs. Henry W. Peabody presiding, during which home and foreign missionaries were introduced. At the same hour there was a laymen's banquet, with an address by William Travers Jerome, Jr., on the "Layman's Privilege" followed by discussion and quiz.

Two attractive features of the evening session were an address by Doctor Aitchison on the homestretch of the five-year program, and reaching the goal with honor; and an illustrated lecture on "Stockholm and the Baptist World Alliance."

The Third Day

This was the day of practical application. Four addresses brought great matters close at hand—Doctor Peterson on "Items in Religious Education," Miss Gertrude Hartley on "Taking a Pilgrimage among church learners," Prof. J. P. Berkeley on "Missionary Education," and Dr. E. D. Webber on "The Great Trust."

The afternoon session touched all the features of the state work, the Sunday schools, the religious pageant, the monthly workers' conference, Sunday-school evangelism—all the angles of our work among the new Americans and city missions. It was a session bristling with dramatic interest. In the evening came the young people's rally. All of the delegations were heard from. Doctor Peterson outlined the young people's program, the banner was awarded to the champion society, and Dr. O. C. Brown, of our Publication Society, gave a ringing address that emphasized the prayer inscribed upon the printed program for the entire three-day meeting—"Thy kingdom come!"

It was a great convention—from first to last vibrant with purpose, and stimulating to spiritual action and achievement. All the speakers were "home talent" except the two New York secretaries, and we had a mortgage upon them. The Washington Street Church was a royal host, and made the largest state convention of Baptist guests ever convened very happy.

All on a Sunday Morning

By S. D. Bawden

AT 6:30 in the morning our services began with the convening of Sunday school. I was called away from conducting that. Leaving a clerk in charge, I shed my coat and gave my undivided attention to the pumping engine which had refused to run. It was necessary for our people to have water. It was nearly ten o'clock before I got it to operate properly.

After that I interviewed by special appointment ten men who had been placed in the guardhouse the night before on suspicion of being implicated in an absconding scheme. Our records showed that they had each run away several times before. As a group they were ready enough to talk, and claimed to be absolutely innocent, but I insisted upon interviewing each of them separately and alone, showing him how he had caused me to lose confidence in him by his previous record, and outlining to him the way in which he could restore it. I said I was willing to take the promise to pay of individual members of the settlement, to the amount, based upon a sliding scale, of Rs. 15/—per person, if a man absconded. A person who had absconded once before must find two persons or Rs. 30/—in cash or jewels; a person who had absconded twice, double that; a person who had absconded three times, Rs. 90/—; a person who had absconded four times Rs. 120/—. When they said they could find no one to do that for them, I said that if their own people could not trust them to stay, I surely could not. They would have to remain in the guardhouse till some one believed in them more than I did.

The following day, two of the men brought their friends to stand surety for them, and I released them. Six more have appeared in the same way, leaving only two who have not produced security. Doubtless you think I am a pretty hardhearted sort, but what is a man to do? What would you have done, given these men who are trained from earliest childhood in evil ways—to whom the only profession open to them (before they come to us) is robbery, and whose one idea after coming here is to get away back to the old life? Some of them are glad to learn honest ways of living and to have work given them by us. But not all. The ideals of the gospel do permeate slowly among them, but it is an up-hill job, and I am doing the work of about six men. It sure is a man's job—one of the most interesting jobs in the world, this Erukala Criminal Settlement at Kavali.

Those who assume that the labor unions have their own way in Great Britain will be interested in the following, from the New Statesman for Sept. 15: "There is, indeed, an evident reason for the extensive bickering between trade unions (at the recent session of the Trade Union Congress)....During the past three years practically every society has been fighting a hard battle. The slacker members have dropped out as soon as the union funds have run low and the prospect of further benefits have disappeared. The slump in trade union membership has been as rapid as the rise during the preceding years of prosperity. Members have thus acquired a scarcity value. Unions and their organizations have been more than usually anxious to get and hold members, and have not always let pass opportunities of getting them from a rival society. Poaching, and the resentment caused by poaching, have alike increased in proportion to the fall in total membership. And, in the absence of any strong coordinating authority, there is no effective means of preventing the use of this method of getting members, and no way of bringing pressure to bear on the offenders save by washing in public the dirty linen of the labor movement." We have witnessed something very similar in the churches of some communities.

A Church With a Woman in It

NOT necessarily rich!

Not necessarily a recognized pillar!

Not necessarily the one to whom everybody always turns instinctively to get a thing well done with the least expenditure of energy on the part of everybody else!

Not necessarily witty or capable or physically strong, but gifted with imagination enough to put herself into another person's shoes: such was Mrs. A.

There were, for instance, the shoes of the pastor. "Suppose I were the minister of my church," said Mrs. A to herself on one of those delightful excursions of her soul, self-conducted hither and yon on various occasions. And since the pastor was her specialty for the moment she concentrated on him for a whole half hour as she darned the family socks. For we might just as well divulge to you a certain whimsical secret of Mrs. A's—she abominated mending; but in a family of her size the wash sent up its weekly offering, and she mitigated the drudgery by invariably spending that entire mending-time in thinking of her church. Literally, it was dedicated to God, that period of mending. And God blessed it, as you soon shall hear.

For an hour is a considerable space of time; and two hours is doubly so! Therefore many things got themselves thought out and sponsored in those consecrated seasons of patching and repairing. To return to the pastor. She began thinking him out.

Here was a man who was devoting his life to things of the spirit, working among a group of persons who spent six days of the week working with things of the flesh. For business is a very physical matter of bread and butter and roofs over young heads and shoes on young feet. Here was a man who felt called of God to make bread and roofs and shoes fit into the scheme of God; to make men see the kingdom of God as a living life, not an after-death life; to make bread and roofs and shoes glorify and adorn the gospel. Dear me, could he do it? But he was doing it—every day—Mr. B, she remembered, Miss C. Mrs. D. Oh yes, he did that difficult reconciliation daily; but the dependables, on whom he ought to be depending, did not always support him. They took him awfully for granted!

Well, she would not take him for granted. She thought it all out: she darned all his good points into socks, she patched all his successes onto bloomers, through those two engrossing hours—and she went forth from that room with a little course of action outlined.

"Mrs. E," she said, "I've just been thinking what a wonderfully lucky church we are to have Doctor X. It was by mere chance that I heard about his influence on the young Jones boy; did you know—etc., etc., until Mrs. E's face lighted with enthusiasm and she went home to tell Mr. E what a rare pastor they had. For enthusiasm is contagious. And Mrs. A, from the ponderings in her quiet room, came forth radiating the enthusiasm she could not help but feel for the successes of the man of God.

She enumerated them. She gently wove a subtle halo around the head of a man who rarely heard of haloes in these brisk prosaic days when ministers must be everything from Rotary Club speakers to good golf players. But she wove the halo; she created the impression of his imprint; and she worked up a degree of cooperation that all the deacons could never have done; nor all the trustees.

For she was—owing to those hours of mending—a "specialist in atmosphere." May her tribe increase!

For instance, she took one day to ponder about the new members in the church.

"Looking us all over," she decided, smiling. "The set of our hats, the hang of our dresses, the tilt of our smiles. By all these little nothings they are judging us the first few weeks. And then, maybe, loneliness. Certainly loneliness for Mrs. F and her daughter. I think it would be so nice if we had a definite plan in our church to care for these people whom Doctor X works so hard to get into the membership, another job we all take for granted, both while he does it, and afterwards. I wish we had a plan by which we could ask these new folks home from church with us on Sunday for dinner! It would warm the cockles of their hearts, and make them feel as if they 'belonged.' I believe I'll just speak of it—"

She did. And the Sunday-go-to-dinner habit "took." But there were certain housewives to whom a dinner sounded too arduous. Their families were too big, they said; they had no help, said others. "Neither have I!" mused Mrs. A with considerable amusement, for she knew what you may have learned yourself, that the Lady-With-a-Maid is not nearly as free to have company as the Lady - Who - Does - Her - Own - Work. "Bridget" doesn't take kindly to an extra plate or two. "But I'm free! Free! Free!" smiled Mrs. A, complacently. "Even with four boys and a baby I'm free to be hospitable!"

But on her next mending day she devoted her time to the problem of the fussy housewife who felt that she had to "fuss" all day Saturday and "fix" all day Sunday for the guests. However silly this all was, Mrs. A recognized that there were women with no sense of proportion who put garnishes above friendship, and best silver-linen-china above usefulness in their church.

"I've got it!" she beamed. "If Polly could just put the kettle on they could all have tea!"

And tea-parties settled it. For anybody can brew tea. Anybody can buy a little chocolate-coated graham cookie at the corner store. Anybody can ask anybody else to tea of an afternoon. And out from the musings of that quiet day of mending rose the lovely plan of get-acquainted teas, when the newcomer in

Tasks

By Martha Haskell Clark

IT matters not so much what work I do, as that I bring to something all my best.
Those who may choose their task are few, so few there needs must be some answer to the rest.
There are so many lives with broken wings, so many eager souls aflame with hope
Ground dustward 'neath the heel of Little Things, or set through blinded alley ways to grope.

For one must sit and tend the glowing peat, and shut his heart to spring winds calling wide,
And one must walk the world on wistful feet, who longs for home and flame-sweet chimneyside;
And one must lead who rather would be led, and one must follow who might master be;
And one plods down a furrow who instead might thrill a world with new born artistry.

And so I think it cannot matter much just what it is my hands are called to do.
If broom or palette proffers to my touch, or drear or drab the highway lies to view,
For I believe that He who wove for each, upon His loom, one silver thread agleam,
Shall read his heart beyond the need of speech and set his feet at last on Paths of

the midst was invited to meet other members of the church. And, oh wonder of wonders, the tea-party committee arranged it so that every such newcomer had two teas given for her by two hostesses about ten days apart. It created a wonderfully wholesome atmosphere!

The men in the families grew a bit jealous. And from this green-eyed jealousy grew the famous Coffee Club. For Mrs. A's husband said that if the women had teas he was going to have "coffees." For men only. To welcome the gentlemen newcomers.

"And who's going to brew your coffees, my dear man?" inquired Mrs. A curiously.

"You are!" he announced, with the "of course" accent in his voice.

"Then," said Mrs. A, "the lady newcomers shall be included."

And they were. "Coffees" became very popular, and the little groups that met to welcome the strangers formed vital contacts which Doctor X recognized as highly useful in spreading certain interests needing to be broadcasted. The New World Movement, for instance. There never was a "coffee" held in that church where there were not a couple of four-minutes speakers, at least, emphasizing some phase of the bigger work of the church.

All this set Mrs. A to thinking harder than ever over her next mending. Of all her dedicated hours with her needle those were the most troublesome hours. For she found a great beautiful task set for her denomination, one of the projects closest to the heart of the Saviour, and undertake this beautiful task she found only a handful of her church members, all a bit half-hearted, a bit selfish, a bit reluctant—

It took hours of thinking to think it out. But for a Specialist in Atmosphere nothing is really impossible! For the Creator of Enthusiasm there is a charm in the very difficulties! Out of the hours of concentration came an idea: "I'm not a good speaker, because I get flustered too easily if people oppose me. But this is one thing I can do I can write a letter. Yes, I can do something even shorter than that, I can write a postcard. I will send for a catalog of the Board of Promotion and start in."

It was a curious quiet service, this! She sent for the interesting colored postcards of the Orient. She wrote little messages on the appropriate cards: Isn't this picture of India charming? Did you know that 6,000,000 Telugus in South India had been left to Baptists to educate, evangelize and doctor? That's what our New World Movement is doing."

She sent that on a Monday. On Tuesday she mailed an interesting two-cent leaflet about our Baptist work in India, with a little written note in one corner: "I was fascinated to discover what worth-while results the New World Movement is bringing to our Baptist work in India." On Wednesday she sent another leaflet, with another note across the corner. On Thursday another. On Friday she wrote a short letter: "I'm not a woman of any ability, and I can't speak in public; but I have become so astonished by the wonder of the Baptist task that I do want all my friends to share in the splendid opportunity ahead of us this year. Has any one told you what the Continuation Campaign is?" etc., etc.

Over every sock she brooded concerning the wording of those letters. Over every button she prayed that God might give her the inescapable phrase that would win this other woman until she too specialized in enthusiasms and created an atmosphere.

Oh, Mrs. A! Such simple service you have given, within the scope of every humblest woman; and yet our denomination needs most, at present,

A church with a woman it it!

Suppose we all fell to dedicating Mending-Time to thoughts for the kingdom of God? What an atmosphere we could create! North, south, east, west, there would be Christian climate in all hearts, there would be Baptist weather in the world!

The Young Reserves

Dear Young Reserves,

I read THE BAPTIST every week and I like our page very much. I like all the stories, especially about the heroine who ate those heathen berries and was a Christian even with red lava bubbling around her. I like all the stories. I would have liked to have us change our name to "World Reserves," because mother says that is what Miss Applegarth is surely changing us into. She sent me some foreign postage stamps last winter and to my sister, this is what she wrote us about them. "The Chinese one with the sails on it must not be pasted into your album without your taking a little pretend-journey to China, my dears, for it came sailing to you down a thousand miles of Yangste River from a very, very dear friend in Suifu. She's by way of being a heroine, for she's entertained bandits in her home for dinner, and then she's traveled down the Yangste rapids and all sorts of whirlings and swirlings have happened to her and her boat and her baggage. Charley, her victrola, was so smashed up that it lost its four sides, but over in China victrolas are such obliging creatures that they go right on playing melodiously for all nice Baptist missionaries! At least her victrola did! Amazing lady, to charm a sideless victrola into music. And her sewing machine had to be bandaged up with ropes before it worked properly. But neither bandits nor rapids nor the difficulties of the Chinese language can daunt this brave young person and her brave young husband. Aren't you glad you're a Baptist, too? So when you paste in your Chinese stamp, remember its adventurous trip down that magnificent Yangste, and remember the missionary hand that put it on my letter. For missionary stamps are really a bit more exciting than stamps. Just any stamp!"

Helen and I think that Young Reserve letters are "a bit more exciting" than "just any letter," and we've copied it off for you. Although maybe you got a letter like it yourself, if you sent for a stamp.

Your loving friends,
Charley and Helen Lewis,
Dayton, Ohio.

(Note: It isn't often that the Chimney Corner editor has the fun of quoting her own letter this way! M. T. A.)

The Toronto B. Y. P. U. is contributing to the support of the Chinese work in that city. Last year they raised $35 for the work and they are still carrying it forward this year. The forty-three unions in the association contribute monthly to the treasurer who turns the money over to the Chinese workers.

A new department has been inaugurated in the B. Y. P. U. of Ontario and Quebec called the "Home Fire League." The secretary of every union or the clerk of any church where there is no B. Y. P. U. is asked to send the interprovincial secretary, Mr. W. Fred Reynolds, the name and present street address of any member of the union or church who has recently moved to another city or town, either in Canada or the United States. The idea is to use the interprovincial organization as a means whereby contact can be established with some Baptist church in the place where the young member has gone and thus prevent his or her losing interest in spiritual things. They also urge the sending of at least quarterly letters from the home union or church to these young people and the planning now of some means of remembering them at the Christmas season.

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS
"THE LIFE-OBEDIENCE PSALM"
Ps. 103:1-22 (Consecration Meeting)

By Thomas J. Hopkins

The one-hundred-third psalm might have been written and sung in heaven. Its spirit of calm trust is like a placid lake, which mirrors the sky, reflecting not even a fleck of cloud. The singer commands himself to "bless Jehovah," and to be and act in tune with the Infinite. But he sees a tremendous "because" for it all. Consider, then, first,

The Psalmist's Reasons for Life Obedience

He says his sins have been forgiven, and with forgiveness has come cleansing; his diseases have been healed, and not alone disease of the body, but disease of the mind as well; his life has been redeemed from destruction, and again it is not mere physical life referred to, but life which includes soul; he speaks of loving-kindness and tender mercies; and does not even forget to mention what most of us are very apt to forget, the continuous benefits, the more familiar, commonplace blessings of life, without which life itself would not be possible.

But the psalmist is impressed not alone by what Jehovah does, but even more by what he is. "He is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abundant in loving-kindness; he will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger forever; he has not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us after our iniquities." He is specially tender toward those that fear him, pitying all such as a father pitieth his children. He pities all men, for he remembers that they are dust and their days are as grass, or like the flower of the field, over which the scorching wind bloweth and it is seen in its place no more. But contrasted with the brevity of human life is the everlasting loving-kindness of God; especially to those who keep his covenant and remember his precepts to do them. But consider secondly,

The Psalmist's Response to the Reasons for Obedience

All men have in many respects the same reasons for life-obedience to God, but only those who actually respond to the reasons for obedience ever live in harmony with the divine will. In view of what God does and chiefly because of what he is, the psalmist calls upon his soul to bless Jehovah. His soul, mind you; his inner self: his intellect, a tribute of which is this marvelous psalm, bearing as it does the marks of inspiration no less than of genius; his affections, which are poured out in every line; his will, which sways Godward as the oaks are swayed by a strong wind. Here was a man who was committed to God and his ways from within outward. No lip service will suffice for him; it is "Bless the Lord, O my soul and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

The writer widens his circle, for he is truly missionary in spirit; he would have all bless Jehovah. It is God's right to be blessed, for "his kingdom ruleth over all." The psalmist therefore would have all men bow to him in loving and glad obedience; he dares even to address the holy angels, "mighty in strength, that fulfill his word," to join in blessing God. He widens still more the mighty circle and calls upon all God's works to praise him and closes with his eye focused once more upon himself, as he says with great emotion, "Bless Jehovah, O my soul." That is to say, after looking at angelic hosts singing sweeter songs of praise than he can frame, and after thinking of nature's varied tribute, from flower, stream and star, he would make the obligation of his own soul all the more binding, as he bids it join in the glorious music.

Young people, this is a psalm for a consecration meeting. The choice is most appropriate. And if you have in connection with its study a real consecration meeting, in harmony with this bit of devotional literature, which is a transcript of a devoutly religious life, it will be the means of registering some real consecrations on your part; else they will be strangely at variance with this psalm. No reading of what some one else has said will quite answer the demand; clippings should not be too much relied upon here. But each one in the society, for the psalmist's reasons, and for some additional ones, for you are more favored than he was, should be led to stand up and pray or speak right out of his own heart, in prayer or testimony of consecration, and say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

SOMETHING DONE OR DOING

Philadelphia City B. Y. P. U. held its fall rally Oct. 25 at the Tioga Church. The meeting was in charge of the Boston delegation. The young people gathered at 7:45 for a Boston parade, and it was some parade. A picture gallery was in charge of Miss Myrtle F. Auch, the pictures in which were scenic, descriptive and otherwise. The Boston Convention was brought home to the young people of the city and many decided to "pack up for Denver," not right away, of course, as far as a suitcase was concerned but to join the Denver Saving Club.

Institutes and Training Schools will be held in different parts of Northern California, the B. Y. P. U. cooperating with the board of promotion of the Northern California Baptist Convention, and the director of religious education, Dr. Millard L. Thomas, in putting on these schools, covering such subjects as the "bigger and better" Sunday-school campaign, young people's work, junior work, evangelism, missions, etc. Such a school was held at Lindsay, Calif., Oct. 26 to 28 under the auspices of the San Joaquin Valley Associational B. Y. P. U.

At the Virden Church, Illinois, recently three societies were organized in one day, a junior society, a new senior society, and an adult society. The latter will meet the need of those who were past the age to take active part in the regular society. Special topics will be the basis of study every Sunday evening and regular attendants upon the church service are invited to come early and join in this Sunday evening forum.

* * *

Miami (Ohio) B. Y. P. U. Association held its fall rally Oct. 5 in the First Church of Hamilton. The auditorium was filled with young people representing nineteen different unions. After a song service and a short business session roll call followed, the response coming in cheers and songs. The attendance reward, which went to the young people of the Lincoln Park Church, Cincinnati, was a portrait of Warren G. Harding, the first Baptist president of the United States. Rev. C. W. Atwater brought the young people greetings from the World B. Y. P. U. established in Stockholm, Sweden, July 25, 1923.

Some three thousand Chicago Baptists and their families will gather Thanksgiving morning at three churches in different parts of the city to take part in the annual sunrise prayer meetings to be held under the auspices of the Chicago B. Y. P. U. West District people will meet in the Oak Park Church, North District in the Moody Institute Auditorium and South District in the Morgan Park Church. At each of these meetings there will be inspirational congregational singing and special music, a sermon by a local preacher and a great prayer and praise service in which all will be given an opportunity to thank God publicly for the many blessings of life. For the past two years the B. Y. P. U. has given annually over $1,000 the collections from these services, to help bring the gospel and spread good cheer among the inmates of the Oak Forest Institutions.

International Sunday School Lesson for December 2

THE POWER OF THE EARLY CHURCH

Lesson: Acts 2:1-8:7 Golden Text: Acts 2:21

The presence of the Holy Spirit of God in the lives of men and women devoted to Jesus the living Christ accounts for the power and activity of the early church. This in a single sentence covers in a general way the theme and condenses the text of the lesson into a form sufficiently compact to provide for unity of aim without the sacrifice of necessary margin.

The Presence

When Jesus was about to leave his disciples he promised them that he would still be with them in the presence of the Holy Spirit.[4] Soon after he departed from Bethany he returned in the person of the Holy Spirit. The lesson is an account of that return and of the things accompanying and following it. The rushing wind, the tongues of fire and the ecstatic utterances in the languages represented at the feast of Pentecost were among the significant things accompanying the presence of the Spirit. The sound as of the rushing of a mighty wind was symbolic of the Spirit's presence because the very word for spirit in both the Hebrew and Greek languages is the word for wind or air or atmosphere; and the tongues like as of fire sitting upon each of them were signs of the tongues with which they began to speak as the Spirit gave them utterance. A divine intoxication gave an abandon and freedom to the disciples which caused the onlookers to charge them with drunkenness. The whole pentecostal account of Luke is charged with an emotional element strangely in contrast with the sober account of the ascension of Jesus and the subsequent prayer meetings in the upper room. Something had happened to break up the decorum of the meeting, and Luke explains it in the words, "And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit."

One, however, cannot read the account carefully without noting that emotion was balanced with intelligence and poise. This is strikingly brought out in Peter's explanation of the phenomena and his review of the historical events leading up to it. Poise is often lacking in passion, and passion often becomes fanaticism because it lacks poise; but under the genuine afflatus of the Holy Spirit's presence both are found in perfect balance.

The Power

The presence of the Spirit in the lives of the believers in Jesus the Christ accounts for their power. Power is more than influence. Influence is magnetism inherent in a human being; power is energy communicated by the divine Spirit to a human being. All people have influence, but not all have spiritual power. Peter had influence before Pentecost, but after Pentecost he had influence plus power. This is the difference between one Christian and another and between one church and another.

The Power of the Early Church

The power of the early church was manifest in certain directions. It enabled Peter and others to understand more clearly and spiritually the meaning and mission of Jesus in his life and death and resurrection. It raised their mental powers to a higher degree of discrimination. The power of the early church was evident in healing the sick, in facing heroically the spirit and law of stewardship in the disposition of property, in successful evangelistic ministry, in suffering persecution without resentment or threatening, in projecting a simple form of democratic church organization which remains to this day a model of good sense and efficiency.

The early church as described in these chapters which constitute the text of the lesson did not utilize all the power available. It remained for Saul of Tarsus to be converted and become the great dynamo of missionary enthusiasm. But that is another story, or rather the continuation of this story.

What Is Religious Education?

By John L. Rae

Let us begin with a working definition of education. Education is the organized process of developing those qualities in the individual which further his happiness, efficiency and capacity. This definition though brief and inadequate is at least suggestive. It suggests the orderly side of education as an organized process. Topsy just grew and birds may just fly, but human beings can make real progress only by submitting to an organized system of education. And education is a process—a slow process of learning on the part of the pupil and instruction on the part of the teacher as distinct from a miraculous crisis by which some few people seem to have been born with a strange precocity. Education also, according to our definition, has for its end the development in the individual of those qualities which enrich his personality. In other words education aims to improve personality rather than impart knowledge. This of course is an ideal which is seldom realized.

Now religious education is simply education as we have defined it with a religious aim. It is an organized process of developing in the individual those qualities which we call Christian. Education without the religious aim may be merely pagan. In other words it is possible so to conduct public and private educational processes that the pupils will have culture without character, cleverness without brotherliness, power without love. This is the danger of an educational system that excludes all religious teaching. Our own national system of education has this danger in it, and therefore it must be supplemented by a worthy system of religious education if it is to be all that it ought to be. However, let us keep in mind this definition of religious education: "An organized process of developing those qualities in individuals which we call Christian."

Why Is Religious Education Important?

There are three reasons at least. First, religious education is concerned with life and character and personality rather than with academic knowledge. We speak of teaching the lesson, but in reality what we ought to mean is that we teach the pupil. The pupil, the person—Johnny, if you please—should be first and last and all the time in the mind of the teacher. His life, character, habits, personality is the garden that must be cultivated to a high state of productiveness. The lesson, the educational system, the materials of teaching are only means to an end, and the end is the development in Johnny of those qualities which are perfectly embodied in Jesus. We cannot too strongly emphasize the point that religious education has for its end the improvement of the pupil in Christian graces and virtues as well as the enlargement of his knowledge in Bible history and doctrine.

The second reason for the importance of religious education is just as vital as the first and naturally follows the first. It is that religious education is inseparably bound up with the whole life of the individual. We have a tendency to forget the unity of life and personality, and because of this tendency we are always making the vain attempt to segregate religion from every-day life by making it a thing of a holy day and a holy place and a holy book. The evil consequences of this tendency are very apparent at the present time among many of the young people of our land. They have been taught in such a way at home and in the church that religion to them is a wholly unique and unnatural thing in their lives, incapable of being merged into their secular education or mixed with their daily activities.

One of the most serviceable and helpful features of the Y. M. C. A. is that in connection with its railroad department. The sixteenth international transportation conference was held in St. Louis, Nov. 15-18, with an attendance around the thousand mark. The delegates represented the railroad "Y" from 300 divisional and terminal points.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By Robert W. Shaw

Grace Church, Racine

In Racine there are three Baptist churches, besides the Italian Baptist Church of Kenosha and Racine. The Grace Church was originally a German-speaking church, but a few years ago it began to transfer its services into the English language, and changed its name to Grace Baptist Church. Within two years it has given 102 of its members to form two new churches. Fifty-five of these became the charter members of the Italian Baptist Church, and the other forty-seven were organized into the Immanuel German Baptist Church of Kenosha. It is being given leadership by Rev. A. Waldvogel.

The Grace Church was organized in 1854 and is now housed in its third meeting house, erected in 1904. This building is to be completely renovated and repaired. The church is planning to make this year head up the seventieth anniversary in 1924 in a way worthy of the past history of the church.

There is general rejoicing over the fact that Rev. H. F. Hoops, who some time ago presented his resignation after two and a half years of arduous work in the transition from German to English, has withdrawn his resignation, and will continue his ministry with this people.

A Worthy Farewell

Some time after Rev. R. G. Pierson offered his resignation at Janesville, his wife accused him of being willing to withdraw his resignation if he could do so gracefully. Of course there comes a time in the pastorate of every sensible preacher when his conscience tells him that he should go and perhaps Pierson felt that way about it. At any rate the good people of the Baptist church, and the whole town felt that it was going to be a big loss to Janesville to have him go. At the farewell service the various churches, fraternities, civic bodies and others were represented. Among those who were to be present was the Catholic priest, and a representative of the Jewish race. Blessed is that man who can succeed in being the pastor of a community as well as of a local church, and that is what Raymond Pierson has done in Janesville. He began his new work in Pittsburgh, Nov. 4.

The Loyalty Luncheon

The Loyalty luncheon, held in Milwaukee Nov. 1, was a great success. About 275 women were present for the luncheon, and Mrs. Curtis Lee Laws, Mrs. O. R. Judd, and Miss Pennington and Miss Ryan were the visiting speakers. At the First Church on that same evening the first two speakers brought their messages to a gathering of the public, which was followed by a presentation of the pageant entitled "On Trial." Preceding the mass meeting the W. W. G.'s had their fall luncheon together. A large crowd was present for the evening meetings. Mrs. Roy Knapp had charge of the day's meetings and is to be congratulated upon the success which attended her efforts.

Other Notes

The Bay View Church of Milwaukee has engaged Miss Clara M. Brown as the assistant to Rev. H. C. Carnell for a period of months. This is, as we understand it, an experiment and involves besides the work in the local church the investigation into the possibilities of a mission in a growing section of Milwaukee.

On Oct. 25 a council, with Dr. D. W. Hulburt as moderator, and Rev. G. C. Alborn, as clerk, recognized the Woodlawn Mission, of Milwaukee as a Baptist Church. There were five constituent members, but others are expected to unite with this rapidly growing body.

The South Baptist Church of Milwaukee, is beginning the first autumn of work in its new field. It recently enrolled in the "better and bigger" Sunday-school campaign and during the month of October more than reached its quota of membership gain. During the month seven members were received by letter and two were received for baptism. Pastor Shaw is beginning his fifth year of service with the church.

The first church to report on the referendum of the churches on the new plan of missionary cooperation was the First Church of Baraboo. The clerk reporting the action of the church had the name of "Goodenough." May the program be good enough for many of the churches of this state.

The First Church of Oconomowoc recently held its annual meeting. A good year of work has been accomplished. The church showed its approval of its pastor by increasing his salary, bringing it up to $2,400 per year and his house, besides other items such as expenses to the conventions and other meetings. What this little village church of 130 members can do for its pastor, other churches of three or four times the membership can do, and yet there are churches of that size in Wisconsin who do considerably less for their ministers.

At the recent convention at LaCrosse the president was instructed to bear the greetings to the honorary president, Mr. E. J. Lindsay. When he went, bearing a flowering plant as the gift of the convention, he was told by Mr. Lindsay that his connection with the convention had begun forty-eight years before, when as a young layman he was elected treasurer. During all these years he has been a vital factor in the work in Wisconsin, and even today, when not incapacitated, attends the meetings of the executive committee of the convention, and his voice and judgment are heard with consideration by the other members of the committee. He has not been well this summer, but his brethren hope that he may be spared for some years.

A Twin Cities Letter

By Don Mac

One of the most important events in the life, not only of the Twin Cities but of the state of Minnesota, is the going from it of Dr. John A. Earl who has responded to the earnest request of the denomination to take editorial work on The Baptist.

A reception was given by his church last Wednesday night and any one enjoying the favor of that opportunity could easily see and feel the intensity of the grip which Doctor Earl has had on that great and noble "mother" of our Minnesota churches. There were four speakers, after some delightful music, and the whole evening was full of warm and appreciative fellowship.

The first speaker was Dr. D. D. MacLaurin on his personal relations with Doctor Earl through some years and the service which he is likely to render to the denomination in his new position. The second speaker was the executive secretary of the state convention, Rev. E. H. Rasmussen, who spoke on behalf of the state to which Doctor Earl has meant so much. His terms of appreciation of that service to the whole brotherhood were warm and appreciative. The third speaker was Dr. John G. Briggs, minister of the Woodland Park, St. Paul, church, who represented the brethren of the Twin Cities. He voiced the sentiment which prevails unanimously among them of regret that Doctor Earl is going from us, and appreciation of the opportunity and service which he is sure to render the whole wide denominational life. The fourth and last speaker was the superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. E. O. Hathaway, who expressed the very deep regard in which Doctor Earl is held by the church and the whole organization.

There was a spirit of hope and optimism notwithstanding the severe loss to the life, the work, and church which it necessarily will sustain because of his going, and a very deep warmth and wish and confidence indeed that he will make good in the new and important position to which he goes.

Calvary Church, Minneapolis

It gives the writer a very great delight to note that there is a warmth and energy and new hopefulness in the work of this church under the ministry of Rev. John H. McLean. Mr. McLean is giving himself with a new energy and with great success to the work of the denomination and the church especially in these opening days of the new church year. The response is whole-hearted and warm to his efforts and both minister and church are, perhaps, more hopeful and optimistic today than ever before.

The new minister of the Judson Memorial church is gripping things with unusual force and there is a general and splendid response to that ministry on the part of this very important young church.

The preparations for the Loyalty luncheons, which are to be held respectively in both St. Paul and Minneapolis, promise a large and enthusiastic response, and the Bible and Missionary Conference looms large upon the horizon of coming events. The pastor of the Trinity Church, W. E. Woodbury, is absent in Detroit as executive secretary of the conference to be held there, and Don Mac is holding the fort for him in Minneapolis. E. A. Valliant, pastor in St. Paul and also executive secretary of the Baptist Union of Minnesota's capital, is doing a fine piece of work in preparation for the Bible Conference in Des Moines. Rev. Alvin Lee, the new pastor at Mankato, was ordained recently. He is a graduate of the University of North Dakota and of the Newton Theological Institution. He gives promise of becoming one of the leaders in our fellowship. Mrs. George Young, the leader of our women's work in Minnesota, is slowly recovering from an accident suffered last summer on an automobile trip east.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

The Detroit Regional Bible and Missionary closed Wednesday evening, Oct. 31. It was a wonderful meeting. It had been widely advertised that admission would be by registration button—there were about 2,000 paid registrations while whole families were admitted on a $2 ticket, and many who could not afford to pay the $1 registration fee were provided admission buttons free. Approximately 3,000 buttons were used. The great auditorium of the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church was taxed to its capacity to care for those who were eager to see and hear the rich things the program afforded.

The women's Loyalty luncheon, which preceded the conference proper, was held in the great dining-room of the Woodward Avenue Church, when over 700 Baptist women sat down, and others were compelled to go elsewhere for their noonday luncheon.

The women's continuation fund was augmented by $6,496, the largest contribution of $2,000 coming from the women of the First Church; Woodward Avenue was next with $1,565; Temple followed with $500. Equally generous offerings came from other churches in the district.

Among the speakers from abroad were Miss Ethel Ryan, missionary to the Hopi Indians; Miss Grace Pennington, missionary from Burma; Mrs. Curtis Lee Laws and Mrs. O. R. Judd of New York.

Monday evening the Woodward Avenue Church was crowded when Dr. Curtis Lee Laws, of New York, who had stopped off from a return trip to the West, led the great audience in devotions. Dr. P. C. Wright, who officiated as team leader, gave the opening address on "A Challenge to Baptists," a masterly presentation of present-day conditions, followed by an equally brilliant delineation of "The Part of Baptist Women" by Mrs. O. R. Judd. Then followed the pageant "On Trial," staged by local talent from the Woodward Avenue Church, with a real judge presiding and able lawyers representing the plaintiff and defense. It was keenly appreciated although more than ordinarily long.

Tuesday morning the conference got down to the intensive consideration of the objectives of the conference—Bible study, missionary and educational themes. Doctor Laws again led in devotions.

Dr. W. E. Chalmers gave an illuminating address on "Missionary Education" and was followed by President Weeks of Bacone College. His revelation of the work among the American Indians captivated the conference. Dr. P. C. Wright gave an informing address on Baptist missions followed by a Bible exposition by Doctor Evans, of Kansas City. We do not wonder at the size of the great Bible class that Doctor Evans teaches in Kansas City. He spoke five times on Tuesday and each time his hearers were eager for more.

Tuesday noon Doctor Chalmers led a luncheon conference on religious education and Doctor Wright another luncheon conference for the instruction of the teams who will go out to extend the message of the conference to Adrian, Ann Arbor, Pontiac, Flint, Port Huron, Cass City, Bay City, Tawas City, and Alpena.

Dr. John E. Smith, executive secretary of the Michigan Convention, opened the afternoon session with an illuminating address on "Michigan Mission Fields." The audience was much larger as the delegates from interior towns and cities kept coming and representatives of the Detroit churches hastened to the meetings. This talk of Doctor Smith covered Detroit and the rapidly developing cities of Pontiac, Flint, Lansing, Jackson, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Saginaw, Bay City, and others. Then the problems of the rural fields and the great Upper Peninsula also were touched upon. Michigan has many missionary problems, not the least of which is the great influx of southern negroes.

Doctor Evans followed with one of his heart-searching Bible studies. Dr. P. C. Wright next discussed "An Efficient Ministry," the great need for trained pastors and what the M. and M. board is doing to encourage "called" men to most heartily give their all to the cause, as the board can now provide for their old age. President Weeks again took up his interesting exposition of the trials, problems and successes of his work among the Indians. As a fitting climax for a great afternoon came Doctor Evans' address on "Baptists in History." Some of us thought we had heard about all that could be said on this vital question, but Doctor Evans gave a fresh and virile presentation that strengthened every heart and mind in the conviction that Baptists had not lived in vain and still had an important place in the economy of the kingdom.

Tuesday evening came the laymen's banquet in the great dining-room at Woodward Avenue. Mr. R. O. Jasperson had been announced for this event, but he was unable to reach Detroit. His place was most acceptably filled by Doc-

More Victory Volts

As the nation-wide series of Bible and missionary conferences continues throughout the country, more and more evidence comes in of the rich spiritual reward they are reaping. The following messages received at national headquarters by Conference Director W. H. Bowler show the sweeping success of these great missionary meetings from coast to coast:

Seattle: "Largest Baptist meeting in local history. Fine spirit, evidence of determination to carry program through especially marked here. Team doing fine work. Many requests for similar conference annually."—Dr. Frank W. Padelford.

Detroit: "The greatest conference in our history. Every session vibrant with spiritual power. Should result in more consistent Christian living, many conversions, more interest in kingdom affairs, and enlarged gifts for missions."—Dr. H. C. Gleiss.

Lansing: "Great meeting. People will go back with enthusiasm for putting on program. Two hundred and sixty at luncheon. Attendance tonight 750. Everybody happy and pleased."—George W. Lawrence.

Pittsburgh: "Pittsburgh brethren consider conference unqualified success."—Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo.

New York: "A great thing for New York."—H. B. Dickson.

Brooklyn: "It has brought Brooklyn a new vision."—Dr. Hinson V. Howlett.

Philadelphia: "Our registration is now 1910, and still coming in."—Dr. Floyd L. Carr.

Spokane: "Spokane Bible and Missionary Conference delegates heartily and enthusiastically voted to do their best to put across the closing New World Movement program."—Dr. A. H. Bailey and Conference Secretary A. Lawrence Black.

Phoenix: Eight churches over the top and others are underwriting their quotas with twelve days to conference. Great enthusiasm among young people. Many churches making house to house canvass. Douglas sending thirty delegates 250 miles."—Conference Secretary John R. George.

Bangor and Portland: "The Maine conferences were very successful and satisfactory. I think they will prove a great help in our work. Three hundred and twenty-five were registered at Bangor and considerably over 600 at Portland."—E. C. Whittemore.

tor Wright who outlined the plans and purposes of the new laymen's movement. He was followed by Doctor Evans who told how to interest and enlist men.

The evening session in the great auditorium was announced as young people's night, the Detroit B. Y. P. U. opening with one of their pepfest programs that was thoroughly enjoyed even though it was lacking in yells. Doctor Evans followed with a Bible exposition. The especial feature of the evening was Doctor and Mrs. Manley's dramatic dialogue, "India's Heartache." The great audience was held spellbound while these missionary heroes interpreted India's superstition, caste bondage, unspeakable home life and tragedies. Nothing we have seen and heard is quite equal to it.

Wednesday morning Doctor Chalmers took up the theme of "Religious Education," opening new storehouses of experience and suggestion. He was followed by Mrs. Manley who gave a story of missionary opportunities that gripped every heart and mind. Doctor Wright made a place for Doctor Gleiss to tell the story of Detroit's Baptist achievements and methods, which was eagerly listened to. The closing feature was another Bible exposition by Doctor Evans. There was an even larger attendance than Tuesday morning and the session proved a rich treat in many ways.

Wednesday noon the luncheon hour was given up to conferences again, one led by Doctor Chalmers on religious education, the extension teams being under instruction by Doctor Wright and Doctor Gleiss. Some of the speakers told of lying awake until 3 a. m. in their anxiety about the carrying out of the great program.

Wednesday afternoon the conference got down to "brass tacks" to use a business expression. "Our Denominational Program" was a rehearsal of the details of the program that was worked out and adopted at Atlantic City. It required some one who had lived with the big problems at 276 Fifth Avenue to clearly outline the needs, the methods proposed, and the why of it all. There was much taking of notes. Doctor Wright is a master hand in such a crisis. Doctor Chalmers was to follow with an address on "Our Stewardship Dynamic" but he had persuaded Rev. Geo. E. Dawkins, of Royal Oak, to speak in his stead and the impromptu address that followed was a revelation to the great audience. There was fine logic, Bible authority and real dynamic "punch." Doctor Chalmers then conducted a stewardship conference that brought out many individual experiences of participants. We surely are in a rising tide of knowledge of and commitment to the higher ground of the stewardship of life in all its bearings. Doctor Weeks was called upon for another brief period to continue his engaging recital of Bacone and Indian experiences. The close of the afternoon was another sitting in heavenly places as Doctor Evans unfolded the scripture lesson to ever eager hearts and lives.

But the strenuosity was not over. Another supper conference was on in the big dining-room. People must eat, but the stray moments must be garnered for effective service. Doctor Gleiss presided. Doctor Wright improved the opportunity of bringing home to church pastors and workers the best methods for carrying the message of the conference home to every church and every member of every church. We are in a great cooperative enterprise that each and every loyal Baptist should be deeply concerned for. The New World Movement must be closed with honor to all. This can be done, must be done, will be done.

The closing session was held, as usual, in the auditorium. The galleries were not all filled, but the auditorium proper was filled to almost every seat. The spiritual atmosphere was stimulating. Doctor Evans gave his final message, a scholarly address on "Christian Education." Having been a college president for years he could speak with a surety of statement that few could equal. While he sincerely believes in scholastic education, he would always subordinate it to the spiritual. This affords an opportunity for the Christian college, which today is unequaled in history. Doctor Wright followed with the climax of the conference, "The Call to Victory." There had been much of sincerely expressed pessimism in the conference in the critical review of world conditions, but Doctor Wright catalogued the constructive, the accomplished things, the cheering factors in the kingdom situation with peculiar significance to Baptists. It was not a review of expectations but of achievements that greatly stirred the great audience. It was a fitting ending to the richest spiritual feast ever spread in Detroit.

The conference was set up in short time, but the team members said it was probably the largest they had as yet spoken to while the spirit of the great gathering should repeat itself in scores of church and later conferences, to the honor and glory of God. Reports were made in the conference of increased giving already made manifest and the deepening of the spiritual life of our churches. The evangelistic fervor and missionary passion will surely be greatly quickened.

Impressions of the New England Conference on Evangelism

By Henry Bond

A deep impression on the New England churches has been made by the New England Conference on Evangelism held in Boston Sept. 9-12.

The attendance, which was most gratifying, even at the first session and continued until the close, was an unmistakable indicator of the interest that still exists in evangelism.

The close attention given to all the addresses relating to the different methods of soul-winning and the results obtained thereby showed clearly that the longing still exists for a renewal of this work.

If a conclusion can be drawn from the expressions that were heard on every hand many of those present were planning, even while there, how this work of evangelism not only could, but should, be conducted in the churches from which they came.

A deep spirit of appreciation seemed to be felt by every one for the thoughtfulness of the Home Mission Society in so efficiently planning the conference and thereby crystallizing the interest and helping to put it into definite plans.

Contact with a number of New England churches since the conference has shown that in many cases these plans have already been put into operation and that the churches are praying for and working for a revival of soul-winning.

HOWARD M. REMLEY
An Appreciation

By Fred White

Howard Marshall Remley was born at Lewisberg, W. Va., Jan. 17, 1843, and died at his home at Anamosa, Iowa, Oct. 29, 1923.

He was the son of Rev. James and Jane C. Remley. His father, grandfathers — maternal and paternal — and youngest brother, were all Baptist ministers. The elder ministers were pioneers of religion, as represented in the Baptist faith, in West Virginia. His father was a pioneer of the Baptist faith in Iowa. Religiously, Mr. Remley came into an excellent and goodly heritage, as also educationally.

He received his early education in a school founded and taught by his own father. In 1855, when he was twelve years of age, he came with his parents to Iowa, settling near Iowa City. After attending the public schools of Iowa City, where he finished his elementary education, he entered the state university. He graduated from this institution with the B. A. degree in 1869, the L.L.B. degree in 1872, and in 1874 his alma mater conferred upon him the honor of the M. A. degree.

In 1872 he came to Anamosa, Iowa, where he has resided ever since and practiced law continuously. He was judge of the eighteenth judicial district for seven years during this time. He was considered one of the most eminent lawyers of Iowa. He was devoted to his profession, and was highly respected by both his clients and associates at the bar for his integrity, dignity, love of justice and mercy, and practical common sense which marked his character as a judge, an attorney and a Christian man.

He was a member of the church here for over fifty years, during which time he was always a pillar and spiritual force in the church. He showed the same earnest and devoted spirit in his church activities that marked his professional career. He held important offices of trust. He was church clerk for two periods, covering twenty years in all. He held the office of deacon for several years previous to his death. He was vitally interested in the Sunday school holding the office of Sunday school treasurer for several years up to the time of his decease. He was the faithful efficient teacher of the adult Bible class for forty-six years, and only recently did have to give up this work, because of failing health. Hundreds of men and women have gone in and out of his class during that time. A great many of them have passed on to their reward the richer for having sat under his good teaching. He was thorough in his preparation of the lessons, and conscientious in his dispatch. No doubt his faithful labors with this class is the greatest spiritual contribution he made to his church and community. He was also a liberal giver to both the local church and the benevolent enterprises of our beloved denomination. He gave liberally to every other good movement that had as its objective the service of mankind. His demise is an irreparable loss to our church. We shall miss him on every hand. But we take comfort in the thought that he is now translated to the great church of the redeemed above, and that our loss is Heaven's gain.

He was also vitally interested in the work of our Iowa Convention. Some years ago he was honored with the presidency of this body for three successive terms. He was a great helper in the convention in taking care of such matters as called for legal procedure and attention. For the past twenty years he was trustee of the Hinchman fund of the convention. Through his careful and judicious oversight, this fund has realized for the work of the convention over $46,000.00 during that time. He was largely responsible for the movement which resulted in the establishing of a student center at Iowa City to take care of the social and religious welfare of Baptist young people attending the state university. Hence, death has removed a very devoted worker from our church and Baptist ranks in Iowa.

Ten children survive and mourn his decease. All of them are graduates of our state university, which speaks well for the educational ideals of the family. All of them are successful in the several lines of business and professions they pursue. Eight of them are members of the Baptist church.

The funeral was held at the home on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 31. His pastor, Rev. Fred White, officiated. Rev. E. A. Schlaman, a former pastor, assisted. Dr. G. P. Mitchell, secretary of the Iowa Convention, was here to pay a last tribute in behalf of that body. Two speakers of the Jones County Bar Association spoke fitting words of tribute to his sterling character as a lawyer and Christian.

A fitting epitaph to the memory of him, who was such a loyal Christian and Baptist, is found in the following lines:

"Life's work well done,
Life's race well run,
Life's crown well won,
Now comes rest."

CONNECTICUT

The Sunday school of the First Church, Bridgeport, Rev. C. A. Decker, pastor, has entered a contest with the Sunday school of the First Church, Schenectady, N. Y., beginning Nov. 4. The points to be emphasized are new scholars and regular attendance. An effort is being made to secure 100 per cent attendance of the enrolment and to increase the enrolment of the school 20 per cent. Two years ago the Schenectady Sunday school beat Bridgeport in a contest for a silver cup. This year Bridgeport hopes to change the order. New scholars are not counted until they have been present three Sundays out of four. This is not an effort to secure large attendance in our Sunday school for a few Sundays only, but it is hoped in this way to build up a permanent interest in this work.

Sunday, Sept. 30, was a day of exceptional interest in the life of the Central Church, Norwich, when the $15,000 Charles W. Gale Memorial organ, given by Mrs. Gertrude H. Gale in memory of her husband, was dedicated. Colonel Gale served as chorister in the church for thirty years, and years ago was instrumental in raising the money to pay for the old organ which will no longer be used. The new instrument ranks as one of the largest and most complete in the state. It is a three-manual, built by the Austin Organ Company of Hartford, and has all modern appliances, including a set of chimes. The committee that carried out the wishes of Mrs. Gale in establishing the organ was Frank L. Arnold, Shepard B. Palmer and Charles E. Noyes. Rev. David A. Pitt is pastor.

The Lebanon Church accepted with regret the resignation of its pastor, Rev. E. L. Nield, tendered Oct. 21 and effective Nov. 11. Mr. Nield has served the church for three years, and has made a large place for himself in the life of the community. He goes to a church in New Hampshire.

The Bible and Missionary Conference for the state was held with the Calvary Church, New Haven, Nov. 12-14. Rev. A. E. Rapp of New Jersey and W. E. Woodbury of Minneapolis, set up the conference. The pastor, Rev. James McGee, baptized five candidates on Oct. 29, and on Nov. 4 welcomed fifteen persons into the membership of the church.

VERMONT

The First Church, Bennington, Rev. William G. Towart, pastor, in cooperation with the Congregational and Methodist churches, is conducting a school of missions Oct. 14-Nov. 18. This is a school of the whole church doing intensive missionary study. By concerted action the various ages and groups of the church are meeting on the same evening for a term of weeks to study selected graded texts. It is for all the family. The books used by all the denominations are the same. Pastor Towart has had a school of missions for several years. The people look forward to it as part of their regular church work.

The North Troy Church on Oct. 11 observed the thirtieth wedding anniversary of Pastor and Mrs. Gould by surprising them at their home. Their daughter, Grace, who is teaching school at Lyndon Center, returned for the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Gould were presented with a substantial purse of money. The church has voted leave of absence to Mr. Gould for a month, with the hope that he may regain his health and strength.

Rev. H. B. Rankin, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Newport, has tendered his resignation to take effect Dec. 1, when he removes to Ludlow, having accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church there. Mr. Rankin has been on his present field more than twelve years. During that time the church edifice has been remodeled and an addition built, so it is now one of the most attractive church edifices in the state. The permanent funds of the church have also been greatly increased and a goodly number have been added to the church by baptism and letter. The Newport

Rev. R. G. Greengrass, pastor of the churches at Randolph and Braintree, baptized three men and one young woman on Sunday, Oct. 28.

The North Springfield Church, Rev. E. C. Weeks, pastor, had present on Sunday evening, Oct. 21, over 200 people, some coming from Springfield and Perkinsville, when the illumination ceremony of the Pathfinder girls was given by a group of twenty girls from the Baptist and Congregational churches of Saxtons River under the direction of Mrs. W. E. Lombard. This organization for girls 12 to 20 years old has for its object the cultivation of outdoor, home and church life, and is similar to the Girl Scouts. Rev. W. F. Sturtevant, assistant superintendent of the state convention, was present and delivered an address. On Thursday evening, Oct. 25, Mrs. Isabel Darrow Stewart, a former Chester girl, on furlough from North India where she and her husband work among the lepers, was present and spoke. The ladies of the church and congregation on Friday evening, gave an entertainment and supper to the newly organized firemen's company, when there were more than 200 people present. After the supper Mr. Burnham Bibens, principal of the graded school at Springfield, gave a stereopticon lecture in the auditorium of the church.

On his last Sunday with the Townshend Church before leaving for Winchenden, Mass., Rev. W. H. Nobbs baptized three persons and received one other member into the church by experience.

At the rally day service of the Addison Sunday school, Prof. Kingsley of Middlebury College gave a most helpful address. The Junior C. E. of this church has again received the state banner for efficiency. Pastor B. H. Curtis is about to begin a mission study class which is to be conducted at the prayer meetings for the next few weeks.

MASSACHUSETTS

By the death of Rev. Arthur S. Burrows the state has lost one of its best ministers. In him was found about all that people look for in a shepherd of the flock. Perhaps he came to be best known by numerous articles of decided spiritual flavor he published in many Baptist papers during late years. His decline was long protracted, but through it his patient serenity proved to whom he belonged. Several prominent churches cherished him with grateful affection. The funeral service was in Mt. Auburn Chapel, Pres. G. E. Horr, and Rev. Samuel M. Lindsay, officiating.

The ministers' conference in Boston continues strongly on its new line of practical discussion, led by its own members. Dr. E. P. Tuller of Everett gave a remarkable stirring up on "How We Raised Our Budget." Last week Rev. H. C. Abbott of Maplewood, that devout and wholesome expert on developing the prayer meeting, told how he had done it. He spoke so impressively and with such helpful sincerity that when one of the brethren in the following discussion said that some way should be found to get the message to all the churches, all said amen to it.

Sec. W. E. Waterbury has so far improved that he has been removed from the hospital to his home.

Rev. Isaac Higginbotham of Portsmouth, N. H., has accepted a position on the staff of secretaries at the headquarters of the state convention. He has abundantly qualified by repeated lectures at institutes and conferences, and the study of modern church methods. He will render invaluable help in the strenuous work ahead in the rounding up of the five year movement.

There have been many accessions to the membership of the First Church, Randolph, recently. Six adults were received at the November communion service, and six at the October service. Extensive repairs and improvements have been made on the church property. Rev. E. S. Philbrook is pastor.

On Sunday evening, Oct. 28, the Jepson Class for young men of the First Church, Melrose, had charge of the regular church service. This is an annual event, the officers of the class conducting the entire service. This occasion was particularly notable as the speaker of the evening was the Rev. H. W. Hines, pastor of the First Church, Kankakee, Ill., and secretary of the National B. Y. P. U. Mr. Hines formerly resided in Melrose, and for ten years was a member of, and active worker in, the Jepson Class. Furthermore, it was during one of Mr. Jepson's talks to the young men under his charge, that Mr. Hines first received his inspiration for his chosen life work, the Christian ministry. Mr. Hines took for his subject, "Europe and the Revolt of Youth." It was a theme he was especially well qualified to handle, for, in 1914, just before the outbreak of the late war, he was studying and traveling in Europe, and this fall he returned from a tour extending from the Scandinavian countries to Italy as a representative of the Baptist Young People's Union of America. He told of the conference of Baptists at Stockholm, referring particularly to the Young People's conference at which thirty-two delegates, official representatives of young people's groups from twenty-one countries, discussed their problems and offered their prayers, each in his own tongue, yet in the common language of Christian brotherhood. Following the conference, Mr. Hines traveled to Italy, visiting all the intermediate countries, and addressing gatherings of young people in each. He spoke of the tremendous feeling of unrest permeating the thought of the people, particularly of the young, and especially of the tendency of the youth of each nation to shake off the now discredited leadership of the older men, and to take over the reins of government themselves. Mussolini and his fascisti in Italy are a concrete example of the present Central European state of mind. Mr. Hines emphasized the opportunity before Baptists of the world, with their ideas of religious freedom, to exert their influence upon this seething mass, and to further the cause of Christ. The Jepson Class for young men has been in continuous existence for twenty-four years under the teaching of William A. Jepson, a prominent business man, with a remarkable understanding and appreciation of youth and its problems. Membership in the class is limited to young men between the ages of 18 and 30. At the present time, there are 120 names on the roll.

RHODE ISLAND

The Calvary Church, Westerly, tendered Eugene B. Pendleton, a reception in honor of his forty years of service as church treasurer and fifty-three years of service as treasurer of the Bible school. The pastor, Rev. Lewis A. Walker, presented Mr. Pendleton a gold purse of $100 in behalf of the church.

NEW JERSEY

The Emmanuel Church, Ridgewood has contributed $521 for the Japanese reconstruction fund. The church leads all the churches of the North Association in offerings to the New World Movement and ranks eighth among the churches of the state. Oct. 15 was the third anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Thomas H. Sprague. During this time 158 new members have been received. Dr. Samuel Zane Batten and Rev. Hal dane Graham were recent speakers at the church.

At the First Church, Bayonne, nine new members were received during October and twelve received the hand of fellowship at the November communion service. The first Sunday this month the Bible school had the largest number present in its history. All departments of the church are making progress. Rev. C. H. Rannels is pastor.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Eleven persons received the right hand of fellowship at a recent communion service at the Immanuel Church, Erie. There have been twenty-five additions to the membership since June 1 when Rev. M. R. Sheldon became pastor.

The First Church of Reynoldsville had the privilege of entertaining the first Bible missionary conference in Pennsylvania with the leadership of Wm. G. Russell, and his team Detwieler, Telford and Elliott, Mrs. Moody and Mrs. Wild. The conference was a joint meeting of the Clarion and Clearfield associations, with a goodly number of churches well represented. Pastor Smally, director of Clarion association, with his good people did much in making the conference a success. Pastor Brownlee of Reynoldsville had the cooperation of the pastors of Clearfield association. All of our churches will be greatly profited by the fine time of spiritual refreshing. Doctor Telford stayed in the association over Sunday and spoke in two churches to large and appreciative audiences. This team goes to various places in Western Pennsylvania. There is a rare treat in store for all who will be privileged to hear them.

Earl H. Tomlin of the First Church, Titusville, was ordained Oct. 29. Rev. A. A. Nellis Bradford was moderator, and Rev. Clifford S. Joshua, Union City, clerk. Rev. B. C. Barrett, Oil City, preached the sermon.

INDIANA

The First Church of Fort Wayne had a recent Sunday morning service in which an enthusiastic Sunday school took possession of the auditorium and built a model church with red bricks (boxes) containing offerings as a "nest egg" for a new church building fund. These totaled in the neighborhood of $1500. In the evening a pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross" by Charles Marsh, was presented under the direction of Mrs. Mareen Major.

OHIO

A five weeks' union revival service in Cincinnati under the leadership of Evangelist John S. Hamilton resulted in a large ingathering in the churches. The First Church, Rev. Harry S. Mabie, pastor, received twenty-eight by baptism and seven otherwise. The attendance at prayer meetings averages above ninety.

The Tenth Avenue Church, Columbus, is one of the most important fields in the state. Its edifice is on the confines of the state university campus. It is a new church in age only. The convention has allowed $150,000 to provide for a foundation to carry on the work with the university students. This foundation is known as the Francis Wayland Foundation of Columbus. Half a dozen properties have already been secured and will eventually be used as homes for students, missionaries home on furlough, etc. The church has been pastorless for the past year, Rev. H. O. Rowlands acting as minister-in-charge. The work prospered under his ministry. Rev. T. J. Hopkins of Adrian, Mich., will begin his ministry on Nov. 18. The church was never in a better condition spiritually and materially to invest itself in the work.

ILLINOIS

Oct. 27 was a day of rejoicing for Mattoon Baptists. In the afternoon ground was broken for the new $50,000 church building at the corner of Richmond Avenue and Nineteenth Street. The following pastors of the Bloomfield Association took part in the exercises: Revs. E. C. Shute of Arthur, F. R. Johnson of Charleston, T. B. Marlin of Tuscola and R. S. Kirkland of Urbana. Other speakers were Mr. F. M. Schulhoff, Rev. C. F. Buker. The basement will be put in this fall and the building will be completed next summer. The congregation is now housed in an old frame building. For fifty years the Baptist cause has languished in this city, but this enterprise marks the beginning of a new day. On Nov. 4 special evangelistic meetings were begun with Rev. A. Gordanier of Paris assisting the pastor, Rev. James M. Lively. Mr. Lively has begun his eighth year as pastor.

Rev. William Drummond Whan, for five years pastor of the First Church, Billings, Mont., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Waukegan Church. Mr. Whan is a native of Canada, educated at McMaster University, Newton Theological Seminary and the University of Chicago. He has held pastorates at Greeley, Colo., Aurora, Ill., and Billings. Mr. Whan will begin his work at Waukegan Jan. 1.

The First Church, Chicago, has broken ground for its new $100,000 Bible school and community house, which it is hoped will be completed early in October, 1924. The ground floor will be used by the junior department of the Sunday school. It will also contain a large kitchen, showers and locker rooms. The first floor will probably be used for the intermediate department, the pastor's study and extra class-rooms. The second floor will be the assembly room and will be used for all kinds of community activities. The entire building is to be fireproof and will have a rubble stone front to match the present building. In addition to this new building, the church

On Oct. 16 the church at Hudson closed a series of successful revival meetings. Rev. J. B. Head, of Kentucky, preached. As a result there were thirty-nine converts, twenty of whom have been baptized. Since the conclusion of the meetings, a B. Y. P. U. with twenty members has been organized. E. D. Bell is pastor.

KANSAS

Evangelist Frank M. Wells, Leavenworth, recently closed a meeting with the First Church, Rev. T. A. Searcy, pastor. Mr. Wells may be addressed at the National Military Home.

WISCONSIN

Rev. E. R. MacKinney leaves the First Church, Eau Claire, with the church property free of debt and all bills paid. All departments are in a flourishing condition. A farewell reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. MacKinney at which 250 persons were present. Mr. MacKinney was presented a bill book containing $60. He was pastor of the church for almost six years.

MISSOURI

The First Church, Jefferson City, recently experienced a genuine revival. As a result, the first Sunday this month there were ten additions to the membership. The church building fund has grown to $36,000, about half of which is in hand. The new building will include the present edifice, and when completed will be one of the most up-to-date plants in the state.

I. P. Langley, chaplain and librarian of the state prison, Jefferson City, reports that the attendance at chapel services is good. So far this year there have been 100 public confessions of faith. The present number of prisoners is 2,176, thirty-one of whom are women.

MINNESOTA

Dr. George Earl and Rev. A. C. Hageman represented the Hospital Association at the Iowa State Convention at Muscatine. Rev. A. C. Hageman and Rev. A. F. Saunders also represented the hospital association at the Wisconsin State Convention at their annual meeting in La Crosse. Both conventions registered their hearty endorsement of the plans for the new Midway Hospital to be built in the Twin Cities next year.

Dr. A. LeGrand, superintendent of the Wisconsin Baptist Convention was a patient at Mounds Park Sanitarium, but has now returned to his work. Rev. Carl Case, Oak Park, Ill., and Rev. Roland Butler, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Anoka, Minn., are patients at Mounds Park Sanitarium.

Bethel Institute

The new year at Bethel Institute has opened encouragingly with 263 in the academy, 10 in the Bible and missionary training course, and forty-three in the seminary, sixteen taking the Greek-Hebrew course, a larger number than has ever been enrolled before, and about 50 per cent above the number enrolled at this time last year. A number of the students of the theological seminary are preaching as stated and occasional pastoral supplies in the vicinity of the Twin Cities, and a good deal of other Christian work is being carried on by the ministerial students in the academy and students in the Bible and missionary training course.

Dr. Carl G. Lagergren, dean emeritus of the theological seminary, who was retired on a pension last year, after thirty-four years of efficient service, has been spending the year in putting into print a compendium of systematic theology written by himself in the Swedish language, of which three volumes have already appeared, the whole work to comprise four volumes.

The urgent need of the school for this year is a dormitory for girls and one for boys, as well as an increase of the endowment fund, although thus far current expenses have been met from time to time with the aid of the consolidated budget of the Swedish Baptist churches, and the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention.

NORTH DAKOTA

Park River: The new church was dedicated Oct. 19-21. The present building replaces the one destroyed by fire in November, 1920, and costs almost $7,500. It is of the bungalow type, and the exterior is finished with stucco and crushed granite. It is provided with all modern conveniences and Sunday-school equipment. Its erection was made possible by the generous help given by the Home Mission Society and the state convention, together with the assistance of the business men of Park River. The dedication services began with a banquet given by the ladies of the church to the men of the Park River Community Club. Dr. John S. Stump, associate secretary of the Home Mission Society, assisted in the dedication exercises. Rev. Fred E. Stockton, state superintendent, preached the sermon. Other visiting Baptist ministers were Revs. Ole Larson, Fargo; W. A. Weyhrauch, Valley City; and B. H. Thorlakson, Crystal. The Park River Church is affiliated with the North Dakota Norwegian Conference. Richard Jensen is pastor.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

MINOT: The Minot Church recently completed a campaign for the paying-off of long-standing mortgages. The last mortgage was burned on the evening of Oct. 22. Doctor Stump delivered an address upon this occasion. The church is at present collecting additional funds to make several improvements on its property. The women are especially active in this undertaking. Rev. W. A. Daniel, pastor, has led in this campaign, which is the most outstanding achievement in the state during the past year. The state superintendent assisted the pastor in the financial canvass last March.

BERTHOLD RESERVATION: Following the Minot celebration, Doctor Stump, in company with the state superintendent, visited several fields in what was, until recent years, a part of the Berthold Indian Reservation. The first stop was with the Russian Baptist Church at Max. Here Doctor Stump spoke to the people through an interpreter. On the evening of the same day, services were held in the new church at Roseglen, located on the reservation. The church is installing a heating plant and will be ready for dedication early in the spring. The next point was Van Hook, where a new church was organized two years ago. The meeting was held in the town theater. This field is greatly in need of a church building. The last field visited was Stanley, a county-seat town on the main line of the Great Northern. Here there is only a church basement.

DRAYTON: The Drayton Swedish Baptist Church was dedicated Oct. 26-28. Doctor Stump participated in the dedication program. Saturday was devoted to a canvass of the city and surrounding country. Before the close of the last service Sunday evening, sufficient funds had been collected and subscribed to complete the payment of the building, which will be about $6,600. The state superintendent preached the sermon. Other visiting ministers were Revs. A. M. Stolberg, Kenmare; O. S. Jacobson, Bismarck; and Ole Larson, Fargo. Rev. A. O. Ekstrom is pastor of the church. This is the only Swedish church serving a large Swedish settlement. In addition to the help given by the community, the church received a substantial time loan from the Home Mission Society and a contingent loan from the state convention.

IT IS A SIGNIFICANT AND ENCOURAGING fact to note that not one of these achievements would have been possible had it not been for the funds made available through the New World Movement campaign. North Dakota Baptists are realizing more than ever the spiritual and material benefits of the New World Movement.

THE CHURCH AT COVE will begin a series of revival meetings Nov. 18, with Evangelist J. W. Slaton and Mrs. Slaton conducting the services. According to present plans the meetings will close Dec. 15 when Mr. and Mrs. Slaton will be ready to take up the work elsewhere. The congregations at Cove are increasing in attendance and spiritual interest so there is hope for the salvation of many souls. Mr. Slaton says: "Distance or size of the church has nothing to do with the consideration of a date for a revival; neither should the financial condition of the church wanting a revival present any from writing me, as we desire to do the work of evangelists wherever our help is needed and God opens the way."

Obituary

ARTHUR MALCOLM

Entered into rest Oct. 25, 1923, Arthur Malcolm second son of Dr. Howard Malcolm and Ruth Anne Dyer. He was born in Georgetown, Ky., in 1842.

In 1849 Doctor Malcolm returned to Philadelphia and after a brief pastorate at the Sansom Street Church, became the first president of Bucknell University, where he had received his education. In 1858 Doctor Malcolm resigned and again made Philadelphia his home, and he was converted and baptized by his father in the Schuylkill River.

Then began that new spiritual life that grew and strengthened as the years went by. He entered business, married Miss Amelia Verner of Pittsburg, and became secretary of the A. Colburn Company, but in 100 resigned and was made a director, which office he held at the time of his death.

The intervening years had been spent in active service in the Fifth Church of which he was for many years a deacon and later in the First Church which elected him trustee. Doctor Malcolm endeared himself to all who knew him by his gentle friendliness, his ready sympathy and his high sense of probity and honor. His grateful sense of God's tender care was beautifully manifest in the morning hour of family worship, for such it truly was and his childlike trust and confidence that all things work together for good upheld him to the end. He is survived by his widow, one son, a grandson and one sister.

Our Book Shelf

What are you worth? by Charles L. Goodell, New York: Doran. $1.25.

A splendid volume for any one to read but especially helpful for young people. The power of the preacher has been retained in the work of writing this book.

With Italy in Her Final War of Liberation, by Olin D. Wannamaker. New York: $1.75.

Here is a graphic picture of war work done under trying conditions. This story, however, clearly reveals how important and well done was the work of the Y. M. C. A. during the late terrible war.

Social Imperatives, by Craig S. Thoms. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $1.25.

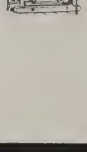
Doctor Thoms points us to the fact that there is a great fear of social disaster in the minds of many of the leaders of our day. He also clearly shows that this fear is a most hopeful sign of an awakening social conscience and responsibility that will help in leading us out into a new era. No little concern is shown in the need of a quick response upon the part of thinking men and women to shoulder responsibilities and to recognize some dominant present day needs. A chapter is devoted to each of these needs. They are religion; socialized homes; moral training in public schools; socially minded universities; Christianized business; peace time patriotism; better-born children and faith in social progress.

"War: Its Nature, Cause and Cure," by G. Lowes Dickinson. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

Civilization today, as H. G. Wells tells us, is a race between education and catastrophe. In many parts of the world, and especially in Europe, as Mr. Dickinson shows, new international hates are being engendered and the nations are drifting toward war. But in many lands many men and organizations are at work trying to create a sentiment against war, seeking to promote international goodwill and encouraging the development of means for the peaceful settlement of international questions. It is not yet certain whether war or education shall win.

Under the circumstances the duty of all right-thinking people is clear. It is to expose the war game, to show what a cruel and wicked thing it is, to show who are the men and influences that sow the seeds of misunderstanding, suspicion and hatred. It is to show what a dirty, selfish game war is, that the men and investors, concession hunters, imperialists, are the men who sow the causes of war; they are the men also who stay home and profiteer during the war; and they are the men who buy war bonds as a safe investment while the people are sweating and suffering to carry the heavy interest on the national debts. The author shows what war is, and one does not know where to find a more vivid account than here. He then discusses the causes of war and shows clearly what is becoming plain to all impartial students —that the causes of the world war are woven into the economic and political policies of many European nations. The ultimatum of Austria to Serbia may have been the occasion of the war, but it was not the cause. The author then suggests some remedies, but the chief of these is education. It is for right-thinking people in every nation to expose the war game, to emphasize the principles of international morality and to insist that they will not endeavor to seize territory or monopolize raw materials. Let peoples and governments learn to be just and they will remove most of the causes of war. Unless and until they are more just, the hope of peace is a delusion. The first thing is for us to decide whether we want a world with or without war. I have read many books on the cause and cure of war, but I do not know of any brief book that is more effective than this.

The Cathedral Church of England, by William Burnet Tuthill. New York: Macmillan. $2.



This book will make an appeal to all interested in a concrete expression of beautiful ideas in architecture. It is profusely illustrated, and the text complements the illustrations in such a manner as to make the cathedrals of England very real to the reader. Where adverse criticism is due, Mr. Tuthill gives this as readily as he does praise. It is an instructive book. Could it be widely studied, it would doubtless raise the artistic standard for church buildings in this country.

"Non-Violent Coercion," by Clarence M. Case. New York: Century Co. $3.

Now and then one gets hold of a book that explores an unworked field. That is the case here; and we have an interesting and suggestive book. The title is not altogether a happy one; yet as the author defines it, perhaps it is sufficiently descriptive. In the past and present there have been many men and agencies that have not only tried to persuade other people to a course of conduct, but have felt justified in using physical force and violent methods. The author recognizes the fact that there have been men who have tried to persuade their fellows and even to coerce them, to a certain course of conduct, and yet have relied upon non-violent means. The author gives a brief but careful review of philosophers and teachers who have held this view; he then follows the Christian tradition and shows that once largely followed this conception but fell back to the use of force, imprisonment and even torture and murder. He notices the various groups with and without the Christian faith who have practiced non-resistance and non-violence. This brings him to the various forms of non-violent coercion in our time, such as the industrial boycott in many lands, and non-cooperation, as in India, Japan and elsewhere. The author admits that the future of this method is hard to estimate; but non-violent methods are capable of great abuse; the social boycott and non-cooperation may be most cruel in their operation and most irrational in their results. It is a fine piece of scientific investigation and stakes out a fruitful field of study.

WHY AND WHEREFORE!

At the present time Chicago—as well as any other populous center—is blessed with an abundance of would-be church-singers (probably it would be better to call them singers who want to sing in church on a financial basis, for the great majority of these aspirants have nothing to "sell" the position but voice; no routine, no musicianship, very little equipment or any kind but the ability to make verse and display temperament). If I am to be accused of being unduly harsh and gloomy I can only reply by referring my critics to the long-suffering organists and music committees who manfully attempt to strain out the precious wheat from the over-abundant chaff! In several previous articles I have discussed this particular problem in some detail, with sundry suggestions as to the possible improvement of the situation.

Incidentally, at this place I will acknowledge a very violent document, in which the writer very definitely disagrees with my diagnosis of the vocal situation in this country. In his eyes Grand Opera is the sum total of perfection in all the arts, and according to his way of thinking, teachers of voice are perfectly right when they look upon concert and church singing as very poor second and third-rate steps in artistic valuation! I do not agree with this viewpoint at all—which remark is put in simply to ease my own artistic conscience. For this questioning of my wisdom was not the important thing in the letter here spoken of. My point in bringing up the matter is to make note of his counter-offensive —that singers are not entirely to blame for poor music in church services; much can be laid at the feet of ill-trained, inadequately equipped organists and choirmasters.

There is reason and right in this charge. In my opinion the true purpose and use of this weekly music page is not to flaunt publicly my personal views, not to uselessly irritate harmless prejudices and personal idosyncrasies, or, as a matter of fact, to single out any particular element for any personal attacks. My feeling is that this page should serve as a round-table for the presentation of helpful suggestions of practical value, as a source of pertinent stimulating encouragement for the steady raising of our church-music standards. and to be a court of resort in any occasion where honest, unbiased advice is wanted—the continuous stream of letters which comes to the department asking for everything from suggested plans for a new organ to identifying some favorite (but lost) record gem from a scrap of verse or a few notes of a tune proves that it meets a need.

My remarks about the poor equipment of most of the singers who attempt to fill choir positions were not directed so much at these individuals as at the set of people most responsible for the delinquencies of the pupils—the great mass of vocal teachers who know little and care less for the particular requirements needed in order to properly serve God in the musical portion of the church service. When we sufficiently accentuate and emphasize the importance and artistic value of sacred music, and the musical and commercial rewards mastery of that field can bring, then we have progressed a long way toward remedying the present faults. And this applies just as much to the inadequate organist or choir-leader as to the would-be soloist or quartet singer. In a succeeding article I intend to consider this question from the organists' standpoint. Then my perturbed critic may feel that if I am drastic enough I have somewhat redeemed the reputation of the singing fraternity. The wise singer and the forward-looking organist will study the church music field carefully, noting necessities and pitfalls, eagerly developing fine equipment to meet its peculiar needs. These artists can then be sure of ample financial and artistic reward.

MUSIC REVIEW

A. P. Schmidt Co., Boston

Morning Hymn—Milligan.
The Silent Sea—Baines.
Great Is the Lord—Lansing.
The New City—Calver.
God of the Dew, God of the Sun—Whitmer.
Blessed Is Everyone That Feareth the Lord—Burdett.

Above are listed the titles of a sheaf of new anthems just issued by this wide-awake publishing house. All of the numbers are fine church music, singable, religious in tone, grading high in musical values, and without exception, easy to do: Music that will add to the service interest, reverence and spiritual uplift. New music is the best tonic for the choir, as every experienced choirmaster knows. There can be no mistake made in getting all the numbers above.

Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago, Ill.

The Lord Shall Preserve Thee—Otis.
Fireside Fancies—Clokey.

The selection by Wooler is a sacred song of practical value, issued in two keys, for high and low voices. The melody is appealing and the setting offers no particular difficulties for performance. The Otis number is a well-written anthem, designed primarily for quartet use—it could easily be adjusted for use with a chorus choir, if the first three and a half pages were handled by solo voices and the chorus starting with the bass lead and continuing to the close.

"Fire Side Fancies" is a set of seven short sketches for organ, evidently intended more for recital and "movie" purposes than church use; but, by omitting the designated titles and using substitutes, several of the pieces are adaptable for service use, specifically, numbers 1, 4, 6 and 7. The music is individual, interesting and attractive.

Fresh from the Field

The First Church, Waukegan, Ill., has called to its pastorate Rev. W. D. Whan of Billings, Mont. He will begin his work at Waukegan, Jan. 1.

There are at the present time 8764 persons enrolled in the three departments of the Moody Bible Institute. Of these 872 are in the day school, 862 in the evening school and 7030 in the correspondence school.

One-fifth of the United Presbyterian churches of the country are pastorless, according to the Religious Telescope which says, "The high wages in industrial plants and increasing opportunities in the commercial world are held responsible for the situation. It looks very much as if a lot of people are ignoring the call of Almighty God for the call of the almighty dollar."

Rev. John D. Kern is now on the field as pastor at Washington, Ia. Rev. J. A. Hurley has resigned at Estherville. Rev. Robert D. Kinney has become pastor at Eldora; Rev. C. W. Heady, at Bloomfield; Rev. A. N. Nettleman of Aurora, Ill., has been called to the Forest Avenue Church, Des Moines; Rev. J. E. Treloar has resigned at Humeston; and Rev. Carr L. Lundholm at Cherokee. There are an unusual number of changes in pastorates in Iowa this fall.

The great contest between the men's class of the First Church, Kansas City, Mo., Rev. David G. Evans, teacher, and the Taubman Class at Long Beach, Cal., has resulted in great interest and enormous attendance. On Nov. 4, Doctor Evans had the privilege of teaching a class of 17,833 men in Convention Hall. The attendance was 8,000 in excess of that of the Taubman Class. While this unusual attendance may not be continued, it is expected that the interest in men's Bible classes in both cities will be greatly stimulated.

E. T. H. Schaffer in the "Atlantic Monthly" holds that "while the negro was a necessary factor in that older civilization of the south which reached its culmination in the sixties, it is realized now that, owing to economic and agricultural change, the section is definitely entering upon a new phase in which the negro as the South visualizes him can play almost no part. The industrial portions of the South which just now claim considerable attention are apart from any consideration of the question. Here the negro population has always been small, has never taken any part in industry and so to these sections it is a matter of indifference whether this minor, nonessential group goes or stays." In the face of this statement it is interesting to note the activities of the chambers of commerce and other commercial organizations which in the chief industrial centers have been exerting themselves to stay the negro exodus. They have gone so far as to show cartoons of an old negro nursemaid being snowballed by boys in the cold north.

The First Church, Batavia, Ill., Rev. Fred W. Field, pastor, dedicated on Oct. 28, a new addition to its church building and a pipe organ. Worth-while service has been rendered by Mr. Field during the past three years.

Rev. W. H. Barrett of Erie, Pa., accepts the call of the Latrobe and Derry churches, western Pennsylvania. Rev. D. M. Lenox of Corapolis accepts the call of the Oakmont Church, Pittsburgh.

Dr. W. H. Main of the Publication Society has written the words and music for a bright, very easy, singable song entitled "A Golden Century." Copies will be mailed free to those who request them. Address 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

Rev. W. W. Ayer of the First Church, Valparaiso, Ind., recently preached a series of sermons on the "Lord Jesus Christ." The attendance at the evening meetings was more than doubled. It's evident that doctrinal preaching can be made interesting.

In an announcement of a series of sermons in the Mt. Morris Church, N. Y., Rev. H. G. Weston Smith says, "Marriage is too frequently made a matter of jest. Neither in the schools nor on the public platform nor for that matter even in the churches and homes does it receive real serious and constructive attention. Yet it is doubtless more potent in determining the temper of modern society than any other one thing. Essentially the marriage relation is grounded in the deeper principles of true religion. For this reason the Christian church has a responsibility to bring before its young people as well as its adults a serious Christian interpretation."

Worry and fretting by patients are factors which hospitals must eliminate if they are to get helpful results from treatments, according to Wilson E. Donaldson who spoke upon "Religion in Hospitals" before the American Hospital Association on Nov. 2. "It is my firm belief that every hospital would increase its efficiency by making definite provision for the presence of one or more religious leaders in the institution to visit the sick at the bedside or conduct chapel services. This spiritual ministry turns the thought of the patients to God and away from themselves and their illness. The endorsement of the officers of the institution gives such a worker or chaplain standing and emphasizes the fact that the institution is using every available means, mental, physical and spiritual to completely restore the health of the individual."

That the churches do not propose to stand quietly by while persistent effort is being made to cause widespread disrespect of law is seen in resolutions recently passed by the Worcester Baptist Association at its meeting in Grafton, Mass. After expressing deep concern because of the widespread disrespect for law officials were urged to prosecute violators. The association then put itself on record to this effect: "We consider the persistent use of the editorial columns of the Worcester Telegram and Gazette as a medium for wet propaganda an outrage of the moral sense of the Christian community and the abettor o the bootlegger and all those who hold disrespect for the national prohibition law to be a virtue."

Baptists at Dearborn, Mich., have called Rev. S. W. Phelps of Milwaukee as pastor. Dearborn is one of the rapidly growing suburbs of Detroit.

The church in Highland Park, Mich. expects to cancel its mortgage indebtedness Thanksgiving Day. This relatively new building is already altogether inadequate for the growing work of the church. W. G. Coltman has been pasto practically since the organization of th church.

The perennial discussion about th church allegiance of Mr. Lloyd Georg seems to be now settled by a statemen he is reported to have made while in S Louis. He is a member of a Baptis church. He was, until he was abou thirty years old, a member of a Discipl church.

According to the figures presented at recent meeting of the American Hospit Association there are 6,000 hospitals i the United States with a bed capacity 600,000 and a property value of $1,800 000,000. The sum of $525,000,000 is r quired annually to maintain these hosp tals while new construction and equi ment takes an additional sum of $35 000,000 per year. It's expensive busines this being sick.

President Coolidge has, since comir to the highest office within the gift o our people, become a member of a Co gregational Church in Washington, C. The Christian Century commenti on this event says, "There are apparent some in this country who have difficul in realizing that it is possible for a m who happens to be president of t United States to become a professed fo lower of Christ and join a church in t same simple and sincere manner in whi most other people do." We do not kn the reasons that have kept Preside Coolidge from taking this step heret fore, but we are sincerely glad that has thus openly identified himself wi the Christian forces of the country.

"The world's greatest newspaper" once more greatly disturbed by what conceives to be a clear "case of the co fusion of church and state." Its leadi editorial, a column in length, is devot to the "churches in politics." The occ sion of the editorial is the widespre publicity given to the act of a Method layman in Detroit who resigned his me bership in a Detroit church. He said was getting tired of "politics in the p pit." When he attended church wanted to "hear the gospel." A flood light is thrown upon the case by the mission of this layman that he long for the good old days when the churc preached temperance and did not b themselves with the matter of proh tion. The Detroit layman and the C cago Tribune are one in this desire. W the "world's greatest newspaper" wa to see legalized once more in this co try one of the world's greatest curses beyond our understanding.

God Too Good to Me

GOD, you have been too good to me,
You don't know what you've done
A clod's too small to drink in all
The treasure of the sun.

The pitcher fills the lifted cup
And still the blessings pour
They overbrim the shallow rim
With cool refreshing store.

You are too prodigal with joy,
Too careless of its worth,
To let the stream with crystal gleam
Fall wasted on the earth.

Yet many thirsty lips draw near
And quaff the greater part!
There still will be too much for me
To hold in one glad heart.

Fresh from the Field

The national convention of the Anti-saloon League of America will be held in Washington, Jan. 12-17, 1924. An earlier announcement named Birmingham, Ala., and a December date.

Harry Clifford Wayman was inaugurated as president of William Jewell College, Nov. 22. From all reports President Wayman is beginning his work with the hearty support of the faculty, trustees and students.

Rev. H. P. Hoskins and Howard L. Fleming are engaged in special evangelistic work at the First Church, Mt. Vernon, Ill., Rev. H. E. Truex, pastor. Mr. Hoskins address is Baptist headquarters, Lansing, Mich.

The Home Missions Council composed of some forty national home mission boards is putting on in Rochester, N. Y., the first national missions conference held in any city with the work in that city definitely in mind. This conference will be held Dec. 8-10. It is to be a conference in fact as well as in name.

"To disturb the minds of bereaved fathers and mothers by unfounded or exaggerated stories of official neglect of the cemeteries in France is a base and unworthy thing," according to Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, himself an ex-service man who was sent by the Federal Council of Churches to investigate conditions in the American cemeteries in France. He reports that far-reaching plans have already been partially carried out.

The Unitarian Laymen's League has issued bulletin number 20, "Why John Doe Does Go to Church." It is said that "American churches in common with American agriculture and industry suffer from absentee owners." It is reported that the attendance of men in the Unitarian churches has been steadily increased through the efforts of the laymen's league. A careful study is being made throughout the denomination with a view of securing statistics from which accurate inferences may be drawn. Is there not here a suggestion for our Baptist laymen?

Announcement has just been made that the committee on social and religious surveys of 370 Seventh Ave., New York City, which in the three years of its existence has made many very valuable contributions to scientific knowledge in the socio-religious field, has changed its official designation to the institute of social and religious research. Its directors are John R. Mott, chairman; Ernest D. Burton, secy.; Raymond B. Fosdick, treas.; James L. Barton, W. H. P. Faunce and Kenyon L. Butterfield. The latest of its publications is Walter S. Athearn's, "The Religious Eudcation of Protestants in an American Commonwealth."

Dr. H. S. Smith has been appointed superintendent of education of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education. He began the duties of this position Nov. 12.

It is interesting to note that in spite of resignations and other causes, the equalization in the quotas of the different denominations furnishing chaplains to the army is not disproportionate. There are nineteen Baptist chaplains as against thirteen Presbyterians, thirty Methodists and twenty-one Roman Catholic.

A calendar of the White Temple Church, San Diego, Calif., Frank O. Bolden, pastor, makes note of the special subscription offer of THE BAPTIST. Another of its calendars advises members that "an order is to be sent in this week for subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and Missions. Labels should be examined and new subscriptions solicited." Good work!

No matter whether times be good or bad the farmer will always have to borrow a lot of money. For this stupendous business of forty-one billion dollars has to be bought every twenty-three years, as the average life of the farmer is only twenty-three years long. The federal farm law is therefore a benefit to the farmer because it enables him to get control of his business at least to the extent of 50 per cent. The federal land bank system is one of the two largest financial institutions in the country and has loaned $700,000,000 on farm property.

Rev. Gilbert Laws in the "Baptist Times and Freeman" discusses Doctor Whitley's Angus lectures. He says that "the history of the Baptist movement in the nineteenth century proves that evangelization is the true breath of life to our people. When General Baptists slid down through liberalism into unitarianism they disappeared. When Particular Baptists climbed higher and higher up barren peaks of metaphysical speculation they became lost to view. The poor world was left to struggle along the dusty road with no help from either." He then traces the beginning of the new era to Andrew Fuller and messages such is his "Gospel Worthy of All Acceptation." He says that what Fuller did as the nineteenth century was dawning, Spurgeon did a half century later. "Spurgeon was really a reformer. That backward looking people should shelter themselves under his name is one of the ludicrous things that we must try not to laugh at—out of politeness." Doctor Laws then suggests that we ought to make a greater effort to unify the Baptist world. That British Baptists ought not to meet henceforth in their annual assembly without having accredited messengers from the northern, southern and Canadian conventions. "Baptists of the world are one people. God and not man has made them so. They are a distinct people and will so remain for at least as long a period as living people can foresee. Whatever steps they may take in the future they should take them together."

The editor of the journal of the American Medical Association takes issue with the widely quoted statement that the health of the country districts generally is menaced by the lack of trained doctors and nurses and hospital facilities, and reaches the conclusion that the supply of physicians is adequate. Better roads, better telephone facilities, decreased incidence of disease and better hospital facilities more than make up for any relative decrease in the number of rural physicians and nurses.

A large citizen's committee in the city of Worcester, Mass., has been organized to carry forward a program of law enforcement. The ministers have for weeks been sounding the alarm calling attention to the deplorable conditions in that city. It is said "the greatest foe before us in enforcing prohibition law is not the bootleggers and denizens of the underworld but rather the eminently respectables who for the sake of their own appetites flout the prohibition law and thereby greatly aid in the defiance of all law." With all their faults the churches do stand as watchmen on the walls of our cities.

BIBLE SUNDAY
December 9th

Theme
THE BIBLE
REMAKING THE ORIENT

Purpose
The earthquake in Japan has made large areas of the Far East practically Bibleless. Thousands of Bible printing plates in 25 languages and dialects used in Yokohama have been totally destroyed. They must be replaced at once or the whole missionary program will be seriously handicapped.

Need
The American Bible Society needs immediately $289,000 with which to make good the actual losses, to say nothing of the enlarged opportunities.

Responsibility is definitely upon the Churches of America, whose agency for Bible work in the Far East is the American Bible Society.

Opportunity
is one of unusual significance and every Pastor, Sunday School Superintendent and Young People's leader should utilize Bible Sunday on December 9th (or nearest convenient date) for the promotion of interest in the distribution of the Scriptures in Japan and the Far East.

A Grand Rush

We had a dream. We thought the precepts of Jesus were being put into effect in actual practice. We were in a great church with a great congregation. It was the time of the offering. The organ began to play. The minister read "When thou bringest thy gift to the altar and rememb'rest that thy brother hast aught against thee, leave there thy gift and go and first be reconciled to thy brother." We were awakened by a grand rush. What a sensation would be caused by the expression of a real desire for true fraternity. We all need to see things at least a part of the time from the other man's point of view. That is where THE BAPTIST majors—it helps to mutual understanding and sympathy.

Killam's Kollum

Ca'm Thy Fears

Since the committee announced that Dr. John A. Earl had accepted the position as "joint" editor there have been many inquiries made about the "joint." Dr. M. P. Boynton in introducing the new editor to the Chicago ministers suggested that it might prove to be a "juicy joint." We are not troubled by this forecast. In New York, however, we found a much more serious situation. Clifton D. Gray, the former editor of The Standard, suggested that there might be an investigating committee appointed to look into the whole situation. It was thought by some that "joint editor" savored too much of the underworld. Brethren, ca'm thy fears. "Joint" editor may mean almost anything to suit the present situation. The purpose is to keep the "joints" well oiled.

Changeless Things in a Changing World

Paul's hearers did not have electric lights, automobiles and the radio, but they had their due allotment of human nature. When Paul spoke his mind in Ephesus he immediately got results. Diana of the Ephesians found valiant defenders. They sang the "old time religion." It had served their fathers and mothers and they wanted no change there. What a glorious thing it would be if the great questions of duty and destiny could be settled so easily, but they cannot. THE BAPTIST recognizes that we are in a changing world. It recognizes that the men and women of this generation have heart hunger and must for themselves face the questions of duty and destiny. THE BAPTIST will help you face them with courage and with cheer.

Let Us Be Frank

Even as a matter of policy we believe that frankness pays. When men have something to say we believe in giving them the opportunity of saying it, regardless of its merits. Repression brings reaction and resentment. Brethren, turn on the light. Let us always know the best and the worst in any denominational situation. Speak freely your mind on any matter which has the good of the brotherhood at its center. In THE BAPTIST the Open Forum is still open.

Editors Understand

Two persons were tried the same day by the same judge in a municipal court in Boston according to the press. One of them was found guilty and fined for sounding his horn and the other for not sounding it. We understand this experience.

Fresh from the Field

At the recent annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, it was shown that the membership of the federation reached its peak in 1920. Since then it has declined from four million to less than three million. It was explained, however, that the rate of decline has been checked since the recovery of business conditions.

Dr. H. O. Rowlands has been doing the most remarkable work of his life since he gave up being pastor of a local church and entered the apostolic ministry. Having closed his work as ad interim pastor at Columbus, Ohio, he is now doing a similar service for the University Church of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

Rev. Carl D. Case, pastor of the Oak Park Church, Chicago, is in the Mounds Park sanitarium, St. Paul, slowly recovering from nervous exhaustion and its attendant physical reactions. Rev. Hector C. Leland who is now a member of that church supplied the pulpit the first two Sundays in November. He is now supplying the pulpit at Eau Claire, Wis. while that church looks about for a pastor to take the place made vacant by the removal of Rev. E. R. McKinney to Illinois.

There is a suggestion in the church bulletin of the First Church, Tacoma, Wash., which should be adopted by all other Baptist pastors printing a bulletin. At the bottom of the last page under a perforated line is the following: "Dear Pastor: Realizing the importance of having the proper reading in my home, I wish you would enroll my subscription to THE BAPTIST, $2.50;" then follows the mention of one or two other journals with a place for the signature and with the mention of club rates.

The First Church, Chicago, will celebrate its ninetieth anniversary beginning Sunday, Nov. 25. Dr. A. K. DeBlois, pastor of the First Church, Boston, and for ten years pastor of the Chicago First Church will be the anniversary preacher for both morning and evening services. In the afternoon at four o'clock the cornerstone of the new Bible school and community house is to be laid. Dr. A. H. Gage will deliver the address. On Monday a dinner will be given under the auspices of the men's club at which Doctor DeBlois will speak. Tuesday is home-coming night, when a history of the church in three periods will be read by three members of the church. Addresses will be made by former pastors. Wednesday is church night when greetings will be read from former members. The First Church extends a cordial invitation to former members of the church living in Chicago to attend these services. This old church, which was founded when Chicago had a population of less than 500 people, is facing the future in a spirit of hopefulness. At the last communion service five new families were welcomed into its fellowship. There has been added to its membership during the past two years 115 members.

Rev. W. H. Rogers of Muscatine, Iowa, is helping Pastor Hoyt of the Belden Avenue Church of Chicago in special evangelistic meetings for ten days.

The birth of a new baby is an event of more than passing interest. Doctor Earl is rejoicing this week over the arrival of a new grandson, on Nov. 10, whose father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Platt, live in St. Paul, Minn.

The contest between a men's Bible class of Long Beach, Calif., and the men's Bible class of the First Baptist Church, Kansas City, Mo., closed on Nov. 11 with the largest attendance ever recorded. Kansas City won in spite of the fact that Long Beach had 31,034 present on the last Sunday of the contest.

WE rejoice that in all time men have found a refuge in Thee, and that prayer is the voice of love, the voice of pleading and the voice of thanksgiving. Our souls overflow toward Thee like a cup when full; nor shall we search to see if our prayers have been registered, or whether of the things asked we have received much, or more, or anything. That we have had permission to feel ourselves in Thy presence, to take upon ourselves something of the light of Thy countenance, to have a consciousness that Thy thoughts are upon us, to experience the inspiration of the Holy Spirit in any measure—this is an answer to prayer transcending all things that we can think of. We are glad that we can glorify Thee, that we can rejoice Thee, that it does make a difference to Thee what we do, and that Thou doest enfold us in a consciousness of Thy sympathy with us, of how much Thou art to us, and of what we are to Thee.

—Henry Ward Beecher.

Is crop reduction ethical? This question is a vital one in these days when crops are greater than the demand for them. The benefactor used to be the man who made "two blades of grass grow where one grew before," but now for example the raisin-grower will have to market a 240,000 ton crop, one-third larger than last year on a declining market. The only solution, failing an increased demand not now in sight, is to store the surplus, radically reducing the yield in 1924. In a recent article in Wallace's Farmer, E. R. Murphy, one of its editors, ventures the forecast that "by another year perhaps it may be possible to get the big general farm organizations and the marketing associations and the United States Department of Agriculture together on a plan to estimate the surplus of the principal farm crops, estimate the demand and recommend the acreage that seems likely to provide adequately for the consumer's needs and at the same time give the farmer a fair price."

The Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., has completed a financial campaign raising $75,000 to pay the last of the obligations on its new building.

Prof. E. O. Sellers, formerly with the Moody Bible Institute, is now at the head of the music department of the Baptist Bible Institute of New Orleans. He writes that he enjoys his work and fellowship and keeps posted on Baptist doings in the north through THE BAPTIST.

Pastor Francis Stifler of Wilmette, Ill., wishing to deliver to each of his deacons a copy of the new book by Dr. Frederick Agar on "The Deacon at Work" called up one of his generous members and asked him for the use of his car for a couple of hours. He was told to go to a certain point and he would find the car. Imagine his surprise and joy when the car turned out to be a new Studebaker coupé the gift to the pastor and Mrs. Stifler from their friends in the church.

An analysis of the work of the daily vacation Bible schools under the Monroe County New York Church Federation is instructive. There were sixty-five schools under the direction of the federation. The total enrolment in Rochester was 4,452 with an average of 2,527. There were 130 paid workers and 220 volunteer workers. The cost per pupil was $1.67 for the term. The enrolment outside of Rochester was 1,607, an average attendance of 1,022. There were thirty-four paid workers and 135 volunteer workers. There were six schools in the open country.

The committee on educational policy of the Citizenship Conference recently held in Washington, adopted the words of Lincoln as defining the task before us as American citizens: "Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 rallied to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor—let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling-books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it become the political religion of the nation; and let the young and old, the rich and poor, the grave and gay of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions, sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars." On this committee with others we note the names of Samuel Z. Batten, Richard H. Edmonds, Mrs. Henry W. Peabody and Gilbert N. Brink.

Let Us Think

THE call to thanksgiving is in reality a call to thoughtfulness. In the family of words, think and thank spring from the same stock. And even now, after all the changes through which the English language has passed, there is only the difference of a single letter between the two words. This is suggestive in view of the fact that we are officially called upon to render thanks to Almighty God on the particular day set apart in our national calendar for this purpose. Our country is ripe for clear and vigorous thinking about some very vital things. International relations should not blind us to our own domestic problems. We do not discount the seriousness of the European situation. It is grave beyond any words of ours to describe, and no Thanksgiving Day in the United States will be complete without some adequate recognition on the part of our people of the needs of our neighbors across the sea and our responsibility to extend to them all the aid which circumstances will permit.

But domestic affairs require some special attention. The eighteenth amendment to the federal constitution is under fire. Many leading daily newspapers are openly committed to the repeal of the Volstead Act and to a serious modification if not nullification of the constitutional amendment providing for the national prohibition of the liquor traffic. The recent citizens' conference held in Washington was an effort to meet the organized and sustained attempt on the part of wet advocates to break down the prohibition laws and reestablish legalized drinking. This whole situation needs to be considered carefully, and some vigorous thinking must be done in order to clear away the atmosphere of smoke and fog which has accumulated, and in order that law-abiding citizens may thank God and take courage.

Continued material prosperity must be saved from the grossness and unspirituality which naturally accompany it. Special blessings are pronounced upon the poor by our Lord, not because poverty has any virtue in itself or because riches are vicious, but solely because the things that accompany material prosperity have an almost irresistible tendency to break down the fine things that make for moral character, genuine culture and true spirituality. This tendency must be arrested, not by vows of voluntary poverty, not by monastic methods, not by decrying material prosperity; but by transmuting coin into character, silver into service and money into manhood. This is one of the principles of the economics of Jesus. Treasures on earth have real value only as they are invested in treasures in heaven, and the mammon of unrighteousness is nothing more than base metal until it is transmuted into spiritual wealth by the alchemy of Christian stewardship.

All race and religious prejudice which is having a strange revival in our country must be met by clear and courageous thinking. There is doubtless occasion for the reaction of many of our people against any form of ecclesiasticism which practices political methods for the advancement of its own ends, and for the protest against a commercialism which breaks down the honest rules of the game, and for the determination to preserve American ideals in the midst of the deluge which has thrown together so many people of different types and tongues; but the methods used to express reaction and protest must also be 100 per cent American. The American method is the method of fair play and sportsmanlike conduct. Every man has a right to his religion and to his politics and to his business and to his peculiar color and brogue, and that right must be respected in America so long as he conducts himself as a law-abiding citizen or alien. When he oversteps that boundary the due process of the law will correct him, and if that fails we can remedy it, not by taking the law into our own hands, but by enforcing the law through the election of executives and judges who are loyal to their solemn oath.

In our denominational affairs we plead for sober, straight and sincere thinking. Nothing of permanent value is gained by prejudice. To jump at conclusions is dangerous; to condemn any man or method until all the evidences are reviewed by an honest, competent and reasonable jury is unfair; to spread rumor or gossip designed to destroy confidence in an individual or institution is unethical. Let us stop and think the thing through. The thanksgiving season is a good time to think about the vital and constructive things, and to practice the fine spirit of Paul reflected in the words: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

UPON thinking clearly and in a constructive, fraternal, and hopeful spirit we must base our thanksgiving. Our thanks will necessarily partake of our thoughts. The thanksgiving sermon will reflect the attitude of mind of the preacher. If the attitude of mind is negative, fearful, pessimistic, suspicious, it will be difficult for the preacher to thank God and take courage; but if the preacher heeds the fine suggestion of Paul and insists on thinking white instead of black, beauty instead of ugliness, confidence instead of suspicion, breadth instead of narrowness, he will be a true prophet of the new thanksgiving, recognizing the love and goodness of God in the whole sphere of life and not only in some small segment. And yet he will not be blind to the sin and vice and crime that mar our civilization and shame the church of Christ for its impotence and cowardice. He will cry aloud and spare not, but like the prophets of old the negative note in his preaching will only heighten the harmony of a theme the music of which is cast in a major key and the motif of which is inspiration and action.

We Can Finish It

THE poster with this legend hangs upon the wall in front of our eyes and under the words is the picture of an unfinished church building with workmen busy on tower and roof and other workmen on the ground delivering and preparing the materials which lie in piles about the building. The first impression on seeing the poster is expressed in the exclamation: "Of course they can finish it." The end and aim of the poster is to produce the same impression with regard to the consummation of the New World Movement on April 30, 1924, only we must change the word, "they" in our exclamation to the word, "we." "WE CAN FINISH IT!"

There is no doubt about our financial ability to finish the task with honor. We have abundant resources as Baptists. Some of our people have given heroically, and had this measure of giving been general, we should long ago have realized our highest expectations. Such giving as the few have demonstrated proves the truth of our statement that our financial ability is more than equal to the completion of the task. Wages and salaries never were so high, prosperity never was so generally distributed, business has seldom been better, the expansion of trade and industry and building is unprecedented, and while the cost of living is high, the cost of high living is higher. Baptists share proportionately in the general prosperity. Therefore looking at our financial ability we are bold to say with assurance in the reasonableness of the statement: "WE CAN FINISH IT!"

Our obligation to finish the task is unquestioned. As a matter of fact this should go without saying, but we say it simply for emphasis. The man who does not pay his honest debts when he is able to pay them is a crook and not a Christian. The application of this statement to a Christian denomination is apparent. We must discharge our denominational obligation to the last penny. This obligation is definite as well as denominational, personal as well as promotional, individual as well as institutional. It is my obligation and your obligation since we are members in good standing of a Baptist church. We must pay our pledges if we are to be honorable and Christian, and if we have no pledge we ought to make one and pay it. "WE OUGHT TO FINISH IT!"

But what about our will to finish the task? Much is being said in the press these days about the will of Germany to pay reparations. That is not an economic problem—it is a moral and spiritual problem. All the commissions in the world appointed to investigate Germany's ability to pay cannot solve the problem of the will. It is a question of psychology first of all. Repentance is the only thing that will solve the problem. There must be a change of mind, and that change of mind will probably come after Germany is convinced of the reasonableness and justice and equity of the demand. At this point an economic commission might aid. The will to finish the task is the problem of Northern Baptists. And the problem is being solved. The Bible and missionary conferences have been a tremendous aid to this end. All problems of Baptists are at heart spiritual problems. We have no ecclesiastical problems because we are not a church in the ecclesiastical sense of the word; but we have spiritual problems because we stand for spiritual and supernatural religion. With the new emphasis on the Bible and on the genius of Baptist churches and on our missionary history and achievements and on evangelism and with the hearty and unanimous response to this emphasis the will to finish our task is beginning to appear. "BY THE GRACE OF GOD WE WILL FINISH IT!"

Standing Out in Bold Relief

THE words of this caption were a mere phrase to me until this morning when looking out of my window on the fifteenth floor of the Hamilton Club I saw the noble and symmetrical spire of the First Methodist Church towering high above the smoky roofs of all the other buildings. On top of the spire was the cross of gold shining like light far above the grime of the city and silent amid the Niagara roar of the traffic beneath. I was comforted and relieved. In my narrow room with its one window hemmed in by skyscrapers which fail to scrape the sky of its smoke and dirt, I must have been unconsciously depressed, for all at once seeing the Methodist steeple I was back somewhere in the country under the eaves of a rural church with its simple beauty lingering in my soul. Then I understood how something may stand out in relief not only from the things around it but also in our hearts. The Methodists have done a wonderful thing in sanctifying the commerce of Chicago.

Seeing God

THE world needs to see God as he really is. Caricatures of God are much in evidence. The whole pagan world worships caricatures of the true God. The real God is hidden under a mass of superstition and ignorance. But who are we that we should throw stones when we live in glass houses? The God of the Christian world is largely a God of caprice who is untrustworthy, or an absent God who governs his world by deputies, or an unknown God who hides himself in mysteries beyond the understanding of the common man. But the true God can be seen and realized in daily life by any man whose heart is pure.

A Page of Opinion

First Attack the Home

YEARS ago there was a great deal of talk about "the home." Few people paid any attention to it. Most of the utterances made concerning the home too much resembled preachments to be effective—that is, things said because they were expected to be said. But today we are all in a better position to understand what was meant—we have seen the nations of well established homes weather the most terrible cataclysms of history, and the homeless nations fall. Each home is a root of the national tree, and the tree holds by the number and strength of its roots.

Sinister confirmation of these truisms has come in the subversive influences which are at work in the as yet unshaken nations. The first attack is made on the home. All of the destructive social movements are sponsored by the people of nations which had more hovels than homes (because they were hovel-making instead of home-making peoples), and it is significant that in this country the work of destruction is taken up by those who prefer transient habitations to homes. The home, like the church, is under fire because it presents a bulwark against the subversive forces of the world. By cheapening the marriage tie, by undermining parental authority, by inculcating an artificial spirit of worldly wiseness in the young, by all the processes of divorce, entertainment, bad literature and the general trivializing of our common life, the doors have been opened to other and more degenerative influences in the general social life.

It is a matter of common observation over a long period that the social fabric begins to rot with the weakening of the home. The best defense of law and order and progressive justice is the success of those elements which defend and strengthen the home. We could well afford in this country for the next decade to regulate all our industry and politics and finance with one single paramount object in mind, the welfare of the home.

Nothing is more useless than platitudes on this subject. Attend first to the welfare of the home, put a sound economic condition around all its spiritual elements, and upon our economic consideration we shall find the other elements growing to unparalleled strength. As long as the American home stands this nation never will succumb to the poisonous air with which satanic forces are now filling the world.—The Dearborn Independent.

Women and the World's Welfare

THE Boston Evening Transcript tells us that "One of the most intense moments of the recent meeting in Des Moines, Iowa, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society (Methodist) occurred when Mrs. Thomas Nicholson, president of the society, presented a document and resolution prepared by Miss Helen Kim, a native of Korea and a graduate of the Woman's Foreign Missionary School, in which she pleaded for an organization by the women of the world to be known as 'The Woman's International Association.'

"A most significant coincidence was that at the time this document was being read a special delivery letter was received from Mrs. Lucy W. Peabody, Beverly, Mass., lifelong Baptist missionary worker, suggesting the same thing.

"Miss Kim's document denoted the purpose of the Woman's International Association to be the promotion of peace and friendship throughout the world;

"To help and encourage women of all trades and professions to do their best and to professionalize all the work of women;

"To protect women and children from all the evil tendencies which keep them from growing physically, mentally and spiritually;

"To train the women to be intelligent and loyal citizens of the world and of their nations;

"To inform the women of the world about the conditions and activities of all the nations.

"Miss Kim added, 'It is our bounden duty, hand in hand with men, to better the world, and past history has given us sufficient proof that it is not safe for us to entrust the welfare of the world entirely in the hands of the men.'"

When the men of the world are willing to join hands with the women of the world in some international league for the advancement of good-will and intelligence and justice, the permanent welfare of the world will be assured.

Sunday Legislation

AT the National Convention of the Lord's Day Alliance, recently held in Syracuse, N. Y., the following statement was made by one of the speakers, and it clearly reflects the attitude of the alliance on Sunday legislation: "We have no objection as to how a man spends his Sunday, but we do object to commercialized amusements because they require other people to work seven days in the week." The following facts were also brought out that a survey of 573 churches showed a total Sunday morning attendance of 27,725 or an average of forty-eight to a church, while on the same day in the evening two motion picture houses had a total paid attendance of 14,100. In Washington, D. C., a check of forty churches showed less than 7,000 at worship, while a check of forty theaters in the same city at the same time revealed 50,000 in attendance. While interested in the legislative end of the alliance we are of the opinion that laws in themselves will never remedy the situation. American people have a strange thirst for legislation, and when legislation is the true reflection of the will of the majority it may be enforced; but something more than laws are needed to fill the churches on Sunday. We have a lurking suspicion that when the churches become more fully vitalized and socialized and evangelized they will then become successful competitors of the picture shows.

The Crowns of Christ

"And on his head were many crowns."—Revelation 19:12.
A Sermon for Thanksgiving

By Robert Stuart MacArthur

MOSCOW is far and away the most interesting city in Russia. This statement is true architecturally, historically, racially and religiously. Mouravieff graciously considered Rome to be interesting because it reminded him of Moscow. Petrograd is modern and European; but Moscow is ancient and Asiatic. Moscow was the heart of old Russia. The Kremlin was the heart of Moscow. The treasury was the heart of the Kremlin; and the throne- and crown-rooms were the heart of the treasury.

There was the throne of Poland, taken from Warsaw in 1883; there was the gorgeously jeweled throne of Persia, brought to Russia in 1660; and there was the eastern ivory throne of Sophia Paleologus, which she brought with her to Russia in 1473, when she came as the bride of Ivan III. Rows of crowns standing on pedestals, gave silent but eloquent witnesses to Russia's triumphs in the past.

When, on May 26, 1896, the Czar Nicholas II put with his own hands the crown of Russia on his brow, he virtually put on all these other crowns.

But these crowns are a thing of the past. Today I speak of the coronation of him who is King of kings and Lord of lords, Jesus Christ, Son of man, and Son of God. In Revelation 19:12, we read, "And on his head were many crowns." I am embarrassed by the richness of my subject. What crowns shall I omit? What crowns shall I name? I shall mention only those crowns which suggest lordship over vast realms.

The Crown of Creation

I see on Christ's brow the Crown of Creation. The first verse in the Bible, as we all know, is, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." These are majestic words; nothing more sublime is found in any literature. The Bible nowhere attempts to prove the existence of God; the Bible as a revelation from God necessarily assumes his existence. This verse virtually denies atheism, because it affirms theism; it denies materialism, because it asserts creation; it rejects pantheism, because it declares the personality of God. Were it not that we have become so familiar with this verse, its reading would invariably evoke our admiration and secure our reverence. It is worthy to be the opening sentence of the greatest book in the world.

Alongside of this verse we must put another which is somewhat similar in form, is equally majestic in significance, and is profounder in its theistic philosophy and mystery. This verse is the first one in the Gospel by the Evangelist John: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." This verse sets forth the eternal preexistence of Jesus Christ, his personal coexistence with the Father, and his divine essence as God. It is the formulation of the proposition to prove which the Gospel by this evangelist was written; and, in the writer's opinion, as he informs us near the close of the Gospel, he has proved the Messiahship and the Godhead of Jesus Christ as the eternal Word. The writer goes back, as did Moses, to the origin of all things, and there he finds God as Creator. By the side of this wonderful verse we ought also to put the third and fourth verses of this same chapter; "All things were made through him; and without him was not anything made that hath been made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men." Here the work of creation is distinctly ascribed to the divine Word, who is Jesus Christ. Thus creative omnipotence is ascribed to Jesus Christ; we thus see he is the divine Personality who is spoken of in Genesis as the Creator. Through him creative power was manifested.

God the Son

By the side of both these passages, we ought to place the remarkable words in Colossians 1:16,17: "For in him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, things visible and invisible....and all things have been created through him and unto him; and he is before all things, and in him all things consist." When we turn to Hebrews 1:2, we read that the Son is "appointed heir to all things, through whom also he made the worlds." We thus see that Jesus Christ is the Creator of this physical universe. He is our Prophet, our Priest, our King, our Creator, our Preserver, and our Redeemer. Preservation is continuous creation; and redemption is the loftiest function of the Almighty; it is, indeed, the recreation of the race. Not God the Father, not God the Spirit, but God the Son is the glorious personality of the blessed Trinity through whom creative and preservative power manifests itself in this world.

This world was once the thought of God, as the engine was once the thought of its inventor. This world is still the thought of God. It is now God's thought materialized, incarnated, translated. The mountains are God's majestic thoughts. The stars are God's brilliant thoughts. The flowers are God's beautiful thoughts. Creation speaks to us of his wisdom, his power and his love. We ought to study creation with this thought in mind as our dominant motive and our lofty inspiration. Do I study astronomy? Then I am reading God's thoughts after him. Every true student may say with the great astronomer Kepler, "O Almighty God, I think thy thoughts after thee." Then I may see Jesus Christ as the bright and morning Star. Do I study geology? Then I shall see Christ as the Rock of Ages. Do I study botany? Then I shall see Christ as the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley. In studying chemistry, I may learn that every law of attraction and repulsion is a manifestation of the will of God. In mathematics, every sine and cosine is a revelation of the thoughts of God. All the world to the devout student is voiceful with God's name, and resplendent with God's glory.

The modern conception of the uniformity and the universality of law does not militate against the truth. Some men speak of law as if it somehow had a personality and potency of its own; they incorrectly define law, if they attempt to give it any definition. What is law in this connection? May I attempt a definition? Law is the name which we give to the manner in which we have observed some force to act. If that force be material, we have a physical law; if it be mental, we have an intellectual law; if it be moral, we have a spiritual law. Law is not a force; law is a form. Law is not a power; law is a process. Law is not a motor; law is a motion. Law is not an agent; law is an agency. Back of the motion is the motor; there stands God. Back of the process is the power; there stands God. Back of the form is the force; there stands God. Back of the agency is the agent; there stands God. It has been well said that the laws of nature are the habits of God.

Evolution Exalts God

Evolution does not eliminate God from the universe. Perhaps we are not ready to affirm that the doctrine of evolution has been indisputably established, but for all practical purposes it has been established. It certainly is sufficiently established to be a working hypothesis. Evolution only puts God farther back in the line of development. I believe that evolution, rightly understood, the more exalts God; it gives him additional honor and glory. There may be an agnostic and even an atheistic evolution; but there may be an evolution which is truly theistic and even Christic. This evolution honors God with knowledge and power to a remarkable degree. Evolution is simply God's method of accomplishing determined results. Evolution implies an involver; nothing can be evolved which was not first involved. Evolution thus necessitates involution. Law suggests a law-giver; order implies an ordainer. The progress of physical science is making it vastly easier for us to believe in God than ever before. A generation ago, religious men were fearful regarding the progress of scientific knowledge. Their fears have not been justified by the results. The long-distance telephone and the wireless telegraph make it easier than ever before in the history of the human race to believe in the unseen God and in invisible forces. I can stand in New York and talk through a long-distance telephone to my brother man in Chicago, in round numbers one thousand miles away, without the violation of natural law, but in perfect harmony therewith. Who dare say that I cannot kneel in my home and talk to my Father who is in heaven? Heaven is nearer to me than Chicago. Perhaps this heavenly communication is in perfect harmony with natural law as when I talk to my brother man in Chicago. A generation ago it would have been affirmed that it was contrary to all natural law to claim that we could talk to a man a thousand miles away. It was contrary to the natural laws that were then known, but we did not then know all natural laws; and he would be a reckless man who would affirm that we know all natural laws today. God is speaking to us in his world. And as we listen to our Father's voice, we may see our Father's face in the person of Jesus Christ, for he said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

The Crown of Revelation

We see on the brow of Christ also the Crown of Revelation. We have made unwarranted distinctions between God's world and God's word. I distinctly remember when certain teachers thought that they gave additional honor to the world by taking somewhat from the honor of the world. That was a great mistake. God's word and God's world are only different parts of God's wonderful book of revelation. There is no contradiction between natural and revealed religion. Natural religion is revealed religion, so far as it goes; true science is revelation, so far as it goes. But neither goes far enough, and so both are supplemented by God's fuller, humaner, and diviner revelation contained in the blessed book which we call the Bible.

It seems to me that the nineteenth psalm sets forth most beautifully the true relation which ought to exist between God's world and God's word. In the first six verses of that psalm we have natural religion: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." We have here one of the finest personifications I know of in any writer. One day is represented as calling to the next day, and the next takes up the cry and passes it on; thus day unto day, in ceaseless procession, shows God's wondrous revelation of himself. In the seventh verse of this psalm, you enter into a new atmosphere. You feel now that you are breathing the air more distinctively of heaven, and that your feet are standing upon the solid rock, for you read, "The law of the Lord is perfect, restoring the soul." Down to the end of the thirteenth verse you have revealed religion and the effect which it ought to produce on action and character. Then in the last verse you have experimental religion: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer." Observe what progress you have made in this psalm. You have first, creation; secondly, revelation; thirdly, regeneration—natural religion, revealed religion, experimental religion. As I understand it, this psalm is in this respect an epitome of the whole Bible.

Strictly speaking, the Bible is not a book; it is a library. It is the most wonderful library in existence. It took one thousand six hundred years to make it. It took God and probably forty different writers to make it. Some of these writers were princes; some were peasants; some were lovers of war; some, preservers of peace. Parts of it were written in prison; parts, in palaces; parts, by men of the highest culture; parts, by men of ordinary intellect. And yet the book is a unit. The unity of the whole Bible centers about Jesus Christ. From the first majestic words of Genesis to the last love-notes of Revelation, this book reveals his glory and chants his praise.

THE earth, with its wonders untold.
Almighty, thy powers hath founded of old,
Hath stablished it fast by a changeless decree,
And round it hath cast, like a mantle, the sea.

Thy bountiful care what tongue can recite?
It breathes in the air, it shines in the light,
It streams from the hills, it descends to the plain,
And sweetly distills in the dew and the rain.

Frail children of dust and feeble as frail
In thee do we trust, nor find thee to fail.
Thy mercies how tender, how firm to the end,
Our Maker, Defender, Redeemer and Friend.

You remember that when Handel became discouraged by his attempts to give opera in London in a comparatively unknown tongue, he left London and went to Dublin. Just before leaving London, some friend gave him a passage of Scripture on which to write an oratorio. In Dublin he wrote the oratorio which was first called "The Sacred Oratorio," and which was produced first in Dublin. Later the oratorio was given in London in 1742. George II was present with his court. When the "Hallelujah Chorus" was reached the king and his court arose; they thus set the fashion which continues to this day. It gave Handel immediate fame in both cities; now it is known as the "Oratorio of the Messiah," and it has carried in sacred song the name of Handel around the globe. He linked his name, as a musician, with the immortal name of Christ. The operas of the hour are for the hour. The music that has in it the element of enduringness, is religious music. The man whose name is inseparably linked with the name of Christ, will catch somewhat of the glory of Christ, and will live in the future, crowned in his measure with immortal youth, as is Jesus Christ. I never lose an opportunity to hear that oratorio. There are parts of it so sweet and so beautiful, that I sometimes think that if heaven has anything better in the way of song, I cannot endure the bliss, except I be endued with new powers of enjoyment. I have listened to the pastoral symphony in that oratorio until the plain of Bethlehem came visibly before my eyes, and the song of the angels that rolled over that plain the night the Christ was born, echoed through my soul. I have listened to the contralto solo, "He was despised and rejected of men, a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," until it seemed as if my own heart would break with sympathetic sorrow. I have listened to the glorious soprano solo, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," until my heart rose on the wings of faith to the heart of God. I have listened to the "Hallelujah Chorus" until I could appreciate what Handel said of its composition, that he seemed to see the gates of heaven opened, and the great God standing before him. We know that Handel wrote parts of that music on his knees, and he mingled his tears with his ink.

"The Messiah"

But, men and women, the real, the true, the most glorious oratorio of "The Messiah" I have here in my hand as I hold the Bible aloft. The score and the text were written by God through holy men of old. This divine-human book is the true "Oratorio of the Messiah." The Bible is the revelation of God in Jesus Christ his Son, and our divine Redeemer. The genuine unity of which I spoke pervades the book. In every great musical composition, there is a diapason, a unitive, a pervasive, a dominant, a concordant note. If I were skilful as a musician, I could stand by Niagara Falls and write the score of the majestic music of this marvelous cataract. If I were a sufficiently competent musician, I could stand by a little brook and write the score of its music; both would have their diapason, their pervasive and unitive note. Jesus Christ is the diapason of the oratorio of the Bible. His name is the harmonious note in this glorious song of the ages. The unity of the Bible is not external but internal; it is not mechanical but essential; it is not material but spiritual; and throughout all the Bible the name of Christ echoes, and the glory of Christ shines. Through the corridors of Bible revelation the footfalls of Christ reverberate, and through them the music of his name resounds.

In England, as in America, as I have already reminded you, audiences uniformly rise when choirs begin to sing the "Hallelujah Chorus" in the "Oratorio of the Messiah." In Albert Hall, London, a great audience was assembled, and Victoria, the great and good, was present in the royal box. The audience rose, but the noble queen remained seated.

Soon every eye was directed to the royal box in which sat the queen. On rolled the magnificent chorus; but the queen remained seated. Higher still rose the lofty song; onward swept the glorious music. With curious glances, the audience turned to the royal box in which the queen remained seated. Loftier still rose the celestial notes. Now the song reached the part of the chorus where Christ is praised as "King of kings and Lord of lords." The swelling song thus puts the crown of universal dominion on his divine-human brow. Then the noble queen arose and stood with bowed head, as if she would cast the crown of the world's mightiest empire at the pierced feet of her divine Lord. Creation and revelation, art and science, song and story, learning and genius, and all earthly rulers reach their noblest heights when they bend in lowliest reverence at the feet of Jesus Christ and crown him "King of kings and Lord of lords."

The Crown of History

We see on Christ's brow, also, the Crown of History. What is history? It is not easy to give a satisfactory definition. Perhaps we may say that history is a systematic narrative of events in which man has participated. We sometimes say that Herodotus was the "father of history." Not so; Moses is the father of history. Moses was an ancient and authoritative historian centuries before Herodotus was born. Thucydides has given us valuable illustrations of a scientific tendency in the study of history. Polybius was an accurate student of Thucydides. Caesar was not a scientific historian but a chronicler. Xenophon, as his works disclose, was simply an annalist; even Livy and Tacitus were not quite scientific historians. Eusebius was the first ecclesiastical historian worthy the name.

But we do not have a true conception of history until about the year 1567. Then Jean Bodin published his historical philosophy, "The Republic." He enunciated the proposition that the course of events is controlled by definite laws. Bossuet, in his "Discourses on Universal History," did something toward the enlargement of true ideas of history; but his work was largely an amplification of the labors of Augustine in his "City of God." This work was written to show that the disasters which came to Rome were not caused by the giving up of the heathen gods.

The true founder of historical philosophy was Giovanni Battista Vico, whose "New Science" was first published in Naples in 1725. The germ of his political speculations is found in Plato's "Republic." Vico's aim was to reconcile the existence of a divine plan with the freedom of human agency. He really was the father of the philosophy of history. He affirmed that it was the spiritual development of the plan of God. There is a science and a philosophy of history; and the true historian does not simply state facts, but also shows the relation between causes and results. In any true conception of history, it is seen that Jesus Christ is the unifier of the history of the world. Neither Gibbon, Hume, Macaulay, Green, nor McMaster, I venture to affirm, nor any other man, can write a scientific history of the world and leave out Jesus Christ. You might as well try to write a treatise on astronomy and leave out the sun. Jesus Christ is the sun of the moral universe. All the events of history before his coming converged toward his cross; all events since have diverged from his cross. Christ's cross is the pivotal point in the history of the race. On this cross was written his title in Hebrew, the language of religion; in Greek, the language of art; in Latin, the language of law and military power. The cross stood at the confluence of the three streams of ancient civilizations. Religion came and laid its crown at Jesus Christ's feet; art came and paid its tribute at the cross; and law came and cast its honors before the Christ. They all said, "We will have Jesus for our King." Christ assuredly is the center of the civilization of the race.

Somehow we have largely lost this conception of the position of Christ. We have somehow relegated Jesus to distant ages and remote countries. We are willing to believe that God was in the world in the days of Moses and David, of Solomon and Isaiah, and of Hosea and Malachi; perhaps also in the days of the apostles; and some would admit that God was actively present in the days of Wesley and Whitefield. But somehow many of us in this day and time have come to the conclusion that God has retired from the world. Do not believe it. God is not dead; God is not dethroned. The pierced palm of Jesus Christ is on the helm of this universe. God was never more really in the world than he is today. Jesus Christ was never more truly the center of the events of history than he is now. I would not pun on a sacred connection; but I say that history is "His story." The story of Christ is the history of man. I believe that God is going before America as truly today as he went before Israel of old, with pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night. He is leading America onward and upward, until today our America sits crowned as queen in the congress of nations. Men say God was with Washington and God was with Lincoln. Why should we not say God is with our heroic leaders today? I speak not as a partisan, but as an enthusiastic, although only an adopted, American citizen. Jesus Christ is guiding this whole world into diviner work than ever before in the history of America or in the history of humanity.

The Crown of Salvation

We see upon Christ's brow, also, the Crown of Salvation. I limit the world salvation, for the moment, to our personal Christian experience. I shall not make light of the church. God forbid. I am too much of a churchman for that. The church is the bride of Christ. He came from heaven to woo and win her. I shall not make light of church ordinances. God forbid. They have their place and purpose, although not so great light of church creeds. They have a place and purpose, although no so great a place as some suppose, but still a place. We repeat in our own church service the so-called Apostles' Creed. I am glad there has been eliminated from the form we use the clause about the descent into hades. It ought never to have been introduced, and as speedily as possible it ought to be struck out. It was not included for about 700 years, and no man living can tell how it got into this creed. Its introduction is one of the mysteries and misfortunes of ecclesiastical history. I would not make light of the Nicene Creed, although it is too abstruse and difficult for ordinary use, and its preparation was the result of shameful quarrels on the part of members of the council who acted at times more like ward politicians than like Christian teachers. I am glad I am not obliged to repeat the Athanasian Creed. There are parts of it that doom so many men to eternal perdition that, on my lips at least, those words would be blasphemy. In Christian experience, it is Christ first, Christ last, Christ always. We do not read, "Come unto baptism, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." We do not read, "Come unto the communion for peace and salvation." But Christ said, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest."

A little while ago I was called to visit a dying man. He did not belong to my parish, in any strict sense in which that term may be used; but my parish includes everybody to whom I can be helpful in the providence of God. I saw immediately on entering the room, that he was a very sick man; and the moment his family spoke, I saw I was in a Scotch home. Probably I was called because

Evening Bells

By Anna M. Baker

UPON the air their music rang
Borne lightly on the gentle breeze.
Of peace and rest and hope they sang
O'er mount and vale and grassy leas,
Those evening bells.

Gone was the turmoil of the day,
Its hours of toil, its weary load.
The heart cast all its care away
As o'er the land the music flowed
Of evening bells.

Around the hearth were gathered now
Parent and child in concourse free.
With light of love upon each brow
Greeting with laughter and with glee
Those evening bells.

But silent are those chimes so sweet,
The busy world has passed them by;
No more men pause their song to greet;
In yon lone tower they languish, die,
Those evening bells.

The swelling tides of life go on,
Loud is the city's hum and roar;
Earth's multitudinous paths we con
And in our hearts have room no more
For evening bells.

Their melody the memory fills,
Oh, could we but their loss regain
And hear again across the hills
That ever welcome loved refrain
Of sacred evening bells.

of my name and parentage. The wife went near him and said: "John, the minister is come. Do ye ken him?" But his eyes were lightless and his face expressionless. His daughter then went to him and said: "Faither, do ye ken me? I'm yer ain wee dochter Jeanie." But there was no response. The wife was now filled with peculiar sadness, and going to him again she said: "John, John do ye ken me? John, speak to me, I'm yer ain wee wifey" Still there was no response. Then I went close to him, and in a calm, clear voice, adopting their own method of speech, I said, "John, do ye ken Jesus?" Instantly his face and eyes were illumined with almost heavenly light, and with strength which seemed to be divinely given, he said: "Oh, I ken him weel. He's my ain Saviour." I knelt by his side, took his hand in mine, and prayed. For a time I felt the grasp of his hand in response to my prayers; then his hand was still; and when I had ceased praying, I looked into his face and he was gone. He had gone to see "his ain Saviour" face to face.

That was no time to talk about creeds; that was no time to talk about churches. That was the time to talk about Christ. The older I grow, the shorter and simpler my creed becomes. Not more creed, but more Christ the church needs and the world needs. A Christless pulpit is a powerless pulpit. Christless pews are charmless pews. Let us crown Christ in our studies, in our pleasures, in our homes, and in our business. If a man cannot take Christ into his business, he must have a very bad business, or he must have a very poor religion; probably he has both.

Christ will be crowned with many crowns in heaven. Without Christ heaven itself would be charmless. You have children in heaven; you have parents in heaven. But past the dearest of children, past the best beloved of mothers, you will hasten to cast your joyous crown at his pierced feet. His name will be the sweetest note in your most triumphant song, his presence will give heaven its chief attraction. There you will see him face to face: there you will behold him as "King of kings, and Lord of lords." Your glad and grateful song will resound through heaven's lofty dome: "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God forever and ever."

Higher still will rise the other song which even angels and archangels cannot sing, but which redeemed sinners shall ever chant: "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen."

The Greatest Fraud in the World

There is one fraud that has impoverished every person. No individual has escaped its cleverness.

By Bernard C. Clausen

BRAVE hearts only for this venture. We shall make our way through the gallery of the world's great frauds. We are in search of the greatest fraud of all. Through tragic scenes of credulity and malicious ingenuity we shall go. Only stout hearts can qualify for this expedition. For only a vital faith in mankind can survive the shock of discovery. How cruelly some men can lie, and how easily other men will believe their lies!

There are classic frauds which lift themselves by their sheer audacity above the mists of the centuries. The eighteenth century presents perhaps the most audacious pair of deceptions. Take a glimpse at Cagliostro, the most daring crook of history, who gained his learning in a monastery before he was expelled, who manufactured noble titles for himself and his clever young wife, and traveled Europe in regal state for years, made enormously wealthy by dupes who purchased at colossal prices his "elixir of immortal youth," or his "original device for abolishing the guilt of original sin," or his "secrets of Freemasonry," claiming to be derived from Egyptian documents, and containing among other things an explanation of an absolutely certain method of raising the dead. Turn from this bandit of braggadocio, to that far more subtle and clever crook, John Law, whose vision of fraudulent possibilities encompassed all the world, and whose downfall rocked Europe upon her none too stable foundations, almost accomplishing the utter wreck of modern civilization. Law began by assuming financial responsibility for the entire development of the newly discovered Mississippi valley. His scheme victimized practically every home, rich and poor, on the continent of Europe. His sums became so great and his schemes so stupendous that soon he assumed control of the colonial trade of France in its entirety; he was invited to direct the financial program of the empire; and himself took charge of the issuance of French currency. Then a circumstance pricked the Mississippi bubble, and Law's whole grandiose empire of pretension collapsed, while he blithely fled with all of the remnants, leaving thousands of households penniless and the whole financial structure of his day tottering at the magnitude of his ruin. "What fools those mortals were!" we say.

But we forget that in our own day we can witness as terrible examples of fiendish greed and foolish credulity. A few years ago, a Dr. Frederick Cook announced that he had discovered the North Pole. For a few hours he rode upon the wave of popular acclaim and wore the garlands of admiring nations. Then his credentials were examined, his pseudo-scientific pretensions were submitted to calculation, and it was announced that he was a consummate liar who had deceived the world with one of the cleverest hoaxes in the history of duplicity. Did this experience discourage him? Not for many months. Last year he appeared as one of the outstanding promoters of wild-cat oil-stock gambling in the West. Under his own name, flaunting the record of his North Pole experience with impudent rascality, he invited thousands of innocent, hard-working people to entrust their money to him for unprotected speculation. And he got their money! By the hundreds of thousands of dollars!

Another oil company found a worthless shuffling old man by the name of Robert Lee drifting about in a middle western town, bought from him the right to use his name, granted him the fictitious title of general, and started out in business to manage the oil promotion affairs of "General Robert Lee." Despite the fact that the real General Robert Lee had died in 1870, largely on the attractive fiction of that honored name, thousands of dollars poured into the central office of the company and were wasted by the malevolent schemers.

Fifteen thousand twelve-cent stamps were purchased by one company in one postoffice in Texas to carry that many special delivery letters, made up in the form of fake telegrams to that many innocent men and women in every part of the United States, urging them to immediate response in cash for an oil gamble scheme. The postoffice department, which took over the mail received in response, handled money for months addressed to these fiendish manipulators.

The more you study these schemes, the more surely you are convinced that frauds are the results of amazing, cruel duplicity on the part of the exploiters, and of gullible softness on the part of the investors. Neither one of these discoveries adds to our confidence in what we call human nature.

But we have not yet come to the greatest fraud of all. Stock speculations may have touched many of you, bogus bonds may be reposing in many a strong box; but there is one fraud that has impoverished every person before me. No single individual has escaped its cleverness. Some part of your fortune and mine has gone down into the black abyss of this deception. Every age of history, every country under the sun, has been victimized by its blandishments. It is called by many names in many climes. The Latin-Americans, chief pawns of its duplicity, call it manana. We name it "tomorrow." Conceived by the cruelest cleverness of Satan's darkness, deceiving a gullibility which seems unable to learn its lesson by experience, it makes its trail of tragedy down the records of men's lives. The greatest fraud in the world is "tomorrow."

It is aided in its evil machinations by a philosophic and scientific confusion about the idea of time which is at its worst just now. Time is one of the most baffling concepts in all our thinking. What is time? Where is it? Einstein and his bewildering theory of relativity represent a scientific attempt to conquer the confusion of time. A new dimension of thought seems to be in the making. How does time affect our calculation? Observing things for so short a period at best, can we be certain about the truth of anything? Where is tomorrow before it is today? What happens to today when it becomes yesterday? What are the past, and the present and the future?

This confusion finds its latest and most interesting fiction expression in a delightful logging-camp story published in a recent Atlantic Monthly. A little boy-favorite of the loggers was taken sick, and the doctor who was called left him with the assurance that he would be better tomorrow. But the lad was disappointed to find that he did not grow better at all. For he could not catch up with tomorrow. By the time he captured it, it had become today.

One of the boss-loggers finally offered to hitch his team of oxen on to tomorrow and drag it by main force into today. After much trouble, he succeeded in this and the little boy promptly recovered. But some one suggested the fearful consequences sure to ensue when the world rolled into tomorrow and found that there is no tomorrow there. All kinds of destruction were predicted, but the expected difficulty did not develop because it happened to be leap-year and there was an extra day in the calendar just waiting to be used for some such emergency as this!

It is such bewilderment about the exact nature of time which helps the cruel deception practiced by tomorrow. We are not sure enough about the elements with which we are dealing to be able to refute tomorrow's lies. And merely as masterpieces of lying, they are immensely clever.

Tomorrow has succeeded as the greatest fraud of all by a very subtle deception. Its scheme is to extend a general invitation to all good, and to put up the bars against all evil. It seems like such a reasonable thing to do. But consider its dastardly effect. When we are hesitating about doing some fine thing, we hear a voice saying, "There will be plenty of time for that tomorrow." When we pause before an evil lure, we hear the whispered words, "Now is the time for that! You can make up for it tomorrow!" If we yield, we are lost.

For there is one trouble about tomorrow. It never, never comes. The fine brave things which we consign to tomorrow are lost in the abyss of ruin. "No loving word was ever spoken, no good deed ever done, tomorrow" said Maltbie D. Babcock. Shakespeare put it in immortal words when he wrote,

"That we would do,
We should do when we would; for this 'would' changes
And hath abatements and delays as many
As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents."

It finds its way to us in a modern jingle of rhyme like this,

"O, my dear friends, remember,
That true as the stars in the sky
The little streets of tomorrow,
Pretty-soon and By-and-by,
Lead one and all
As straight they say
As the King's Highway,
To the city of Not-at-all."

What then shall we do for tomorrow? If tomorrow never comes, what shall we dare place in its keeping? The answer is simple. The evil impulses, the beastly lusts, the hates and angers, these need not be fought head-on so long as they can be successfully postponed. No evil was ever done which was successfully consigned all the way to its proper destination in tomorrow. This is the strategy of success. If you intend to do a mean thing, wait till tomorrow; if you are to do a noble thing, do it now, NOW! The malevolent fiendishness of the greatest fraud in the world is obvious when we watch men everywhere hurrying to do the base things at once, while they confidently postpone to the oblivion of tomorrow the finest impulses of their lives.

On one occasion, when Dr. H. J. Montgomery was warning his people of the danger of procrastination, a man in the crowd shouted out, "What about the thief on the cross?" The preacher at once replied "Which thief?" but there was no answer. Which thief? There were two thieves, and one of them was ruined by believing tomorrow's vicious lies.

A Total Wreck

BY CHARLES B. TENNY

YOKOHAMA is still no fit place for human beings to live, though up near the Mary Colby School living is somewhat normal but the food supply is still somewhat deficient. At the city office they say there is practically no hope that city water will reach the school this year. This will help you to see how much worse Yokohama fared than Tokyo, as here we have had city water for three weeks and in our section began to have gas yesterday.

Principal Sakata gave a detailed report of the loss of the Mabie Memorial School. Except for seven typewriters that students and a servant saved, the school was a total loss—buildings, furnishings, library, scientific apparatus and specimens, everything. In addition Professor Ohashi and a clerk, by the name of Kaneko, were killed by the falling of the buildings. These two were on duty in the regular order of service designated by the principal, it being his policy to have one teacher and one clerk on the ground every day, in school time and in vacation time. In addition, Professor Sasaki (formerly Mr. Yuza), went to the building about a half hour before the disaster, presumably in connection with his duties as librarian and was also killed. Dean Takata was in the library in the second story; at the first shock the gable above him fell outwards and he jumped from the window and escaped with only injury to his feet where he struck on the fallen concrete. Mr. Taguchi, assistant treasurer, had just returned from the bank with about 700 yen with which to pay some bills. This he put safely away (but it was burned) and went with a science teacher and a cabinet maker to the ground (basement) floor to inspect the new cabinets just finished. They were there when the collapse came, but escaped as if by miracle, crawling out through a small opening the earthquake left in the ruin. Had the disaster come a few days later when the school was in session, it would have meant the death of practically the entire staff and probably most of the students. Some of the latter might have been out with the gym teacher; otherwise practically all would have perished. Every room used for regular class work collapsed at once. You will note with interest that a great factory of the Western Electric, also of reinforced concrete construction collapsed, as did a big public market of like material. While many buildings of that construction escaped, especially in Tokyo, those in other places could not stand the strain. It seems plain that there were waves of greater and of lesser intensity. The Mabie Memorial was built on a spot that had a wave of great intensity. The new Yokohama church and the Tabernacle both stand, though both were gutted by the fire which was of most intense ferocity.

Of the staff, the following lost everything in the fire: Gressitt, Fisher, Covell, Topping, Taguchi, Kikuchi, Sakuma, Ishikawa, Nakai, and Egari; also Tsukamoto, the servant who was in charge of the building, and a boy clerk, Ode by name, who survived. The students numbered 546 at the time. Of these three are known to have been killed, thirty are not yet heard from so we do not know whether they are alive or dead; twenty-nine families had death in the family circle, in some cases two or more of the family perishing; 192 of the boys are known to have been burned out of home, and the houses of 117 other families have not yet been reported on, but presumably the major part of them were burned, as barely a fringe of Yokohama remains. In spite of these desperate conditions, at the opening gathering of the school, Oct. 1, when plans for the future were announced, 320 students reported! A few of these will not be able to continue in school, but it seems clear that we shall still have a school of 300 or over. To me, after walking over the

The Unfinished Task

Armistice Day Address Delivered at Arlington Amphitheatre

By Bishop William Frazer McDowell

IN Thomas Hardy's novel "Jude the Obscure" there is a vivid picture of young Jude standing at twilight on the hilltop of Wessex looking toward Oxford where the lights were beginning to show. And as he looked the meaning of that fair town became vivid to him.

"It is a city of light," he said to himself.

"The tree of knowledge grows there," he added a few steps farther on.

"It is a place that teachers of men spring from and go to."

"It is what you might call a castle, manned by scholarship and religion."

After this figure he was silent for a long while, till he added: "It would just suit me."

The story takes us straight into the heart and spirit of the grey-walled, ivied town, and the vision is good. One wonders whether an American youth standing here on this sacred hill, looking yonder, beyond the winding river, to the noble city, the lustrous monuments, the radiant and perfect capitol, would so accurately interpret, so clearly see, the spirit of America, and so confidently say: "It would just suit me." Always it is the spirit that counts. The inner meaning of institution or state is more important than the form of either. The things seen are the temporal things, the things unseen are the eternal ones. It is the spirit of anything that quickens and keeps it alive. The high task of the prophet and the poet is always "to keep the soul of the world alive." If this be dead, all is well lost.

Testing a Nation's Soul

We come today with holy memories and with very solemn hearts to make sober assessment of our spirit, not seting anything down either in boastfulness, or in sharpness. We are not yet wholly out from one of those crises in our life which are said to try men's souls, as though this were only done once in a while. But we all too easily forget that the testing of a nation's spirit, the trying of its soul is always going on; going on when swift and tragic test is put upon it, and going on in the dull, unexciting days that we call ordinary.

The spirit of a people is clearly seen in the way its supreme emergencies and trials are met. The unusual strain often breaks the man or the nation. The structure of the soul will carry the ordinary burden of the ordinary traffic, but will break under the extraordinary weight that must some day be put upon it. Now in the memory of many of us the soul of the nation has been put to the emergency test more than once. We have had to see what stuff we were made of, whether we were of iron or of wood painted to resemble iron, whether the proud figure of our national life was made of true metal clear through or mixed somewhere in its feet or its heart with clay. I suppose God is always trying to make a people that can be struck anywhere and not be easily broken, whether struck in the feet or the head or the heart. History is full of such extra testings of national life. Under them many a people has broken, broken all too often because of a structural weakness and imperfection in the life itself. With other nations we have recently been put through such a crucible, under such a burden, or tried as by such a fire. We were buying and selling, gaining and losing, working and playing; "the oxen were ploughing and the asses grazing near them" and our "sons and daughters were eating and drinking" when "a great wind came from across the wilderness and struck the four corners of the house" at once. It was all so sudden, so overwhelming, so unlooked for, so uncalled for that even now we are not quite sure that it actually happened. In its swiftness, its awfulness, its resistlessness, it was like those earthquakes and fire that struck San Francisco the other year and Japan the other day.

But the supreme question in Europe, in America and Japan is not whether the buildings stood, or the banks broke, or the railroads gave way, or even whether the earth shook and the mountains trembled. The far deeper question is the question whether the people fail in the heart and soul of them in a crisis they were not looking for. Men can prepare for things they can foresee and meet them with determined force and resistance. But the supreme emergencies cannot be foreseen. They must be met with the spirit that is ready not because of special preparation for a crisis but by reason of general and adequate readiness for anything. A nation that breaks in its courage offers only a sorry excuse when it pleads that it was not looking for what had come, and had not specially prepared to be brave.

Did we and other peoples meet the emergency test of the World War with those high qualities of faith, truth, honor, courage, endurance, idealism, integrity, unselfishness and nobility that prove a nation's health and soundness? When we were struck, without getting ready to be struck or choosing how or where the blow should fall upon us, did we ring absolutely true everywhere? The war brought out, as war always does, the best that was in us. War created, as war often does, qualities and spirit that glorify their possessors. The war revealed spirit and attitudes that men thought were dead among us. White angels of courage and heroism, of sacrifice and endurance, rose from unexpected places, and shamed all our meanness and unworthiness with their pure splendor. There were things seen here and elsewhere as fine as ever were seen or sung on land or sea. Nothing more splendid was seen at Marathon or Thermopylae, Waterloo or Gettysburg, Salamis, Trafalgar or Santiago. In perfectly glorious measure we met the spiritual test and the manhood strain. And that we did not fail, let us thank our God today.

What War Shows Up

But the war revealed as war always does, as great crises always do, weak spots in our spirit that threatened our life as they always do. The balance was on the right side and the balance saved us. But we were not wholly heroic, not wholly unselfish, not wholly free from clay, not wholly devoted to the things that are true, honorable, just, pure, lovely and of good report. Greed stuck its ugly head into war finance at too many places. The profiteer and the grafter dragged their slimy lengths through our lives and the lives of other nations. Personal advantage seemed to some much more important than public welfare. Most of the story is so glorious that it is beyond our power to tell it. Part of it is so unworthy that we wonder it could have existed and do not want to tell it. But while the story is still fresh and while we are acutely aware of the spiritual weaknesses that the war disclosed, those it even caused and created, we should think of them as they are. They were not good for us. They did not help us when our life was critically at stake. They would have destroyed us but for the better qualities in our life. They are not good for us now. They do not help us now. They will destroy us unless they are themselves destroyed.

For the nation's spirit is not tested, is not important only in times of overwhelming crisis. The days of a war are inspiring and heroic in their appeal and influence. The drums are beating, the flags are flying, the young men are marching. We fling petty fears and little prudences to the winds. The days after a war lack the heroic and dramatic tone. Life settles down, and in that settling down of life there is all too often a sag of idealism, a letting down of tone, a moral slackening and a spiritual reaction that make bad days for men and nations. Having gone through our baptism of endeavor and even fire we all too easily suffer spiritual recessions and depressions. We keep the faith as Horatius kept the bridge when the enemy is visible and threatening, but we all too readily lapse back into ordinariness of aspiration, into complacency of soul when the glory of the conflict has passed. We too easily become "lazy, luxuriant and decadent." While the war is on, we repeat John MacRae's flaming words from Flander's Field and proudly send our sons that we and they may keep faith with those who fall. But keeping faith means continuing to keep it to the end, in the dull, drab days after war, that the shadow of sordidness may not then fall upon them. The spirit of the nation is tested and shown not alone by its response to the sudden and extraordinary demands made by a crisis. We do not expect it to flinch or fail them.

But idealism so often fails in the long pull, in the patient and creative endurance to the end, in the days that show no heroism but only toil and effort. That is the test that is upon us now. We submit to discipline in an emergency, but rebel against discipline when the crisis seems past. We make one grand fling of heroism when the war is on and then scorn the patience of heroism involved in daily fidelity and continued sacrifice. We are noble in emergency and commonplace in routine when the day of routine has come. We are tested, are being tested this November day, as to whether we can hold on no matter how long it takes or how hard it is for us to endure. We would be quick to answer an urgent call but lack the patience to keep on with a permanent duty. Paraphrasing and adapting some words spoken to us during the war by Sir George Adam Smith of Scotland, we would reject the grosser vices of spirit that are so conspicuous, but be easy toward the sins of neglect and indolence that are so fatal. We brace ourselves against the sins of violent passion and excess, and then fail to watch even for one hour, allow our talents to rust and destroy ourselves through small unfaithfulness and perish by the sins of the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin. We forget our exalted moments when we would have followed the gleam anywhere, and we lapse back into mediocrity and a deadly average both of expectation and devotion. We were ready to pay any price to win the war. We counted not our lives dear to ourselves when that crisis was on. "Proudly we stood up" before the world. "Our hearts within us did not fail." Around us here this afternoon are the silent witnesses to the spirit we had when "we firmly made our choice for freedom's brotherhood," when we bravely "chose that the flesh should die, and not the living soul."

That was the test of the nation's spirit then, now being tested in other and severer ways. Can we now and can we steadily, unflinchingly, unselfishly, heroically and for any length of years and through any welter of discouragements prove ourselves fit and worthy to be God's best and final instrument, even, if need be, his only instrument for international idealism and righteousness? Will the spirit of America be strong and true now, when all the evil forces are rampant again in new and hideous ways, strong and true not for a day or a decade but for as long as humanity is in agony and God in need of our help? As we solemnly appraise our place in the world and our spirit toward ourselves and the world do we not see that it is not enough for us to have blazed up once in glory and brightness? We must keep the light aflame no matter how long or how dark the night, or how many other lights are blown out by the gusts of the world. We once put our hands to the plough. No nation that does that and turns back or looks back is fit for the kingdom of democracy. We must have the spirit that will plough the furrow of freedom, righteousness and peace right around the world. In our patience we must possess our souls, for in our patience we shall win our souls.

Here in this sacred place, on this hallowed day, we seem to be surrounded by the great cloud of witnesses who have run their part of the race we are still running. Some of those who press upon us here received the palm after the dust of a long race. Some of them were young with eternal youth. They fell looking for a better world, for which they fought and died. Out of weakness they were made strong and waxed valiant in fight. They press around and upon us today. In their presence we test the spirit of the nation, their nation, our nation, the nation of the Lord God Almighty for the world. Will it rise to supreme occasion and meet nobly the supreme emergencies of today and tomorrow? Will it "carry on," without flinching or faltering, and never grow weary until by endurance and patience it has won its soul?

Those who sleep were brave unto death. Their struggle is over but their task is unfinished.

"Hark the roar grows . . . the thunders reawaken—
We ask one thing, Lord, only one thing now:
Hearts high as theirs who went to death unshaken,
Courage like theirs to make and keep their vow."

Solving a Big Problem

By E. T. Tomlinson

"GOOD MORNING, you are just in time to help me with the morning mail."

The visitor smiled as he responded to the greeting and said, glancing at the mass of letters awaiting consideration, "Your correspondence does not look as if you would be glad to see any one."

"We are always glad to see our friends. You shall go through these letters with me, though I shall not let you see any names."

"I am interested," said the visitor eagerly. "This will give me a better idea of what you are doing than I could obtain in any other way."

"Here are letters concerning beneficiary grants. The first is from the friend of a young minister. He educated himself and has given promise of great usefulness. After only seven years of work he is stricken with tuberculosis. His wife is doing her utmost to help support herself and three little children, while we are caring for the man at Saranac Lake, hoping that he may be able to go back to his field.

"Here is another from an aged minister who as a pastor has been deeply loved. He is now eighty-three years of age. He and his wife by the utmost frugality saved a little money to provide for themselves when they could no longer work. He received bad advice and all his savings were lost."

"Poor man," said the visitor. "And after all these years of service! The denomination certainly ought to do something. Will you make him a grant?"

"Unquestionably, after his record has been verified and his state committee on cooperation has approved his application. These are formal matters, but nevertheless they are necessary. Here is a letter which will interest you—'When on my back in the hospital, your draft came with its help and cheer. Say, didn't that look good when I faced my hospital bill! Thank you for your promptness and help.' Here is another one of the same kind: 'Only for this grant I do not see how we could make it through the winter. A good man takes me out Sunday afternoons to the county farm and I speak to the poor old men there. It is a great pleasure to me to know that I too am helping the needy ones.' Here is still another, 'I want to thank you for the very kind letter informing me of the cordial and unanimous vote to make me a grant. My husband and I were tithe-givers over thirty years. We are now keeping it up and intend to do so.'"

"Do you mean to say that those people intend to give back 10 per cent of their little grant?"

"They will give it to the general benevolence of the denomination," said the secretary. "We find many who are doing that."

"How many beneficiaries have you?"

"1,543."

"Have you money enough to make grants to so many?"

"The grants must be small and indeed they are pitifully small. The board is not able to assume the full support of any one. The best it can do is to help in such support. When you think of 1,543 beneficiaries, even a modest grant of $25 per month soon mounts to a very large sum. $300 per year is the income at 5 per cent of $6,000. Then too we have our other work to care for and just now that is taking much thought and time. Listen to this letter from California: 'I thank you very much for the grant and I thank our dear Lord for all the good things that have always come my way. The fund of the board is like the waters which come back just in time after many days.' Here is another one from Iowa that will interest you, 'If only those with whom our Heavenly Father has entrusted his money could have a vision of what these grants mean to the widow of a minister I am sure they would feel amply repaid for what they have put into the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board. May we all be faithful stewards, is my earnest prayer.'"

"Where do the most of your beneficiaries come from?"

"From all the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention."

"Still, some states must receive more than others."

"Naturally, some states have many more churches and ministers than others. New York state naturally leads and then come California and Pennsylvania, with other states close behind. Some of our men represent the old pioneer preachers; some are helpless. Here for example is one of our worthy men who is now totally blind. The neighbors found him at eleven o'clock in the morning still in bed because he was unable to dress himself and there was no fire. His wife had gone out to do washing."

"It's a shame!"

1543 Beneficiaries

"Of course it is, but the denomination is doing its best to set matters right. Think of 1,543 already on our beneficiary list and the number increasing steadily. And we have forty-nine to present at the next meeting of our board.'

"You have a great problem."

"Yes, it is like trying to make seven go into five and then have something left over. However, what the board is doing now is much more than was possible ten years ago and the pitiful part of it is that we so frequently receive a letter, 'If some one needs this more than I, consider my grant in that light.'"

"This is correspondence concerning the Retiring Pension Fund," said the secretary as he took up the first letter in another pile. "You know an important feature of the work of the board is cooperating with our ministers in providing retiring pensions that will be larger than otherwise they could be."

"Are you receiving many applications for membership?"

"Many, and the number is steadily increasing. We shall present over a hundred names for approval at the next meeting of the board. Some of these letters run very much alike, for naturally the questions that arise are similar. Listen to some of these questions, 'What will you give me if I retire?'"

The visitor smiled as he said, "What is your answer?"

"We shall make no promises. We certainly are not trying to induce men to retire early from active service. When, however, they are compelled to retire above the age of sixty-five then their cooperative pensions at once begin. 'Do I pay this year?' is another question. We tell this man that he pays his dues every year up to the age of sixty-five. 'How will this pension affect my wife?' We answer that it ought to affect her most agreeably. The object of the board is to provide an income. A joint pension is continued to the widow as long as she lives. 'Must I retire at age sixty-five?' this man writes. We answer 'No! No! No! Your cooperative pension begins at sixty-five, but we hope it will be long before you are compelled to give up the active work.' The most common question is 'Just how large will my pension be?' We are compelled to answer that 'we cannot tell until you are sixty-five, inasmuch as the salary is reported each year and the pension is one-half the average salary during membership.' Another frequent question is, 'Suppose I die before I am sixty-five and have paid my dues for a number of years, what then?' We explain to these men that every dollar the minister or his church has paid in, all the annual allotments of the board to reduce his payments, and compound interest at 4 per cent stand to his credit. This never comes back to the board, which is not a money-making institution, but is trying in every way to help the minister."

There is a brief interruption when a good woman, known and loved throughout the denomination, enters the office. The visitor retires for a moment when he perceives that her visit is personal. After a brief conversation the new visitor explains that instead of making a will she wishes to have an annuity bond or gift agreement so that during her lifetime she will receive the interest and at her decease she would like to have the money put into the permanent fund and the income used by the board forever. In a business-like manner she states the facts, writes her check and the bond is made out and presented to her, all in less than five minutes.

When the former visitor returns to the office, he says, "What is the amount of your total assets?"

"We have $10,000,000."

"Whew! It's a big job to raise $10,000,000 in ten years."

The Perplexing Problem

"Yes, if any one does not think so, let him try it! But hard as that task is, I sometimes think it is not so hard as the administration of the fund. We have a few perplexing and troublesome cases. The grave problem is how to use the money in a just and generous manner among so many when each grant must be necessarily small."

"How much do you think you ought to have in your permanent funds?"

"At least $25,000,000. The Methodists, who have been working longer than we at this problem, now have $17,000,000 in their fund and hope soon to increase the amount very materially. The Presbyterians have about $9,000,000 and they have voted to increase the fund to $25,000,000. They have been at work many years and their experience is of value to the newer boards."

The postman by this time has returned and left his second batch of mail. The first letter read is from a church in Ohio which makes an annual gift for the work of the board.

"Are there many churches like that?" inquires the visitor.

"Yes, the interest today is greater in this work throughout the denomination than it has ever been. All seem to realize the justice of the plea to provide for the old soldiers of the cross."

An Announcement

THE publicity department of the General Board of Promotion takes pleasure in announcing that out of the large number of poster suggestions that had been received from all parts of the country, there were two of such superior merit as to justify their being selected as the posters for the promotional campaign of the year.

The first is entitled, "We Can Finish It" and was submitted by Stanley G. Swanberg of 110 Fifth St., Wilmette, Ill., and the second entitled, "He Finished His Task" was submitted by Miss Marcia H. Fadmer of 485 Forrest Ave., Fond du Lac, Wis. Both are now in process of printing and copies will be distributed to all the churches in the Northern Baptist Convention.

To the fifty or more contestants who submitted suggestions and sketches, the publicity department extends its grateful appreciation. Many were unusually excellent, and it was deeply regretted that it was not possible to use more than two.

Encouraged by this response to an invitation for suggestions, the publicity department now wishes to announce that it is prepared to receive suggestions for display advertising. Readers of our denominational papers have doubtless noticed the advertisements appearing from time to time and as an extensive advertising campaign is being projected for the closing months of the New World Movement period, there is opportunity for receiving suggestions for this campaign. These should be related to the financial needs of the year, the necessity for a successful closing of the New World Movement program, the opportunities and needs confronted by all the participating organizations, stewardship and other phases of our common denominational task.

All suggestions that are used and published in the denominational papers will carry at the bottom the name of the person submitting it. The contest is open to any member of the Northern Baptist Convention and suggestions should be mailed to William B. Lipphard, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, on or before Dec. 1, 1923.

"They ought to care for them," remarked the visitor. "It is a shame they haven't been cared for before."

"Let's forget the years that are behind and be glad for what we now have. The future is brighter, for many of our people are remembering the work of the board in their wills, or are taking out annuity bonds or making direct gifts to the board or sending their money through the board of promotion. Excuse me a moment," said the secretary as the telephone on his desk rang. A brief conversation over the 'phone followed and then the secretary explains that a lawyer has called him up to know the exact corporate title of the board. "He is drawing a will and he wishes every item to be correct. And I had to explain too that the board was incorporated in New York state in 1913. It is surprising how many good people in drawing their wills do not know how essential accuracy in these matters is."

As the visitor explains that he must be going he said, "I had no conception before of what the work of this board is."

"You have only a slight one now," answered the secretary with a smile. "You have just seen a small cross-section. Come in again and I will let you see some more. Before you go, I want you to take with you the words from this letter. 'Some people say there is no unselfish motive in the world; all is an eye for an eye. Well, they don't know our M & M Board!' Also this from the Middle West—'I'm greatly cheered over the receipt of your letter informing me so promptly that a grant has been made. We shall escape many of the deprivations we suffered last winter when I was in constant distress and my wife's health was declining and a rigid winter increased our need of proper clothing, which we did not have. If you only knew how much your letter has helped us, I am sure you would rejoice with us.'"

"I'm going to tell our pastor that our church must do more for this work," said the visitor. "When is the best time?"

"Thanksgiving!" answered the secretary, "That's when a good many of our churches are planning to remember the board."

"The Searchlight," the personal organ of Rev. Frank J. Norris of Fort Worth, Tex., sets forth what it claims to be "a basis of settlement of troubles among Texas Baptists that will bring about peace and harmony." They are, first, for the convention at Galveston to declare for the wide open policy. All proceedings and records of investigations of schools and other denominational enterprises be open to anybody who wishes to see them. It suggests that the convention name, specify and repudiate the report that appeared in the minutes of the last annual meeting which declares the first three chapters of Genesis to be "allegorical and figurative." President Brooks and his professors are to "sign" such repudiation. The professors of all Baptist schools are to "sign" the resolution against evolution, and again all Baptist schools are to be placed under the control of the Baptist convention and their professors are to "sign" the New Hampshire confession of faith. He says that unless these conditions are complied with "such a war as has never been witnessed among any people will be waged for many years to come." This really looks serious! Will "signing" this resolution and that resolution and this confession and that confession "bring about peace and harmony?" That remains to be seen. We have an old-fashioned notion that there is something more fundamental necessary than "signing" these documents. Why not try religion?

At the thirty-first commemorative chapel service held at the University of Chicago, Pres. Ernest D. Burton recalled how he had heard the first president of the university, William Rainey Harper, say that on the morning of Oct. 1, 1892, he sat in his office and wondered if there would be any students. Numbers were a matter of life and death. As an actual fact there were 510 students registered the first day and during the first year 744. In the year 1922-23 there were 12,745 students. In the first year the faculty numbered ninety-two; last year 405. In 1892 there were four buildings; in 1923, forty-four. The total property of the university in 1892 was $3,171,566; while on June 30 of this year it was $51,336,735.

The "Biblical Recorder," commenting on the problem which has been raised for the Roman Catholics by the radio, says: "Ever since the Reformation, Protestantism has been trying to reach the ear of the masses living under the iron rule of Rome. They have tried open air meetings, religious debates, tracts and private appeals. Books are burned; meetings are dispersed and deaf ears turn to every appeal. Science steps in and does what the Protestant church has never done. It has outwitted the priests and by appealing to the natural love of the novel, it is reaching the ear of the masses and slowly undermining the belief in the infallibility of the church." It should not be forgotten that false teachers also use the radio.

Channing Pollock, author of the phenomenal play, "The Fool," addressed the Chicago Baptist Ministers at their meeting on Monday, Nov. 12. He told how the play came to be written and the difficulties through which it was produced. After reading the Bible for the first time in his life Mr. Pollock was captured by a passion to write and produce a play based upon the idea of a man starting out deliberately to live as Jesus taught. The play was scorned by every producer for more than four years. But when finally put on in New York through the patronage largely at first of non-theater-going people the play became a record-breaking success. Mr. Pollock frankly stated that he had given up writing plays that pander to depraved taste, and that his passion now is to redeem the stage and make it what it was originally intended to be the servant of art, idealism, and decency.

Dr. J. S. Kirtley in his work as acting pastor is now with the Church of the Master, Cleveland, Ohio. No man in the denomination is more acceptable in work of this kind.

Shall a minister's life be insured by his church for the benefit of his church? The Baptist Temple congregation of Rochester, N. Y., in projecting its ten story combination office building and church has answered this question by taking out a fifteen-year policy for $100,000 on the life of the pastor, Clinton Wunder. He's a wonder.

Dec. 2 is International Golden Rule Sunday. It is hoped that churches and individual groups will arrange for suitable observance of this day by each family sacrificing the price of a whole meal or part of a meal and sending the amounts saved to the International Near East Association for the benefit of thousands of innocent little orphans and for the promotion of a new era of love and forgiveness and unselfish service in the whole world.

The largest check ever received by Linfield College and one of the largest ever passed through the local banks of McMinnville, Ore., was the check of the General Education Board of $88,652,74 given to Linfield College in part payment of the $200,000 pledge of the board to that college. This indicates that Linfield College has received from other scources twice as much as the amount of this check. We are glad to note the progress of Christian education among the Baptists of Oregon.

With the arrival of Dr. Franklin Chambers McLean, the newly elected professor of medicine at the University of Chicago, to take part in the work of organizing the medical school at the university, the great medical program of the University of Chicago is begun. Doctor McLean is an alumnus of the University of Chicago and of Rush Medical College, and has had the remarkable experience of organizing the great Peking Union Medical College, upon whose buildings and equipment $9,000,000 gold have already been expended. Doctor McLean will immediately engage with other members of the medical faculty at the university in the planning of the medical buildings and the organization of the medical faculty.

In a recent address to students President Ernest DeWitt Burton, of the University of Chicago, said that the university will stand among other things for scholarship, and he reminded them what scholarship is—"It is not pedantry. It is not dry-as-dust facts. It is primarily an attitude and secondarily an achievement. It is an interest in knowing things, a desire for truth, an insatiable curiosity not about the trivial and the unimportant but about the great things of the world and of human life. As an achievement, it is the acquisition of knowledge, and still more, a confirmed attitude of open-mindedness toward truth and acceptance of it."

International Lesson for December 9

THE OUTREACH OF THE EARLY CHURCH

Lesson Text: Acts 8:1 to 15:35
Golden Text: Acts 1:8

The outreach of the early church was due to pressure from the outside and to impulsion from the inside. It was therefore a gradual outreach because the pressure was largely local and the impulsion was due to a growing conviction that the gospel should not be confined to any one race or nation.

Outer Pressure

The pressure began in the reaction of the Sadducees who were in power when the church began to make itself felt in Jerusalem. It was at first a doctrinal difference with regard to the resurrection which the sect of the Sadducees denied and which the apostles preached (Acts 4:1-2). Then it developed into an attempt to stop the entire movement because it was gathering momentum each day (Acts 5:24). This attempt issued in the martyrdom of Stephen and in the commission of Saul of Tarsus (Acts 7-9). There was but one thing to do under the circumstances and that was for the believers in Christ to get out of Jerusalem; therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere they could go preaching the word. "It's an ill wind blows nobody good." The wind of persecution in this case carried the seeds of the gospel to Samaria and as far north as Damascus. Had the persecution not arisen, had Saul not been committed to it, the early church might have become another Jewish sect. The church has always prospered on persecution. Prosperity and ease are always foes of progress, and this is especially true of the church which was born out of the travail of Gethsemane and the cross. A heroic institution like the church must be militant without being belligerent. In its outreach the early church is a model of militancy and modesty. The disciples contended for the faith by proclaiming it and living it. The pressure from the outside never made them bitter. They could suffer but they would not threaten. It is this spirit which must always actuate missionary activity and organization, because it is this spirit the world needs, and never more than today.

Inner Impulsion

Outer pressure was measured by a growing inner conviction on the part of the church that Gentiles must also be included in the blessings and privileges of the gospel. This appears first in Philip's mission in Samaria, and later in Peter's vision and visit to Cornelius in Caesarea. Peter with all his background of association with Jesus for three years and with his baptism in the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost was a dull and obstinate pupil. He was reactionary in the extreme, all the circumstances considered. "Not so, Lord, I have never done it this way," was in effect his answer to the divine vision. He had to be shown by evidences corroborating his vision before he would move a step in the direction of bringing the uncircumcized into fellowship with Christ. But once convinced that he was wrong he confessed in a noble and manly manner in words that ring with the democratic spirit, "God had showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean." Peter never quite got over his aristocratic notions, but he went a long distance toward common brotherhood when he spoke in the home of an uncircumcized Roman soldier.

The real beginning of the missionary outreach of the early church lies in the conversion of Saul and the vision of his mission (Acts 26:15-19). Paul needed no outer pressure to urge him forth to the great missionary task. The conviction of his missionary responsibility was a fire in his bones. "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," meant not only the content of his preaching but in a very vital sense the necessity of giving the message to the people who needed it most. For this he fought his battle with the active and insidious Judaizers insisting with a strength of conviction misunderstood until the issues involved are appreciated and dynamic and never to be confused with legal regulations or sacramentarian forms. This is the contention in his letter to the Galatians.

The real "Acts of the Apostle" closes with the twelfth chapter and thereafter it is the acts of Paul. Luke caught the fine missionary passion of Paul, and his gospel is fragrant with it and the Acts is beautiful with it. Antioch, and not Jerusalem, is the missionary capital. Jesus was compelled to do his great work in Galilee because Jerusalem was so official, hide-bound and intolerant, and Paul for the same reasons went out from the church in Antioch in Syria to the great missionary task that made the shores of the Mediterranean Sea blossom with the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley. The outreach of the early church is the unfailing inspiration for the church in all ages of its history. We may have improved on its primitive methods, but we shall never improve on the passion that made Paul and his co-workers the outstanding missionaries of the early church.

What Is Religious Education?

By John L. Rae

For example, to return to Johnny again, he is taken out of his natural sphere on Sunday and injected into a world wholly unlike the world which he lives in on Monday; the Bible is taught in such a way that it is wholly unlike any book with which he is acquainted; and the religion which he is asked to accept is so mysterious and unnatural that the only way in which he can accept it is to become unnatural himself. If he were taught religion as naturally and reasonably as he is taught mathematics, history, science and literature, and shown that religious education is inseparably bound up with his whole life and with his life as a whole, the great gulf that now separates his secular from his religious life would not exist.

The third reason for the importance of religious education is that religious education is as growing a thing as life itself. This follows from one and two. If religious education is concerned with life itself and if life is a unity which develops with training, then it follows that religious education must be a growing thing if it is to meet the needs of growing life. Too often religious education is a static process of going over the same old ground in the same old way. If we knew the Bible as we ought to know it we should discover that the Bible itself is the record of growing life—first the blade, then the ear and then the full corn in the ear. The New Testament is the full corn in the ear, while the Old Testament was not intended to be a static thing—it was intended to make seed of the full corn in the ear and thus bring life to the whole world. Religious education must be as progressive as life is, and the fatal mistake of lip homage to mere words in the form of catechism or creed must be assiduously avoided.

How May Religious Education Be Improved?

First, there are the materials of education—the class rooms, blackboard, maps, pictures, hymn books, text books, and other equipment necessary in any well regulated educational institution. I name these materials first because they are the least important of the three elements needed in religious education. And yet they are important. However, in most Sunday schools these material things can be had for the asking.

The Chimney Corner

A Thanksgiving with a Chestnut in It

IN every family with two daughters named Submit and Dorcas there should also be a daughter named Araminta, since, by the very frivolity of her name she may furnish a delightful balance for the staidness of her sisters. Such was Minty: although a college career, which might so easily have added mere frills and fancies, had topped off her giddiness with a late-flowering New England conscience; so that she had merged with an enormous desire to correct the entire world beginning (like charity) at home. To her tame and dove-like sisters it was like sheltering a volcano: one never knew . . . one never knew . .

But nothing had been quite so shocking as her present outburst: "Oh bah! it's Thanksgiving with a chestnut in it—that's all it amounts to. Talk about twice-told tales! What about twentieth-repetition meals? Why, I've gorged on that same old over-stuffed turkey all my days! I've had that same dull over-stuffed drowsy complacency every Thanksgiving afternoon—is that to be the height of our national day of rejoicing? To be unbendable in the middle? We're an inspiring sight, the three of us, pitching into a big fat turkey, with half the town starving for a square meal."

"There's the Salvation Army dinner for the poor," Submit explained triumphantly, for all the world as if she had suitably attended to the feeding of this hungry horde herself.

"Oh lovely! lovely!" snorted the indignant young firebrand. "A dinner in a chip basket—there's hospitality for you! Two more cranberries tucked in for large families, one less onion for small ones. That's my idea of spreading the thanksgiving spirit, personally—an onion in a chip basket!"

Dorcas abominated sarcasm: "Well, you wild young thing, we'll do something more human, won't we, Submit?—if Araminta can suggest anything."

"Suggest anything? But there are a dozen gorgeous, human, adorable plans waiting to be tried out!"

Dorcas pinned her to it: "Just write them down, darling, here's pencil and paper. You write them, put them in a hat, shake them, and we'll try out one of your gorgeous, human, adorable plans this year, indeed we will!"

Araminta executed a war dance: "I didn't think you had it in you!" she gasped, and wrote rapidly for the space of half an hour; then deposited her slips in an old hat, shook them, and waited with bated breath as the drawing took place. The old dears, would they dare?

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

It was, of course, sheer luck that the particular scheme came out which had been the last to go in, and therefore not the dearest to her heart. Nevertheless, to a New England conscience a pledge is a pledge, and she noted the scandalized expressions on the two faces as they read the astonishing suggestions: "Every day there come to our doors (front, back, and side, darlings, so that you can't quibble over that little detail!) a little band of agents. Who are they? Nobody knows. Where do they go from here? Nobody cares. What sort of meals do they get traipsing north, south, east and west, all over the map? Nobody worries. Therefore, sweet sisters, we hereby highly resolve that every agent who stops at our doors on the Wednesday before Thanksgiving shall be given a cordial invitation to eat Thanksgiving dinner with us at one o'clock the next day, regardless of color, sex, age, or condition in life. And by 'cordial,' we mean hearty, encouraging, 'of-course-you-can't-say-no,' beguiling."

There was a moment of terrible silence while three New England consciences clicked like clock-work. A pledge was a pledge. For better, for worse.

"All I've got to say is, we may be entertaining thieves and burglars," said Submit in her most righteous tone of voice.

"Or angels unawares," smiled Araminta gaily.

But Dorcas said nothing. I think she was praying that the Brush Man would not come. How many times she had rebuffed him! How many times she had shut the door in his eager face! And also how many times she had longed to own all of his full line of fine brushes!" Yes, I think she was praying that he might not come on Wednesday.

If so her prayer was heard. But there was the Vacuum Gentleman! He with the amazing oration about the high suction qualities of his product which could beat and sweep and clean all in one breath. He was such a splendid creature. Far too fine to be invited to eat in a broom-swept house, with never an electric light in the whole place. But he called. And he was invited. There was a moment of stark unbelief on his part. Then:

"My word! Of all the jolly clever things for you girls to do! Of course I'll come! To tell the truth, I'm absolutely out of cash until my next pay day. on the first of December, and I thought I'd just tighten my belt tomorrow and go light. You see I'm from out West and . . . "

It was no oration this time. Dorcas was thrilled by it. She baked pies all morning warmed by his high enthusiasm. And then came the Pin Woman. A bit forlorn, and terribly shabby. But utterly skeptical about the dinner invitation. "I'm not asking for charity," she said with a dignity not to be mistaken.

"Mercy no!" said Araminta, "but you see we're three stupid lonely girls. We've always had a family of our own and now we're all that's left. We'd feel ridiculous, gorging on a turkey alone. We just decided on this plan to get a fresh point of view, you'll be doing us such a favor if you've no other definite plan for tomorrow."

She hadn't. She said she really never knew from day to day . . .

Araminta dreamed of her all night. And of the Magazine Boy. He'd been to war, it seems, and he'd lost an arm. A right arm. His left arm wasn't any too much good, but he slung a bag over his shoulders and solicited subscriptions from door to door. "It's some life!" he chuckled. Araminta wished he weren't so cheerful. If he'd been gloomy and pessimistic it would have been so much more in keeping with his plight. But he beamed all over at the invitation. "Now that's top-notch!" he cried, slapping his good hand against the magazine bag. "I'll be there to watch the little birdie! Isn't it wonderful how life opens up? Every day something new and splendid?"

("Pollyanna!" sighed Araminta to herself severely, for she had never fully approved of that perpetually glad person and yet here was the Magazine Boy . . . "I believe," she whispered to herself slowly, "that I'm going to get more out of this than the other girls, after all!")

And she did. For there was the Vacuum Gentleman. He couldn't get over Araminta. He said that out West there weren't any girls like her. "You're sort of like an ancestor," he finally defined her.

But the Pin Woman looked at him sagely: "I know just what he means," she said as she helped herself to more gravy. "You're like my pins—you're prim and sharp, you've got a head on your shoulders and you act as if you go farther than your head allows you. But you don't. It isn't in the nature of a pin."

"Is that what I'm like?" asked Araminta of the Vacuum Gentleman as they washed the dinner dishes in the kitchen later.

I wish I dared tell you his answer. But there really never was a Thanksgiving without some kind of a twice-told tale in it.

'Benezer Brought His Best

By Margaret T. Applegarth

'BENEZER sat down on the kitchen door-step to think it over. Yet when I say kitchen door-step, I mean front-door-step, too, and side-door-step and back-door-step and any other door-steps there might be in a house; for 'Benezer's house had only one door, you can see what a very little house it must have been—just a poor little bit of a place, but full of love from the roof to the cellar, and 'Benezer knew only too well where the love came from first. That was the very reason why he was sitting on the front door step to think it over: For love came from the House around the Corner; the House around the Corner came from the Baptists; and the Baptists came from God. It was all as plain as day. And nobody knew better than 'Benezer that if there wasn't love and there wasn't God and there wasn't a Baptist House around the Corner, then life would be hardly worth living in this big lonely new town where trucks rumbled at you and street cars clanged at you and autos whizzed at you—but all of them passed you by.

For what did one little black boy more or less matter to them? They rumbled and clanged and whizzed on their own busy errands, and that one little shy black boy stood on the curb and felt as unimportant as a speck of dust.

At least that was the way it had been until the wonderful day when he had noticed something waving at him out of a window. He could not be quite sure whether it was really waving at him, or not, but he thought he might as well be on the safe side, so he waved back. And there was an even jollier waving from the window; 'Benezer went one better himself, and did a regular windmill performance, wondering who in all this big city had suddenly become so interested in him. But although he stood on tiptoe, he simply—could—not—see—who—it—was.

Then Mr. Missionary came along, and thought it such a jolly sight to see 'Benezer being a windmill on the curb that he stopped and said: "What kind of a game is this?"

'Benezer grinned: "'Tain't presactly a game, but I'se got a friend up in that window, see? And he waves at me, so then I wave at him, and we jess got going harder and harder and harder. But he's the shyest friend I eber did see! He don't show his face even once."

Mr. Missionary looked where 'Benezer pointed and he discovered that the friend was simply a muslin curtain fluttering in the breeze. But it would never do to tell 'Benezer that his friend was a curtain, so he said something far nicer: "I belong in that house, and what's more, you belong in that house,—but I've never seen you there, so why don't you come in?"

'Benezer could hardly believe his ears: "I 'spect I'se anudder li'l boy entirely from the li'l boy you thinks I is!" he sighed, "my name's Ebenezer, and I nebber in all my born days was in no such big grandiferous house! Nebber!"

The man laughed: "Maybe you never were in it, yet it's specially for a colored boy exactly your size and age, so suppose we step inside and I'll show you what fun it is to have a house like this unexpectedly belonging to you."

I think that Baptist center seemed to 'Benezer like having a dream come true—for he discovered one room with negro boys playing crokinole; another room with negro boys hammering nails and sawing wood, making furniture; another room where boys were waiting for this very gentleman to tell them a story. Never had 'Benezer felt so much at home. So that from that day to this, he and his entire family think there's no place in the world like that House around the Corner and no man like the one in charge of the center.

But . . . !

It seemed that there were other cities in America, with other colored boys, and no house around any corner where the very curtains waved "Come on in!" Therefore, with Thanksgiving so near, Mr. Missionary suggested that the boys and girls should each bring something to say a "Thank you" to the Saviour for their own center which would help build another center elsewhere, or help feed some other negro family, or clothe some one shivering in the cold.

'Benezer sat on his kitchen doorstep to think it over. In fact, he had been sitting there a long time. And before he sat down he had gone over every inch of that little home that had only one doorstep, but besides being very, very little, it was also very, very bare! There really wasn't enough of anything to go around: there were not enough chairs in the daytime, or enough beds at night, or enough blankets; indeed, there weren't nearly enough chairs in the daytime, or enough beds at night, or enough blankets; indeed, there weren't nearly enough clothes either. 'Benezer, with all his thankfulness, was having a desperately hard time trying to find anything to give to the Saviour on Thanksgiving Day.

He kept wishing and wishing that he were rich, then he would bring a pearl of great price, like the little prince in the last fairy story told at the center. "But land sakes," sighed 'Benezer, "I reckon there ain't no pearls in this here house. Leastways, I nebber laid my eyes on them."

But there he was wrong, for not half an hour later he looked in a cracked mirror over the kitchen sink and there he saw a pearl. Indeed he did! To be sure, it was rather a queer pearl, fastened in rather a queer place; fastened so firmly, in fact, that 'Benezer had to wriggle it and wriggle it and wriggle it before it began to feel at all loose. Then very patiently he worked it back and forth, and round and round, until it felt a trifle looser. Then he went and asked his father to pull it. His father naturally asked several leading questions: Why this? and why that? But 'Benezer said it was a secret; but did his father think he could pull it entirely loose for him?

"Yes, but I reckon mebbe it'll hurt you a whole heap, 'Benezer."

"Nebber mind the hurts," said the brave 'Benezer. So his father pulled as hard as he could; and that is how it happened that 'Benezer was able to go to the center on Thanksgiving morning with a pearl in his trousers pockets.

The center was buzzing with other boys and girls who had brought their thank you gifts. They were piled on a big table, and every one was showing every one else what they brought.

"Reckon you nebber did see apples as reddy red as mine!" "Nor pumpkins as yaller as mine!" "And jess look at 'taters I brung." "I earned twenty-five cents by toting packages all afternoon." "Mammy said I dast fetch a can o' tomattys."

Oh, it was a wonderful morning and a wonderful sight, and Mr. Missionary was as delighted as the children until he suddenly discovered that something unpleasant was happening to poor 'Benezer. Some of the girls were tittering and some of the boys were pointing their fingers scornfully.

"'Benezer claims he brung a pearl, but I reckon you nebber did see a pearl like 'Benezer's in all your born days!"

"That ain't no pearl! Why that's nuffin but a tooth."

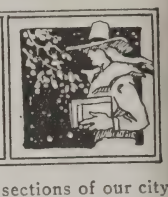
"Tee-hee! Just a ordinary eberyday front tooth." Tee-hee! Tee-hee!



But Mr. Missionary took this pearl that was only a tooth, and no sooner had he seen it than he knew it was far from being ordinary, so he asked 'Benezer to come into his office and—by questioning—heard the whole story: First, how 'Benezer had gone to the grocer and offered to do odd chores. But the grocer had said: "What do I want with a no account negro boy! Get out of here quick!" So he got out quick and went to the butcher, but the butcher had no errands either. Then he tried the baker, the drug store, the hardware store, the paint shop, the dry goods store, the plumber's establishment, the florist's. He tried doctors and dentists and lawyers and ministers. He offered to wash windows and chop wood. But nobody needed anything done on the day before Thanksgiving. Yet here was 'Benezer feeling thankfuller and thankfuller for the Baptist center.

"So when I was clean tuckered out I recollected how you done tell about the prince giving a pearl of great price, and I kept right on recollecting how that dentist feller done tell us onct how teeth are as precious as pearls. So I done got my pappy to yank one loose. I dunno whether the Saviour's going to be able to use a tooth, though. But it's an awful good tooth. All shiny white, see, like a sure enough pearl."

Topic for December 9

THE CALL OF THE WILDS
Isa. 55:12, 13
(CONQUEST MEETING)

"For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

It was snake-dance time; to the white man it was the last of August. About fifty tourists had made the ninety-mile trip from the railroad to see the snake-dance, but they saw much more than the heathen ceremony. The unexpected iconoclastic service burnt itself into the memories of Indian and white man alike.

Johnson had been a Christian for several years, but before his conversion he fell heir to all the sacred sticks and gods used in a certain religious ceremony. When he accepted Christ they were stolen from him and hidden by other members of the clan. Only two days before he had discovered them and now wished to destroy them all. Johnson said that these things were hundreds of years old, as old as the Hopi himself. Many of them had never been seen by the majority of the Indians; so sacred were they to the tribe that only those who were priests or in line to become priests could look upon them. Now they were to be utterly destroyed.

Johnson placed a tall box on the ground and on it he laid his Bible. Around it were the implements dedicated to demon-worship. Then the real service began. Otto gave the opening talk, addressing the group of tourists. He told them that the Hopi owed much to the white man. Had he not brought schools to them in order that they might learn many things? And had he not brought them the greatest blessing—God? "But," he added, "you who come in here to view the old heathen dances are undoing your own work. You pay taxes to send us to school, yet you come here and encourage by your presence the continuance of the very thing that holds us to the old sinful life. I tell you frankly that we do not want you to come here to see these things. We do want you to come and tell us about Jesus. If you don't want him out in your cities, don't take him away from us. If you have grown tired of his word, let us have it. We are hungry for it—we want it."

The laughing and whispering had ceased and everything was strangely quiet. Johnson stood up and began to quote from his Bible. "The idols of the heathen are of silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths but they speak not, ears but they hear not, eyes have they but they see not, neither is there any breath in them. They that make them are like unto them, so is every one that trusteth in them." Johnson speaks English fairly well, but his sentences were broken as he talked. "Yes, the idols are just wood. They can do nothing," he continued. "They have been here many years, but they can never help us.

The crowd gathered closer while Johnson heaped the things so that they would burn well. He worked quickly and in a moment was scratching the match. The dried old twigs of the head-dresses caught and the flame darted from stick to stick. All stepped back from the heat of the fire as it greedily licked up the old idols and the sacred sticks. A song was started and taken up by all who knew it. It was a Hopi song expressing thanks to God for his light and for new life in Jesus. Faster and faster burned the wood, the flames fanned by a stiff breeze, and just as the last image crumpled down into the ashes, the Indians, led by the missionary, sang a translation of "'Tis Sweet to Trust in Jesus." Truly a more spectacular or stirring event could not have taken place on any foreign field. As the crowd moved gradually away, down to them on the wind came the clear, glad voices of the native Christian Indians singing, "Jesus, Jesus, You Are Chief."—Adapted from Service.

Sunshine Acres, Commack, Long Island

The fresh-air work of the Young People's Baptist Union of Brooklyn and Long Island is one of the biggest fields of service offered for consecrated Christian young people.

This ministry is intended to reach into the homes of children who in some way are connected with the Baptist churches of Brooklyn and Long Island, and take them out for a ten-day period of rest and recreation, so that they may be strengthened in body, mind and spirit to face anew life's problems. This is done free of all cost to those who go. The taking of children and mothers is not altogether a matter of vacation but rather a matter of health. Our heart goes out first to the youngsters especially of the crowded sections of our city who, because of frail bodies have been the victims of sickness and disease, and while they have succeeded in throwing off the illness which gripped them, they are left weaker and in real physical need. Also to the toiling mothers; those who have to work the year through and look forward to a ten-day respite to keep them physically well.

To those who are classed as undernourished we would say "Come with us, we want to help you too." The best that can be had to meet the need has been our aim in providing three meals of plenty per day. During the past summer we contracted with a local farmer to supply us with 100 quarts of milk per day—a quart per person. The third class to which we would bid welcome are those who have no illness or are not undernourished but who can be helped by a change in surroundings. Because of limited capacity we exhaust those in the first class before taking those in the second, and the second before taking those in the third. The demand for accommodation has been larger from a number of churches than has been possible for us to meet.

The worker for each church is the one responsible for sending only those who are in the classes as stated and who are willing to abide by all rules and regulations set up for the proper conduct of our work. The ages cover the years from five to twelve. Over twelve they come by special permission only and for good reasons. Under five we have taken children only when accompanied by the mother. Two large sightseeing busses carry the children to the home which gives them a forty-mile ride through the beauty of Long Island.

The care of the children when they reach Sunshine Acres is under the direction of the matron and a head worker for the girls and one for the boys.

The money needed to carry on our work comes through the young people's societies, among whom are apportioned amounts accepted by them, and which go to make up the budget for the year. Last year's budget was $7,750, of which the fresh air committee spent $3,331.99 for operating expenses, other than fixed charges. We had 569 children, mothers and workers during the summer. 33 more than last year.

The entire property cost to date $26,775, including all buildings, land and equipment. A mortgage of $2,000 is the only obligation against this so that there is an equity of over $24,000 in this adventure in friendliness. The regular budget for the 1923-24 season is $8,000 and an additional $5,000 will be added as an over and above item needed for a new girl's dormitory.

—WALTHER A. ANDRESEN,
Chairman Fresh Air Committee.

Our Own Folks

District of Columbia

By Henry W. O. Millington

Several notable conferences have been held in Washington recently. The Citizenship Conference, which attracted nation-wide attention, was really a great affair. Its influence has gone out to every part of our country and its strengthening influence upon government officials is already quite apparent. Steps are now being taken to make permanent and still more potent the influences set in motion at that conference. Commissioner Haynes described this conference as the "most significant gathering of patriotic American leaders of thought since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment." "The conference has served a great and helpful purpose," said Mr. Haynes, "in that the discussions clarified conditions and definitely indicated responsibilities in the smaller political subdivisions as well as those of the federal government." Another conference was held in the Calvary Baptist Church at which Dr. J. C. Robbins of the Northern Convention and Dr. O. E. Bryan of the Southern Convention were the principal speakers. This conference called together a large number of our most prominent district Baptists and served as a great inspiration in connection with the five-year campaign.

One of the most honored and useful laymen in our Washington Baptist life is Dr. William Allen Wilbur, dean of Columbian College, George Washington University. He has served at times as moderator of our association and for a number of years has been chairman of our executive committee. A portrait of Doctor Wilbur painted by Richard S. Merryman is just now on exhibition at the Corcoran Art Gallery and is attracting a great deal of attention among Washington people in general and Baptist friends in particular. The picture, which is life size, presents the subject seated, in three-quarter length, in academic robes. It is a full-face view and all who have seen it exclaim that the artist has caught the rare personality of his popular professor at the university who has more than a thousand students each year. The background has a very special significance, picturing as it does two ships meeting off Cape Horn. It refers to Dean Wilbur's father and uncle, who were sea captains, from Mystic, Conn., his own native town, and who by an extraordinary coincidence once met as their ships were both rounding the Cape, after they had been parted for many years. In memory of the event the picture was afterward painted and became a family heirloom, now commemorated in this portrait. It will have an added interest to Dean Wilbur's students who know his love of yachting and that he came of a family of sea captains for several generations. The portrait is to be presented to George Washington University by popular subscription among the dean's pupils, past and present.

The Hyattsville Church recently observed its twenty-fifth anniversary. All the services in connection with this event were largely attended and full of inspiration and profit.

Rev. T. C. Jones, recently of Indian Head, Md., has been called to act as assistant to Doctor Muir of the Temple Church.

The James Bible Class of the Takoma Park Church gave $100 towards the Japanese relief fund. Behind this lies a little history. During the first two years of the Takoma Park Church work, Rev. T. E. Brown was in charge of the work. Almost every Sunday two Japanese gentlemen attended Sunday school and preaching service. They were students in English with Mr. Brown. Today, one of them is in Mexico, the other a vice-counsellor. While in Washington, they were secretaries at the Japanese embassy. Each of these men gave $100 toward the new building of the Takoma Park Church. Mr. Brown has been a teacher at the Japanese embassy for five years. He has given a course in the life of Christ to the present embassy counsellor and his wife. He has also had as a student a member of the House of Peers from Japan, who after spending four months in Washington, living in Mr. Brown's home, returned to Japan and now attends one of our mission churches there. During the time the counsellor and his wife were taking a course in the life of Christ one evening, they were with one of our American officers for dinner. The counsellor's wife referred to the course of study, and placing her hand over her heart said, "You Christians have something in here which we have not got." While Mr. Brown was teaching with regard to Judas betraying Christ, she exclaimed, "How could he do it: we Japanese could never do that." It will be seen by this that in an indirect way a Christianizing influence is going on among distinguished foreigners in the nation's capital. Far-reaching results may easily come from such services.

Bible and Missionary Conferences

"The Bible and Missionary Conference here was marked with great spiritual power and interest. The conference registration was 865, and 450 women were at the Loyalty luncheon," comes word from Portland, Oregon. "The thank offering from the three luncheons was $1,735. Night audiences filled temple; 75 per cent of the churches of the state were represented. Real blessing to entire state."

"Largest attendance of Oregon Baptists since Northern Baptist Convention," comes another message from the same place. "Believe conference will make real contribution to our future work."

"We are all happy" declares New Haven, Conn. "Five hundred women just now sat down to Loyalty luncheon. This small state has registered on first day of conference nearly 1,000. Have engaged a second church to care for night meetings."

"We have just closed a great conference. 1,725 registrations" Providence sends word. "and eighty-five out of 110 churches represented. Enthusiasm high."

Toledo reported some days ago. "About 900 registrations so far. Over 300 at Loyalty luncheon and 150 at Guild banquet."

"Meetings of great spiritual power," Des Moines joyously sends word. "House packed tonight to hear the Manleys. Three hundred young people stood up as witness of their dedication to the service of Christ. Definite responsibilty accepted by representatives of every association in state to carry this into every church in state within ten days."

"With reports yet coming in we have over 1,300 registered" in Cincinnati.

German Baptist Seminary in Hamburg

By J. H. Rushbrooke

THROUGH the courtesy of Rev. Carl Neuschaefer, the annual report for the session 1922-23 has reached me. Its form is already significant of conditions in Germany; for instead of being printed, it has been "multiplexed" on very rough paper from a typewritten copy. Equally revealing are such details in the report itself as the lengthening of holidays in order to economize fuel and light!

The Hamburg Seminary is not the oldest of such Baptist institutions on the Continent: the Bethel Seminary in Stockholm was founded earlier. For forty-three years the German college has been at work, to the great advantage of our movement throughout the whole of eastern and southeastern Europe. "An academic year of much internal and external disquiet," is Mr. Neuschafer's description of 1922-23. It opened with two heavy losses: the deaths of Principal Gieselbusch and of Rev. Claus Peters in October. An eloquent and just tribute to the former is incorporated in the report.

The students numbered forty-one during the session, and the curriculum appears fairly severe—except that Hebrew is not taken. The practical character of the instruction appears in the emphasis placed upon history of missions, catechetics, modern—especially Baptist—church history, English and singing. The ordinary biblical theological and philosophical subjects are studied; but I miss any reference to studies bearing directly on the problems of international and class relations and the Christian attitude in industrial questions—topics likely to give preachers much trouble in coming days, in Germany as well as elsewhere!

The splendidly evangelical tone of the seminary appears all through the report. Baptists owe much to the prescience of Oncken in emphasizing the training of ministers, and to the generosity of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, which still bears the expense of such students as come from outside Germany.

A Radiograph from Africa

Conference Held at Kinshasa, Congo Belge, Afrique, September 18-24

Many weeks before Sept. 18 our missionaries were preparing for the coming conference.

Doctor Leslie of Vanga was the first to arrive after an eight-day trip on the little river boat—the only representative from our splendid work at Vanga. Mrs. Leslie and their son "Dick" were unable to leave the station, owing to the pressing needs there. The conference is especially grateful to Dick Leslie for the splendid work he has done in assisting his father at Vanga. It is a real pleasure to have him as one of our mission. He has always been one of us for he was born on one of our mission stations —Banza Manteke.

The lower Congo group met on the Congo "Express." Mr. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, after several days tramping through their district, boarded the train at Songololo and at Kimpese were glad to welcome Doctor Mabie and Mr. Moon who had just returned from their furlough. The next day at Sona Bata, Mrs. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Wakeman and Miss Schaffer joined the party.

The train wended its way through long stretches of hills now brown and dry and at times the great grass fires sent their volumes of heat and smoke into our already overheated car.

At Kinshasa we were met by Mr. and Mrs. MacDiarmid who had been visiting at Brazzaville and thus our happy group was completed. That evening we gathered at the new Union Mission Hostel—just twelve apostles of the cross. There were no representatives from Tshumbiri, Ntondo or Matadi. The members of the conference were delighted to enjoy the comforts of the new hostel, many of them recalling the days when such comforts were mere dreams. The B. M. S. kindly turned over their chapel for our use during the entire session.

The conference opened that evening with a prayerful spirit that characterized all of the sessions. The past year has been one of many difficulties, but as the reports were given it was felt that it had also been one of great blessing and forward movement. The revival spirit still goes on manifesting its power over all the field from Mukimvika on the lower Congo to Vanga on the Upper River, for many are turning their faces to Christ. At Mukimvika some of our Christians have been imprisoned but instead of subduing their enthusiasm it has caused them to rejoice and upon their release continue their preaching with increased fervor. The forward movement in the Sona Bata field still continues. The reports from Vanga cheered and inspired us as we heard of the many who were bringing their fetishes to the missionary and turning from darkness to light. Another encouraging note was the growth in the ability and efficiency of native leaders, many of whom were trained at Kimpese.

There were many interesting and important discussions before the conference—that of marriage and divorce regulations; the advisability of adopting badges for the identification of our native Christians and school children; the revision of the Swedish New Testament and Psalms. The conference favored the cooperation of our society in the proposed Matadi Hostel.

Perhaps the most joyful work before the conference was the designation of the three new couples expected this year; Mr. and Mrs. Engwall (evangelists) to Banza Manteke; Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong (industrial and educational work) to Sona Bata; Mr. and Mrs. Albaugh (educationalists) to Vanga. Because of the urgent need Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong will come out immediately but the others will remain in Belgium for six months to study French.

When it came to the designation of Mr. and Mrs. Smith it was thought best, in view of the special training of Mr. Smith as an agriculturist, to leave them at liberty to visit and study agricultural conditions on all stations with a view to outlining a program suitable to the needs of the work. The society has felt for many years the need of this work and is glad that this hope is about to be realized.

Providence Bible and Missionary Conference

By Arthur W. Cleaves

"It is my profound conviction that if conferences like this had been held at the beginning and frequently during the years the New World Movement would be vastly farther ahead than it now is." In these words one attendant summed up his impressions of the Providence Conference, held Nov. 7-9, and his judgment is shared by many others. There was in these meetings a consciousness of God's presence, a realization of his claims upon men, a sense of responsibility for the tasks he lays upon his children, a reverence for the message of the Scriptures, which made one feel very much as he does in revival meetings when these are marked by unusual power. In Providence, we should like such a conference every year and oftener if possible.

The "team" was one of the best, consisting of Dr. C. A. Brooks, Mrs. Montgomery, Rev. Harold C. Phillips, Miss Jessie L. Burrall, Dr. W. E. Witter, Dr. Howard B. Grose, Dr. J. H. Franklin, Dr. M. H. Eubank, and Dr. J. Y. Aitchison. In addition, Mr. Henry Bond spoke at the laymen's banquet and Miss Lisbeth Hughes, Mrs. Willard H. Smith and Miss Helen Wainright at the Loyalty luncheon. Every one of the speakers was at his best and the results passed all expectations.

Such a meeting could properly be held only in the historic First Church from which so often have gone forth great words and streams of spiritual power. And here from day to day the delegates gathered, attendance naturally varying somewhat but being at least one thousand at each evening session.

There are approximately 15,000 Baptists in Rhode Island. The registration for this conference was 1,727. Can any other center of similar size beat it? There are 107 Baptist churches in the state, some of them very small. Of these, eighty-five had delegates at the meetings. The Loyalty luncheon brought together 250 women, the number being limited by the size of the room and the tickets being strictly apportioned among the churches. On one evening 150 picked laymen gathered about the tables and had a great session. On yet another evening about 400 W. W. G. girls had an enthusiastic rally and supper.

There are no divisions among Rhode Island Baptists. It is not necessary to appeal to them in behalf of a lost unity. They are now united, differing in opinion as always but one in Christian fellowship and service. There are here in our churches no extravagances of doctrine, no schisms, no failure of response to the great things of God as represented in our denominational undertakings. The churches have always done well. But with this new vision of the field, with the new and powerful scriptural message, with a fresh feeling of their own responsibility, they are determined to come to the end of the New World Movement with their obligations met in full, and all set to undertake in the following year the greatest tasks for God to which Northern Baptists have ever given themselves. Rhode Island may be small in area but it is mighty in faith, in charity and in achievement.

William C. P. Rhoades

An Appreciation

On Monday, Nov. 5, William C. P. Rhoades, D. D., entered into rest at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y. Doctor Rhoades was one of the outstanding men of our denomination, a wise counselor, a leader with keen judgment and discernment, a devoted and capable worker in all the lines of our work, as well as a Christian gentleman and a true friend.

He was a graduate of Williams College, and of the Rochester Theological Seminary. After he left the seminary he engaged in New York City mission work, but left after two years to take a pastorate in Granville, Ohio, where he remained for eleven years. From there he went to the Marcy Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, in 1885, where he was pastor for over thirty years, receiving 3,249 members and building up that church to be one of the strongest in the denomination. He endeared himself to all by his kindly, friendly disposition, his cordiality and his earnest work. When he resigned the pastorate, in 1916, the church made him pastor emeritus, and last year unveiled a tablet in his honor bearing the inscriptions "This building is his monument," "He made full proof of his ministry."

Doctor Rhoades was for years a member of the Home Mission Board, and of the board of the Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens, and of many other boards in connection with our work. He was for many years one of the trustees of the Rochester Theological Seminary, was a trustee of Vassar College and for some years president of its board.

MAINE

The Maine Bible and missionary conferences, held at Bangor and Portland, were remarkably successful in attendance, interest, inspiration and power. Over a thousand of the pastors and church leaders of Maine left their homes and many of them took long journeys to attend the conferences; 865 paid registrations were secured through the efforts of Rev. J. F. Ingram, who organized the conferences. Dr. C. A. Brooks of New York was the team leader; on the team were Doctor Aitchison, Doctor Gross, Mrs. Abernathy, Mrs. Bloomer, Miss Haven, Miss Mixer, Doctor Witter and Doctor Franklin. Remarkable Bible expositions were given by Rev. Harold Phillips of New York, and Mr. Albert Scott of Boston, chairman of the board of promotion, made a strong address from the business man's point of view. The Loyalty luncheons were largely attended. Throughout the conference there was a deep and sincere thanksgiving for what has been accomplished in the New World Movement, and a new sense of privilege in meeting fully the opportunities of the year. Echo meetings followed in all the associations of the state. The leaders in these meetings were Mrs. Annie Cobb Smith, Mrs. H. R. Hatch, Mrs. H. 1. Hix, Mrs. F. O. Lorimer, and Mrs. E. C. Whittemore. The plans include a general missionary rally in every church in the state, though in some cases churches will be grouped for larger meetings.

VERMONT

Dr. and Mrs. Fred M. Preble of Ludlow have spent the last eight winters in Riverside, Cal. This year, however, they will sojourn in Florida. Their address for the winter will be 840 3A Street North, St. Petersburg. This does not mean that they have given up entirely their winter home in California. The change is for this season only. Doctor Preble has not been able, on account of health, to carry the responsibility of the active ministry since he resigned from the Court Street Church, Auburn, Maine, where he held a pastorate of eighteen years. During the past summer, however, he has preached several times with some of his old-time freedom and with much of his old-time joy.

The annual roll-call and business meeting of the Huntington Church, Rev. G. H. Grey, pastor, was held Tuesday, Oct. 30, with an unusually good attendance. The pastor's report showed that he had made over 500 calls, attended thirteen funerals, officiated at seven weddings and received thirteen into the church by baptism and four by letter during the year. The ladies of the church served dinner, after which Rev. W. C. Rogers of Starksboro conducted a devotional service and Dr. W. A. Davison delivered an address on "The Church, Its Organization, Obligation and Opportunitiy." At the close of the address, Doctor Davison officiated at the communion service, assisted by Pastors Grey and Rogers. Mr. Rogers delivered an address in the evening which was well received by the good congregation present.

MASSACHUSETTS

Foreign Secretary James H. Franklin spent Nov. 10-11 at East Northfield, filling his annual engagement with the Seminary for Young Women, the Mount Hermon School for young men and the village church. During the two days he delivered five sermons and addresses before the various institutions. In recent weeks he has participated in Baptist Bible and missionary conferences in New England in addition to speaking at the regular services of churches in various centers.

CONNECTICUT

The Bible and missionary conference was held at Calvary Church, New Haven, Nov. 12-14, with the Loyalty luncheon for women on Nov. 12. Mrs. Montgomery was the speaker at the luncheon.

NEW YORK

Miss Vivian Beard, church survey worker, of Parkersburg, W. Va., has completed a canvass and survey of Cortland, under the auspices of the Cortland Ministers' Conference. This campaign was preparatory to the organization of week-day religious education by the churches of Cortland. One of the interesting facts revealed by the canvass was the number of children not enrolled in the church schools. There are nine denominations represented in the town, with fifteen church buildings. There are 528 children not enrolled in any church school in the city.

The Marcy Avenue Church, Brooklyn, celebrated its golden anniversary Nov. 4-11. Dr. J. M. Moore, pastor, in the historical sermon paid tribute to Dr. Reuben Jeffery, the first pastor, who, after seven years, left a church of 800 members, and to Dr. C. P. Rhoades, pastor for thirty years, who welcomed 3,249 members. On Old Home night over 450 gathered for a dinner, at which the speakers were former assistant pastors who brought reminiscences of their time. Deacon Emeritus James M. Hudnut spoke for the early days and was followed by Rev. Charles T. Snow, Rev. Don Clyde Kite and Rev. Wilbour E. Saunders. The celebration was brought to a close with an outlook sermon by the pastor and an address on "What Is Christianity?" by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. The passing away of the beloved pastor emeritus, W. C. P. Rhoades, almost seemed to put a special blessing on the occasion, and the many testimonials given to him at the meetings found an echo in each heart. There were present during the week one of the constituent members of the church, one of the original sixty-five members of the Sunday school, several members of the Jeffery family, including Doctor Jeffery's widow, and one lady who was baptized by Doctor Jeffery in Cincinnati fifty-four years ago, before he came to Marcy Avenue. During Doctor Moore's pastorate of six and one-half years 541 new members have been received. Marcy Avenue enters on the next half century glad of its "cheerful yesterdays" and ready to meet, through the grace given by her Lord, all the "confident tomorrows."

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The Turtle Creek Church recently welcomed Rev. A. E. Douglass, the new pastor, and his wife. The church is loyally supporting Mr. Douglass and there has been a steady increase in interest and attendance.

A series of Bible and missionary conferences is being held under the direction of the state board of promotion. The team is composed of Mrs. Jos. Wilds of Philadelphia, representing the woman's societies; Rev. J. H. Telford of Burmah, Rev. C. S. Detweiler, secretary of the Home Mission Society for Latin North America; Rev. J. W. Elliott, executive secretary of the state education board, and Rev. W. C. Chappell. Rev. G. Morton Walker of Meadville represented the state mission board at three of the conferences, and Rev. W. G. Russell, state director, was with the team part of the time, he and Mr. Chappell being the team leaders. The conferences have been held at Reynoldsville, Erie, Franklin, New Castle, Uniontown and Altoona. They have been well attended and the spirit at each was fine. A revival of interest in our missionary work is manifest generally in the churches in Western Pennsylvania.

ILLINOIS

Rev. A. S. Kellie of Divernon has accepted a call to the church at Morris and is moving there at once. He leaves the church at Divernon, after four years of fine service, in excellent condition. He and his wife had forty high-school young people in their two Sunday-school classes and also a large junior society. This is a good field for the right man. Morris offers Mr. Kellie an excellent opportunity.

Tremont is having an old-fashioned revival meeting. Pastor Cyrus W. Webb is doing his own preaching, with the help of C. A. Jones of Chicago in the singing. So far twenty-three have been baptized into the church and several others have joined otherwise. Several influential families have come into the church.

A rural circuit is being formed at Tower Hill near Pana. Rev. A. J. Burville is moving to Tower Hill and will serve three near-by country churches, Providence, Eiler and Little Flock. All these churches are in the Shelby Association and were pastorless all of last year.

THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF the Kane church was celebrated Nov. 2-4. This is the fourth living church in the state that has passed its one-hundredth birthday. The church was organized on the third day of November, 1823, by Father Clark and Joseph Lemen. Three ex-pastors were present—Rev. D. C. Blunt of Indiana, Rev. W. H. Dickman, of Plano, and Rev. R. T. Gasaway of Carlinville. These all took an active part in the services. Letters were read from the following ex-pastors: Rev. Mr. Mitchell of New England, Rev. Mr. Brown of Minneapolis, Rev. Mr. Malcolm of New Mexico, Rev. James Elliott, of Lexington, and Rev. Mr. Soares of Battle Creek, Mich. Ex-Superintendent E. P. Brand preached the centennial sermon on Sunday afternoon. It was rainy and muddy all day Saturday and Sunday, but the congregations filled the house. Special meetings were continued with the assistance of Dr. J. E. Hilton. Rev. R. E. Carney is the pastor.

A DIGEST

A digest of the figures above reveals the following facts:

1. The figures cover the collections to the New World Movement for five and a half months.

2. Column 2 is a challenge. Every state is in arrears and the aggregate of the arrears to October 15 is something over 60%. In other words the states have paid up to Oct. 15 only about one-third of what they owe to that date.

3. Out of 38 sources of receipts including the miscellaneous 21 are minus and 16 plus in the amount collected this year as compared with last year, and the plus receipts total only 3% over last year at the same time after the minus receipts are deducted.

4. From the date of this digest to the close of the new world movement is a period of six months, and it means that if the entire budget as adopted at Atlantic City is raised by May 1, 1924, the receipts will have to aggregate one million and a half a month. But if this could be distributed it would mean only a little over a dollar a month from each Baptist in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. Since the method of distribution is purely academic, it means that, if the full goal is reached, God will have to send upon his people in this communion a willingness to give in the last year equal to the first year of the movement. The figures are startling but not discouraging. The best months of the year remain. The goal can be reached, ought to be reached, and by the grace of God will be reached if every man will do his duty.

THE WHITE HALL CHURCH IS HAVING one of the most gracious revivals in its history. The pastor, Rev. L. E. Ellison, is doing the preaching, aided by a Welchman as singer and personal worker. There were more than twenty professions of faith during the first week of the meetings.

SINGING EVANGELIST WM. S. DIXON, Wheaton, who is specializing as a pastor's helper in evangelism, has open time to offer beginning Jan. 6.

REV. J. G. LITTLE OF CHICAGO has accepted the call of the church at Sterling, Ill., and is already on the field.

INDIANA

THE FIRST CHURCH OF LAPORTE, W. F. Bostick, pastor, recently closed a two weeks' revival with Littrell and Moody. The pastor baptized thirty-seven. Mr. Bostwick is preaching a series of Sunday night sermons on "Great Questions of the Bible," "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" "What Doth the Lord Require of Thee?" "If a Man Die Shall He Live Again?" "What Think Ye of Christ?" "What Shall I Do with Jesus?"

WISCONSIN

ON NOV. 6 A MEETING was called by the Baptist church of Wyocena to consider the advisability of setting apart to the work of the gospel ministry its pastor, E. E. Obeirne. The meeting was called to order by Deacon Samuel Allen of Wyocena; Prof. F. E. Brown of Beaver Dam was elected chairman with G. N. Doody as clerk. Nine churches responded to the roll call with thirteen delegates. Upon request of the church the council was ordered to proceed with the ordination service. Rev. D. W. Hulburt preached the ordination sermon. The charge to the candidate was given by Rev. G. N. Doody of Verona, the charge to the church by Rev. E. G. Hamby of Madison.

MINNESOTA

THE REGULAR FALL MEETING of the board of directors of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association has been called by the chairman, Dr. Robert Earl, to take place on Friday forenoon, Nov. 30, ten o'clock, at the Nurses' Home, Mounds Park Sanitarium, St. Paul. Matters pertaining to the new Midway Hospital project will be discussed.

KANSAS

THE OPENING OF THE WEEK-DAY church schools in Kansas City was an interesting event. Plans had been perfected during the preceding nine months, resulting in the opening of the schools on Oct. 3 with an attendance of 6,883 pupils. Oct. 31 there were 8,600 enrolled. The work represents the cooperation of sixty churches and functions through forty-eight separate schools. Most of these schools are conducted by individual churches, but in advisory relations with the City Council of Religious Education, of which Dr. Carey S. Osborn is president. Doctor Osborn is also city superintendent of religious education, and pastor of the Argentine Baptist Church of Kansas City. The churches not conducting their own schools are working in groups in interdenominational schools. These interdenominational schools are conducted by a board, officially representing churches of the group, and the City Council of Religious Education. Baptists have been leaders in this movement. There are over 3,000 pupils in Baptist schools, with over 100 teachers. There is a total of 300 teachers in all the schools. The plans used in the promotion of this work are those perfected by the conference of field workers appointed by the denominations to officially promote week-day church schools. The religious education department of the Publication Society has had its honorable share in the formation of these plans and in advice in application to the Kansas City situation.

NORTH DAKOTA

THE FIRST CHURCH OF MINOT, W. A. Daniel, pastor, has paid off and burned its mortgage of $3,500 and passed its goal of $5,000 to $5,150 since the first of the year. This church has a great task in the Northwest and a great people to do the task with and are able to do it if money is forthcoming.

SOUTH DAKOTA

REV. VICTOR LARSON, a student at Sioux Falls College, has assumed the pastorate for the year at Elk Point Church. He supplied the church during the summer.

THE VERMILION CHURCH has extended a call to H. P. Fudge. This is the pastorate left vacant by S. G. Cole, who closed his work there in August to accept a position in Carleton College.

REV. M. L. CHRISTENSON IS LEADING the work at Gregory and has organized a Baptist church there. A council of recognition will be held soon. The new church is seeking to raise its budget for the year in the hope that Mr. Christenson will remain there as pastor.

PASTOR-AT-LARGE JOHN W. WYNN recently baptized in the Cheyenne River nine persons, four from Creighton, four from Dowling and one from Pedro.

Tepee Day

The first annual Tepee Day at Sioux Falls College, Nov. 3, was a decided success. There was a parade with its portrayals of Indian life, a splendid football game, the dedication of the new gymnasium, and an evening out of doors program with carefully worked-out dramatizations of scenes from Longfellow's "Hiawatha." In contrast with the native Indian life the achievements of the modern educated Indian were brought before the audience by the student orchestra from the Flandreau Indian school and by the full-blood Sioux, Isaac Grayearth, a government Y. M. C. A. worker at the Flandreau school, who spoke of the former and present life of the Indian. Pre-

WESTERN WASHINGTON

The farewell service in the old First Baptist Church of Tacoma will be held on Thanksgiving Day. Immediately thereafter the present building will be razed and the excavation finished for the beginning, early in the year of the new building, to cost when completed $250,000. Crowds gather in the Tacoma Theatre where services are being held. For the past several Sundays people have been turned away unable to find seats. Hardly a Sunday goes by without decisions for Jesus Christ. The church has called to its assistance Rev. H. F. Cheney, formerly in Ninth St. Church, Cincinnati, later in Tacoma of the Fern Hill Church. He is proving a valuable addition to the corps of workers. Thanksgiving Day will be a storehouse day also. Plans are being laid for at least $50,000 in cash to be paid in on Thanksgiving Day.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rally Day at the Memorial Church of Fresno, Oct. 21 can be counted as one of the red letter days in the history of the church school. The program was the result of a month's work of personal enlistment on the part of each pupil. Every department emphasized and demonstrated the song "You Bring the One Next to You and I'll Bring the One Next to Me." It was a good program showing the work of a model church school. Each department, including our mission school, contributed to the program and many classes had 100 per cent attendance. The Sunday school had 373 present and there was a packed house to hear the assembly program. One of the outstanding features of the school is a deaf-mute class, called "silent class," taught by Mr. A. Shearman, having a membership of fourteen. The culmination of Rally Day was the baptism of six persons, won directly through the influence of this teacher; and a total of fourteen received into the membership of the church. The pastor, Rev. R. D. Licklider, and his wife are doing a good work among the people here and are always on the alert to have everything that is for the uplifting and upbuilding of the church and its different organizations.

The sixth annual session of the school of missions held in connection with the evening services in the First Church of Redlands, began Oct. 21, and bids fair to equal, and will probably excel in attendance and interest, any of the preceding sessions. The attendance in classes for the first night was 363; second night 400, and third night 400. At the request of the pastor, S. Fraser Langford, the school of missions committee has taken charge of both the school and the regular evening services, having a period of two hours for the entire service. The pastor delivers each evening a short talk on the "Child Life in the Scriptures."

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Courses were given in Bible study, B. Y. P. U. activities, "Better and Bigger Bible Schools," evangelism and church work with juniors. Friday and Saturday evening programs included flash-lights from local unions and Sunday schools. On Sunday morning, Rev. G. F. Holt of Lindsay preached the life service sermon, resulting in four new recruits for life work. In the afternoon preceding the closing message by Rev. F. Carl Truex of Selma on "Life is as a Cafeteria," awards were given for class attendance. The largest class attendance was in the "B. Y. P. U. activities" when seventy-four were present; the next largest at the "Bible school" class was sixty-eight and the other two classes followed closely behind. Those who wished to do so, turned in their notes and six received credential cards for having successfully taken ten units.

Obituary

MRS. DUNCAN MacKERRICHER

Mrs. Duncan MacKerricher, for fifteen years a member of the church at Fort Bragg, Cal., recently died in that city. She was a sister of the late Dr. Robert S. MacArthur.

Jessie MacArthur was born in Dalesville, Canada. In 1864 she married Duncan MacKerricher and left Canada for the then unknown California. Mr. Kerricher had charge of a government ranch at Kibisella where Mrs. Kerricher bravely took up the life of a pioneer and reared seven children. She never faltered and always upheld the banner of the cross of Christ.

Rev. J. H. Howe conducted the funeral services.

They Have to Learn to Play

IT would seem strange, wouldn't it, to have to be taught how to play? And yet the children of France and of most of the countries of Europe are being taught for the first time to play the games that American boys and girls play as if by second nature. All sorts of ball games—basketball, volley-ball, baseball; tag, relay races, and all kinds of pursuit games such as hide-and-seek and Red Rover, are being introduced into the lives of the children in Europe.

Every four years there is held a great play carnival called the Olympic games, in which men and women of most of the nations of the world take part. Medals and diplomas are presented to the contestants who excel in each of the different branches of athletics. It is a great honor for a nation to win the Olympic games, and so each man works as hard as he can to help win this honor for his country. There are trials of strength and skill in running, hurdling, jumping, discus-throwing, pole vaulting, wrestling and many other sports.

A great gathering for play of all the nations cannot help but bring about a closer friendship between the nations, as it would among boys and girls.

The Olympic games were first held in 776 B. C. by the ancient Greeks as a religious festival. According to Greek legend the home of the gods was upon Mount Olympus, and the games took their name from that mountain. In the fourth century A. D. the Olympic games were done away with, as pagan. In 1896 the Olympic games were revived at Athens, and, with the exception of the war period, have been held at intervals of four years ever since. In Paris next spring the games are to be held again, the greater part of the events being scheduled to take place in July.

For the first time in the history of the Olympic games, special attention is to be given to the demonstration of mass and athletic games for children and students. This is a recognition of the "play-for-all" policy that has been adopted by the International Olympic Committee in cooperation with the Y. M. C. A. throughout the world. Boys and girls from the schools, universities, Boy Scout groups, Y. M. C. A.'s, and other organizations will take part in the exercises. It is hard for young Americans to realize that team games and athletic contests of all sorts have little or no part in the school activities of European girls and boys. One would wonder what their lives would be without the sports and games which fill so large a place in the lives of the young people here.

Our Methodist friends have been greatly disturbed over collections on the centennary. The October receipts were $4,348,000. This is $123,000 more than October a year ago and the largest amount received in any one month since 1919. The total centennary receipts for the fiscal year were $12,758,000. This is a decrease over last year of $1,148,000. Commenting on the result the Michigan Christian Advocate says, "First, our system seems fine for an emergency rounding up of gifts, but poor for training givers. If we would use our pep to train givers in June we would not have to beat up the bushes in October. We seem to be able to get the money but are not so wise in getting the givers of the money." The editor goes on to say that this annual "rally" to raise money strains the patience of the givers and makes it harder each succeeding year. He thinks it is "bad psychology" to have to yell our heads off urging folks to save the centennary.

desert that was Yokohama, this seems almost unbelievable. Some of the boys came in uniform, some in kimono, some in borrowed things, one boy in a bathing suit, all the outfit he had in the world, but he was on hand for the opening of Mabie Memorial!

From Rev. Paul R. Hickok, D.D., Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Troy, N. Y.: "We are making a much larger use of RESPONSIVE SCRIPTURES than was possible with anything else that had been available. We use it regularly in both services of public worship, and also the Sunday School and Midweek Services. The young people also use it. We like the wide range of subjects developed, and it is extremely helpful to have the themes developed as themes, with all sentences bearing directly on the subject. The work is a real and rich addition to our services of devotion, and in the public worship of the congregation." The following actions were of major importance: We voted unanimously to continue the school on the old site, in "barracks." All buildings classed as "permanent" are forbidden; none are to be allowed for the next three years. In the meantime, city planners will provide for far more beautiful and safe cities; engineers will study the work of this great earthquake and make building regulations adapted to the uncertainties of the country; and the factory and residence sections will have been definitely determined. There seems practically no doubt that our site will continue to be one of the most desirable school sites in the prefecture. We plan to build largely with sheet metal on the outside and wood inside. This will make a building not unattractive when painted, and most serviceable. It ought to last quite a time and provide a safe and comfortable home for the school during these critical years. With cold weather coming on, shelter must be provided. Even at best, the suffering of the multitudes will be extreme when the severe cold comes on. It seems inevitable that we shall have much sickness, and many deaths.

Professor Sakata has had to face most serious problems of finance. Since April he has been receiving about 2500 yen a month from tuitions. For the present he cannot hope for half that sum, and he has no means of knowing what his resources will be at first. He has accordingly recommended that several part-time teachers be discontinued and that some regular teachers be dispensed with. Our most painful action was accepting the resignation of Dean Takata. Next to Sakata, he has been the center and hope of the school. It is possible that he may return to us, but there is no certainty. He will do some teaching in a government college and devote the major part of his time for a while to study. He has given himself, night and day, to our school, and has neglected all study for these four and half years.

I cannot describe to you the pathos of the scene at our Baptist school. The building that was so great a pride to us is a total wreck. A few walls are standing still, but all floors have fallen and the major portion of the walls. Possibly we might have saved some of the library and apparatus, had the fire not reached the school, but there would have been comparatively little. The half-temporary gymnasium stood as it was and would be of the greatest service now, if the fire had left it to us. It will be necessary to dynamite the walls that remain, so as to make the campus safe before we begin work there. If possible, we want to get it done by the army engineer corps while they are still doing that kind of work, as the cost would be small compared with the charge of private parties. The total job of clearing the place is a big one and will call for considerable outlay. We actually save, however, at this point from the fact that the building so completely collapsed. It will cost the Aoyama Methodists some thousands to reduce their buildings to the state ours was reduced by the earthquake.

'Benezer Brought His Best

The missionary looked at it again, and from the way he handled it you might have thought it really was the most precious jewel in town. " Didn't it hurt to have it pulled out?"

"Yes indeedy! 'Cause why that there tooth weren't really ready for coming out yet. Stuck in so dreffel tight. Pears like God might jess recollect the hurt even if he aint got no other use for a tooth."

"I think he may have a really wonderful use for this tooth," the missionary said gently.

And God did, I think. For a certain lady whose little son had died a year before heard about this tooth that longed to be a pearl, and in memory of her little son she sent a big sum of money to the mission board to be used for building a new center somewhere. So that when the following Friday's story hour came round the missionary asked to speak for ten minutes, please, and the story-teller said: "Yes, indeed, as long as you like what do you want to tell us about?"

"Teeth!" said the missionary, "For maybe some of you do not know that a snail—just an ordinary tiny little snail—has about fourteen thousand teeth. Think of that! But a great big elephant never has more than eight, and a monster whale has only two. But a certain small boy I know had a tooth which looked like a pearl, and lo! it turned into a pearl of great price, for it's going to dig a cellar and put up a roof and make a doorway for a new Christian center somewhere. And although even the mission board does not know that they owe that sum of money to the tooth that looked like a pearl, I wanted to whisper the secret to you, so that none of you will ever forget that in giving a gift to the Saviour—give your best! He always has a way to use it."

Our Book Shelf

Jesus Christ and the Modern Challenge, by Frederic C. Spurr. New York: Revell. $1.50.

Many readers of THE BAPTIST will rejoice to know that in this volume appears the splendid defense of the faith as published in the columns of THE BAPTIST some time ago. Whatever Doctor Spurr does is done in a masterly way with the mind of a scholar and a sublime, heavenly touching faith behind the work. In this book he picks up the gage thrown down by ultra-modern criticism concerning the incarnation, the virgin birth, the credibility of miracles the continuing Lordship of Jesus, and with every word he writes strengthens the cause he defends.

The Achievement of Israel, by David Houston. Boston: Pilgrim Press.

This is a study in revelation applied to life. The author has set himself the task of rediscovering for our day and generation the value of the contribution of the people of Israel to the moral and spiritual life of man. He has done this in a succession of brilliant studies, ranging rom Abraham to the Dispersion and racing the achievement of Israel from ts unique genesis to its culmination in he message of the Great Prophets.

He characterizes in a very able man- er the individual prophets and gives an xposition of the growth and develop- nent of the prophetic message in such way as to make the Old Testament a ew and living force for many readers. his book will be of help to those who eed not so much a vindication as a new nterpretation of the history of Israel to elp them in their perplexities in the eld of biblical criticism. It should be help to young people who are inter- sted in the interpretation of the Bible n terms of life.

he Deeper Voice, by Annie Steger Win- ston. New York: Doran. $1.25.

Believing that there is a fear of God hich is not even "the beginning of wis- om" but rather, a blight, on all that is ighest and best and which is today at ne bottom of a great unrest, the author ets forth what she believes to be its nly remedy—a forceful and convincing resentation of the eternal verities with ne simplicity of a child and to magnify nildlikeness as the quality most nearly ternal. Miss Winston feels that we ave not fully grasped the deeper spirit- al meaning of child nature. She be- eves that while philosophic speculation nd rationalism may accomplish some ings worth while, yet they are futile n the realm of man's search for a satis- ring religious experience. Her sugges- ons set forth in this little book which charmingly written paves the way to deep abiding faith in Jesus Christ as ne way out of our perplexities.

eaching Adolescents in the Church School, by Erwin L. Shaver. New York: Doran. $1.25.

The author of the book speaks of it s a plan-book for training leaders of outh based on the project principle. It not a textbook but is to be used as guide in conducting a teacher-training ass. The class is to learn to do by oing. Each chapter begins with a bliography, then under the caption he class session" there follows some ggestion as to how to develop the dis- ission. Next are teaching suggestions; llowed by "a tentative organization of e discussion," and then "new projects hich may grow out of this one." This ethod is continued throughout the ook. Some of the chapters consider; lecting a workers' library, improving e music. habit formation, organized oup activity, cooperation of parents, ory telling, testing religious growth, d enriching pupil's experience. It is a lume which ought to make easy the nducting of a teacher-training class in e average Sunday school, although the t of references given presupposes the cess of the student to a well-equipped rary on religious education. The thor's recommendations for a small rary on the subject are commendable.

uilding a Country Sunday School, by E. L. Middleton. New York: Revell. $1.25.

Most conferences and books on Sun- y-school work neglect the small coun- Sunday school. The criticism hear is; "that is all right for the city hool but does not apply to ours." Mr. iddleton from his experience as teacher d state worker has succeeded in writ- a book that is full of helpful sug- stions for even the smallest school. He talks in terms the rural worker will appreciate. The book, however, is a treatment of the traditional Sunday school and does not deal with religious education in its broader aspect. It is written primarily for the Sunday school in the South, yet in most respects it is adaptable to the North. The chapter "Magnifying the Country Sunday School" is especially stimulating to those interested in the smaller school.

Fergus Ferguson, D. D. His Theology and Heresy Trial, by J. H. Leckie, D. D. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. $2.75.

This volume is not a complete biography of Doctor Ferguson, but it portrays an interesting personality as revealed in situations especially galling to so sensitive and independent a soul. An introductory chapter surveys several earlier nineteenth century Scotch heresy cases—those of MacLeod Campbell, Edward Irving, Robertson Smith, James Morison. Another chapter presents Ferguson's theological system. The main theme is the prosecution of Doctor Ferguson for heresy in 1877-8. It is a story which should be read by all Baptists who may at some time be called upon to vote on the question of adopting an official creed for the denomination. Heresy trials will be seen the next logical step, and the Ferguson case raises and answers the question as to how far this advances the kingdom of God and the cause of truth.

THE CHOIR IS HUMAN

The choir has been lovingly referred to for years and years as the "war department." Singers are supposed to be insanely jealous of each other. For a church member to be asked to serve on the music committee is supposed to be the equivalent of "a year at hard labor." Congregations sit Sunday after Sunday and look the members of the choir over as if they were from another world than theirs, as if they were amazed that the choir could stop fighting long enough to sit through a service quietly and reverently! Of course I am talking about the ordinary congregation and the ordinary church in the ordinary town from a few hundred up to the 50,000 or even 100,000 city. This is the kind of choir and churches I know. I imagine, in my wildest dreams, that when I go up the ladder far enough to be offered a prominent church in one of our large cities, where the music is by a professional quartet, who cease from their opera and concert activities long enough to wear vestments and raise their voices in praise to him with such professional accuracy and precision that the congregation thinks it is attending a sacred concert or something of the sort instead of an actual church service—I imagine then I would find this higher and more exalted station in my professional world somewhat different. At present I can only write "whereof I know."

Although I am not so old, I have had many years of experience in Protestant churches in various sections of the country, playing the organ and later acting both as organist and director. I am here to resent the time-worn accusation that the choir is the "war department." There is no more war in the choir than there is in the Woman's Missionary Society or the Ladies' Aid, nor sometimes in the Sunday-school teachers' board. Singers are no more temperamental, no more jealous, no more prone to human frailties of character than any other race of people. Of course, there are individuals so constituted, but are they not found in any profession or group? You cannot judge a group by its poorest representative. Take the general average. The ordinary member, volunteer member, of your church chorus makes more personal sacrifices and is more loyal to the church and its services and needs than you are down in the congregation. Most of them are there solely because they are contributing what they have in the way of a voice, trained or untrained, freely and whole-heartedly to the work of the church. Of course, once in a while somebody gets a little sore because he is asked to sit in the second row, but a director who understands human nature in all its weaknesses smooths those ruffles in short order. I have seen some of you ordinary church members "get sore" because, when you came late to the service, the usher had unknowingly allowed a stranger to slip into your pew! One of the worst fights I ever had was when I asked a violinist to play second fiddle in an orchestra I was using in a church service. He picked up his instrument and informed me that he had never played second violin and didn't intend to start on that particular occasion. That is the same trait of character that shows up in the choir when all the women wish to sing soprano! So you see the choir member is just as bad and as good as you are out in the pew.

My committee not long ago had a letter from another church pastor asking what method we used to secure such a good attendance in our chorus choir. Did we depend on entertainment to keep them interested? Did we make a rule that unless they came to rehearsal they could not sing on Sunday? Did we call them each week or send them a notice reminding them that Friday night was choir practice? We answered that we have no rules. They simply come, unless they are ill or out of the city. We entertain them, to be sure, with a party or a supper now and then, but always as a surprise and not as an incentive to get them out. I make it a rule when going to a new choir to make a little talk before we start our first rehearsal together. I tell them that the choir is their choir, in their church. It is not my choir. I am only employed to help them and direct their efforts, as every sort of an organization must have a head. I explain that my intense desire is to furnish the best music for the work of the church that is possible with the knowledge and training I myself have and through their cooperation. I ask them to feel that the only reason they are in the choir is that they are vitally interested in the spiritual power of the church in the community and are willing to contribute what they have to make it attractive and a power for good in the community. If they have any other motive than that, I would prefer that they would not come. If they have a genuine interest, such as I have outlined, then there is no need of rules. They will be there regularly, both at rehearsals and Sunday services. I promise them that rehearsals will start on time at the hour and minute announced, be there thirty or two present, and that they will end as promptly. That always works. At the hour announced I find virtually every member in his place for the rehearsal. I keep my word and let them go on time. They like that. I have my work outlined for the rehearsal. The music is on the chairs. No time is wasted in deciding what we will sing. We do nothing but rehearse. All visiting is done before or after the rehearsal.—Edwin M. Steckel, in The Diapason.

Boys inclined to go wrong are not likely to be permanently benefited by the rod. Better to encourage right conduct by appealing to what is good and noble. If your watch got out of order and you took it to a jeweler, he would not get angry and break it to pieces as punishment. Carefully examining each intricate part of the machinery to find out just where the trouble was, he would soon have the defect remedied and the watch in running order again. Is not this the principle on which we should deal with the erring child? If we are wise and patient we will have a grateful boy responding readily to good influences instead of a sullen and defiant lad seeking opportunity for revenge.—J. Kelso, in "Humane Pleader."

that bishop who is also a prophet—tells of a sermon he preached twenty years ago on covetousness, which greatly pleased a multi-millionaire who happened to be in the audience. "I didn't see anything in the sermon to please this particular auditor and could not refrain from expressing some surprise at his praise. His comment was very edifying to me. It seemed that I had kept the discussion on a lofty plane of general principles; that my utterance had a noble dignity derived from the heights on which it moved; that I had not marred the aesthetic effect of a well-balanced sermonic creation by descending to commonplace, or marketplace, matters. If I have said things since then plain to the point of ugliness, it has been due to my desire to escape the paganism of putting the abstract or the aesthetic above the moral." The bishop, it may be added, calls a spade a spade in the great article above announced.

Other Writers

BISHOP McCONNELL'S article will be followed by others just as arresting by such men as: Charles A. Ellwood, Albion W. Small, Edward Alsworth Ross, Harry F. Ward, Samuel Z. Batten, Arthur E. Holt, Ross L. Finney, Alva W. Taylor, etc., etc. Every writer is a recognized authority. All agree in the conclusion that our workaday life and our public life have yet to be brought under the influence of the mind of Jesus. It is vain, they hold, to ask men to be Christians in a private corner of their lives while they accept pagan ideals and motives and methods as rules of action in business and public affairs. If these pagan rules and principles remain unrevolutionized, says Professor Albion W. Small, "the goodly fellowship of the Apostles could not operate our present industrial system and make its working just." These expressions of positive conviction are indicative of the slowly forming social conscience of the modern church.

These articles promise to be the outstanding event of religious discussion during the present season. Thoughtful leaders, lay and clerical, inside and outside the churches, will wish to follow so brilliant and creative a contribution.

A Terrible Affliction

We once visited a school for subnormal children. It was a pathetic sight. With patience and marvelous skill the teachers gradually led the unfortunate ones out of their inherited prison house. We know, however, a more sorry spectacle. It is the abnormal person—the person who has developed the sixth sense. The five senses are active but their normal functions are perverted by suspicion and prejudice. "What they say is all right, but they do not believe what they preach." To have attended certain schools; to be on speaking terms with certain men; to refuse to recite certain formulas is enough to put one beyond the hope of salvation. THE BAPTIST is now and we hope forever will be the champion of wholesome Christian development. In the normal Christian man the sixth sense has atrophied.

The Bible Vindicated

It is a dangerous thing to call into question any Bible teaching. A good woman well known for her practical observations upon various subjects asks THE BAPTIST to answer this question: "Why does the Bible say so much about 'brotherly love'? I never knew a family where there was not more or less strife and dissension among the boys. Why then does the Bible say: 'Let brotherly love continue'?" My sister, the Bible is a most practical book. If it did not so often define the kind of love that is to be practiced we might expect too much of our Christian brethren. When it says "brotherly love" it reminds us of the love between brothers and makes ample provision for a reasonable amount of unpleasantness in the household of faith. Because there is some strife and dissension in a family does not mean that the boys hate each other except by spells. The Bible is right. Brotherly love does continue.

Encouragement for the New Editor

"I read THE BAPTIST every day
Our page grows better every way
Because I like the stories here.
I can't wait till they appear
And so I wrote this little verse
To hope THE BAPTIST won't grow worse."
—E. A. Armstrong, Springfield, Mass.,
11 years old.

If the paper were not already bad our little friend would have had no fear of its becoming worse.

Revivals

THE BAPTIST has from the first featured the news of awakenings in our churches. We hear a great deal of discussion about the relative merits of tabernacle campaigns, local church effort and pastoral or professional evangelism. Some folks contend that much of our evangelistic effort is too mechanical. Some say that real revivals come down and cannot be worked up. We cannot decide the case. Our observation, however, is that some individuals become worked up before any real revival comes down. Suppose each of us should make it our first business to win some one to Christ this coming year. THE BAPTIST could not begin to tell the stories of the quickened churches.

Something Wrong Somewhere

We received the announcement of certain meetings to be held in the "Oasis of Peoria" in the "Desert of Illinois." THE BAPTIST is in the dark. It looks as if something were wrong somewhere.

Fresh from the Field

The First Church, South Bend, Ind., one of the largest church buildings in that city, was destroyed by fire, Nov. 20. It is reported that the loss is about $50,000.

The First Church, Olean, N. Y., is about to complete a new Bible school building at a cost of $60,000. The services of dedication will begin Dec. 10. Rev. A. F. Houser is pastor.

Dr. John Clifford of London died suddenly on Nov. 20. He was attending a meeting in the council chamber of the Baptist Union. He was eighty-seven years old and was one of the outstanding figures in the Baptist world. We will speak of his life and work at greater length later.

On Nov. 25 a committee of 100 citizens of Louisville, Ky., did honor to Dr. Edgar Y. Mullins. At the dinner there were 700 present. Prof. David G. Lyon of Harvard University gave the lectures on the George W. Norton Foundation at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. These lectures were on the Holy Land and illustrated by stereopticon.

Rev. P. H. McDowell, of the First Church, Glens Falls, N. Y., writes: "One of the great days of my little life was Sunday, Nov. 18. In order to carry on the work of the church and provide for improvements, the church asked for pledges to the amount of $308 per week and we went over the top with $6 per Sunday to the good. Our forward movement moves."

Dr. Thomas Burgess, secretary of the foreign-born division of the national council of the Episcopal Church, vouches for the story that Russian Orthodox church circles throughout the United States are deeply stirred over the arrival of the "Red" Archbishop John Kedrovsky. He comes fresh from his consecration at Moscow as archbishop of the "Living Church," the religious element in Russia that follows the soviet regime. In the matter of Russian ecclesiology as well as Russian politics we must leave the interpretation to those who know more than we do.

Royal H. Fisher of Yokohama writes: "It may be of interest to our loyal supporters at home to know that Mary L. Colby school for girls and the Mabie Memorial school for boys in Yokohama are carrying on. Fortunately the institution for young women in Kanagawa, a suburb of Yokohama was untouched by fire, suffering only from the earthquake. Workmen have gotten these buildings into safe condition. Both schools are now running. The young women meet in the morning—300 of them and 350 out of 550 of the young men meet in the afternoon. One of the teachers has offered to teach, if necessary, for two years without salary in order that the work may go forward."

The First Church, Youngstown, Ohio, does not propose to abandon the downtown district. It has secured a new lot and in a ten days' campaign secured pledges for over $170,000.

Pittsburgh Baptists and the denomination at large has suffered a real loss in the death of Mr. E. R. Cornell of the First Church. Mr. Cornell was most active in behalf of THE BAPTIST, having sent in large lists of subscribers from that section of the country.

Dr. James Kramer of Denver recently closed his fourth meeting in Jacksonville, Fla., with the South Side Baptist Church where 1200 gathered nightly and where there were 214 additions. He is now with the Main Street Church in Jacksonville. On a recent Sunday there were seventy-two conversions and hundreds turned away from the services.

Former Governor Harding of Iowa estimates that there are more than 2,000,000 laws and ordinances in effect in the United States. He believes that lawmaking is a national habit and a bad one at that. It is said that a Michigan town has recently passed an ordinance prohibiting men and women from looking into each other's eyes when dancing in public. Illinois declares that the language in use here is not the English but the American language and must be so termed. They tell us that ignorance of the law is no excuse, but how are we to comprehend and remember all of these two million laws? If taken seriously, we believe there is a splendid opportunity to promote a correspondence course in memory improvement.

George B. Huntington, treasurer of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and Alice M. Hudson, treasurer of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, make the following statement: "Our attention has been called to the fact that questions are being asked as to whether the foreign mission societies carried insurance on the properties used in their mission work in Japan and if so whether losses would be paid by the insurance companies. The facts are as follows: Acting under instructions from the boards of the two societies, the mission treasurer in Japan had placed insurance amounting to more than $650,000 upon thirty-six mission buildings in Tokyo, Yokohama and other leading centers of our missionary work in Japan. All of the more important and costly buildings were fully insured against loss by fire. It has never been a general practice in Japan or elsewhere to carry additional insurance against loss by earthquake. Our insurance policies, therefore, like the great majority of policies issued on Japan property, did not cover earthquake damage. The newspapers at one time stated that Japanese companies would pay losses occasioned by fire following the earthquake, but this report has not been confirmed and advices reaching us from our missionaries indicate that no insurance is likely to be realized upon our buildings destroyed or damaged in the earthquake and fire which succeeded it."

On the Mong Lem field, Rev. William Young and his associates have baptized during the past eighteen months, 3,550 persons.
